This is the Cynosure's twenty-ninth birthday.

We are glad to announce that Major McKinley attended the First M. E. church at Canton last Sabbath. William J. Bryan attended the Immanuel Presbyterian church in Milwaukee.

It has been said that what makes our reform specially difficult is that it requires such constant repetition of the same argument. But prohibition and other reforms require as much and even more repetition, for they combat evils that are not as varied and complex as is the secret society evil.

The Cynosure has during twenty-eight years faithfully declared its testimony on the vital anti-secret issue. The paper is no longer an experiment. The fact that it has been enabled for so many years without interruption to proclaim Christ's truth is evidence that God is hearing the prayers of these witnesses and blessing their testimony.

The anti-secret reformer more than any other needs to cultivate the habit of prayer. It is praying reformers that hold out to the end and overcome all discouragements. How many Cynosure readers at the noon hour think to lift their hearts to God in prayer? Their number will determine the power and efficiency of the movement. Brethren, pray for us."

Every evil imperiling our country is entrenched behind our national Constitution. A great political platform once based its opposition to Sabbath

PRESIDENT J. H. FAIRCHILD.

"The tendency to organize in secret bodies, political, social, religious and literary, seems to indicate distrust of the ordinary institutions of society, and will surely generate the distrust from which it seems to spring. The very idea of a secret combination implies a barbarous age, or a state of social anarchy in which such arrangments are necessary for safety. There is no place for it in a Christian civilization." This is the strong testimony on the lodge question of the late Pres. J. H. Fairchild of Oberlin College, whose picture is given above. We heard him once in his classroom, and never heard a teacher enthuse his students during a recitation as Prof. Fairchild did. The hour seemed all to short. He was a natural born teacher and a remarkable theologian.

Pres. Fairchild was born in Stockbridge, Mass., Nov. 25, 1817, but in his infancy his parents removed to Brownhelm, Ohio. He was one of the first graduates of Oberlin College, with which institution he was all his life identified either as student or professor. This connection was only one year interrupted by a year of foreign travel. In 1866 he was called to the presidency of Oberlin on President Finney's resignation, and remained president until 1890. How many of our readers during the past week have made an earnest effort to extend the circulation of this paper? You have neighbors who need to be enlightened on the anti-secret question. The lodges live by keeping the uninitiated in the dark in reference to the subject. The lodge dies wherever its secrets are exposed. Can you not help us then to turn on the light that will destroy these works of darkness?

In our experience we have several times suffered our subscription to a valuable paper to become delinquent. But every time we felt guilty, and the thought of it was humiliating. The pleasure and satisfaction of settling the account and paying in advance was worth more than all the cost. If any who read this are delinquent subscribers, please remember that you can promote your own happiness and ours by remitting as soon as possible.

Rev. J. P. Stoddard in his article on another page shows a fearful state of corruption in the New England churches. When the spirit of reform is stifled and suppressed by church boards and syndicates, it is about time for revolution. Thus to lord it over God's heritage and prevent the people from hearing the truth, is about the greatest wrong that can be inflicted upon the cause of Christ. It was such suppression of truth that greatly strengthened and prolonged the curse of American slavery.

Law to be operative must have either a moral or physical force behind it. It must have either a bayonet or the idea of a God; either a Gatling gun or a Bible; either a Sabbath-school or a police force; and the better the former does its work, the less will the latter be needed.

Moral forces in preserving order are far superior to the physical. One city missionary is worth forty policemen. If the Salvation Army were disbanded in Chicago, it would require hundreds of policemen to take their place.

Every evil imperiling our country is entrenched behind our national Constitution. A great political platform once based its opposition to Sabbath and Prohibition legislation upon the ninth and tenth amendments of the Constitution of the United States. It has been claimed that the Anti-masonic movement is likewise unconstitutional, because Freemasonry is a religion; and the first amendment forbids Congress from making any law prohibiting the free exercise of religion, without specifying what kind of religion. As the Constitution now stands it forbids any prohibition of the free exercise of Freemasonry.

His life has not been eventful, but it has been a busy and exceedingly useful and influential one.

A SOUND OF ARMS.

BY GEO. W. CLARK.

O'er the earth the day is dawning—
Lovely beams the rising star;
Freemen greet the glorious morning—
Hail the day-spring from afar.

Lodgemen now are seized with trembling,
While they madly urge the war?
Dark and serried hosts assembling,
Blindly drag their bloody car.

'Tis their last, their fatal hour—
For their secret bands shall cease;
Shall sink and die their waning power;
Soon shall reign the King of peace.

Ho! ye royal hosts of Freemen,
Strong of heart and truly brave;
See your brethren, blinded, kneeling;
Haste on eager wing to save.

Grasp the bolts of moral thunder,
Hurl them forth along the sky;
Break their oath-bound clans asunder—
Boldly do or bravely die.

DANGEROUS MONOPOLY IN THE CHURCH.

BY REV. J. P. STODDARD.

The "drift" in New England churchology is strongly toward monopoly. The Congregationalists, Baptists and other nominally independent local churches are feeling the "gloved hand" if not the "iron grasp" of Episcopacy on their simple polity. Affiliation with some clerical ring or a "pull" on some dignitary has come to be almost as essential in securing a position in church work as it is to the "bread winner" who seeks employment in any mercantile, manufacturing or commercial establishment.

Headquarters being chosen and the churches listed, every outpost is picketed so that contemplated change may be promptly reported, Where permanent or incidental vacancies are likely to occur all particulars are noted with care. Available men are catalogued for emergencies or settled pastorates who know the "Shibboleth" of their tribe. Having adjusted and oiled every joint, the machine is set in motion and guided by a skillful hand. It silently but surely does its work. The servant in word and the pulpit in waiting coalesce as smoothly as the transit of Venus.

The stated supply, the settled pastor and the approved evangelist pay the stipulated percentage into the treasury, enabling the "mills of the gods" to grind on, nourished by the toll from each grist put into the syndicate's hopper. To secure positions of usefulness for worthy men, and help over hard places, and to protect overcredulous churches from imposition, are the avowed objects of such associations, and their utility when properly used is not questioned.

The impelling motive for the formation of these combines is not wholly or even in large part a selfish one, but it creates a condition susceptible of great abuse. It is an exceedingly delicate and important trust which may be so administered as to discount really worthy men and impose undesirable teachers upon the churches. When so administered it becomes a snare and a delusion, deserving neither the approval or support of God's people.

Admitting all possible benefits it must be conceded that the tendency is to subserviency and the destruction of individuality on the one hand, and a species of imperialism on the other. Ministers are men, and any device that promises a position on grounds other than meritorious effort, detracts from a wholesome stimulant to do their level best; and the exercise of authority is not without temptations to use partiality, and avoid giving offense by bestowing favors where some return may reasonably be anticipated. "Help me and I will help you" is a peril from which not all escape who approve the command, "Do good, hoping for nothing again."

The church, too, in a degree loses her sense of responsibility when acting through a body foreign to her own membership, and finds an excuse for superficial work in choosing a shepherd to guide and instruct the flock.

Another danger is, that the truth will be hampered, and men will be deterred, through fear of those upon whom they feel a sense of dependence, from preaching the preaching that the Master bids them. This is especially true with respect to rebuking popular sins, or advocating any cause that is seriously unpopular. The freedom of both pulpit and pew suffer from unmerited discrimination often where they are unwilling to take upon themselves a yoke which neither Edwards, Colver, Finney, Gordon or any of the renowned fathers in the church were able to bear.

Conscience must be stifled and the Holy Spirit restrained to secure or retain the coveted goodwill of men whose kind offices they desire. In this way the door of access to the people is closed against reforms and reformers, until God's own people are gone into captivity for want of knowledge. I am confident that a large majority of the evangelical churches in New England to-day would willingly admit a temperate and fair discussion of the lodge question into their pulpits were it not for the ecclesiastical syndicates by which they are so largely controlled.

A case or two will illustrate the working of this vigilance committee. Spending a Sabbath with friends in a rural district, I accepted an invitation to preach. After entering the church when the services were concluded, I was informed that the pulpit would be vacant for a time, and asked if my services could be secured. Giving an affirmative answer, the matter was referred to the committee on supply, who, applying at headquarters for advice, received a reply to the effect that there were no charges against my moral character, but as I was not in regular pastoral work but giving my time to exposing and discussing secret societies, to admit me into their pulpit would likely impair their standing with sister churches, offering at the same time to furnish a man to whom no exceptions could be taken.

At another point I visited an institution where fifty young men were receiving special training for Y. M. C. A. secretary work. Those whom I met were favorable to the discussion, but when it came to a knowledge of the "powers that be," it was said your constituency will withdraw patronage and support if you admit questions for discussion which are not entertained in the churches upon whom you depend for your very existence. And so the matter was summarily dropped and the young men failed to receive information desired by both instructors and pupils.

The above are specimen bricks from the fortress in process of erection about the freedom of Christ's bride, and they reveal something of the artful ways employed by well-intentioned men to hedge the way of reform in the interest of churchology and a delusive hope of peace and good will among men. But the stream is rising and destined to shake the foundations of their false hope, and sweep away every barrier to the proclamation of a full and free Gospel. Let us hasten the day by our prayers and efforts.

THE SECRET OF POWER.

"Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord of hosts."—Zech. 4:6.

"The words that I speak unto you they are spirit and they are life."—John 6:63.

The Christian life is a constant rebuke to those who are indifferent and opposed to the truth as it is in Jesus. As the "Word is quick (living) and powerful," so to incarnate the Word is to make its power felt. But it must be the Word, "the Bible, and the Bible alone." Christ's life, the Word made flesh, was an exemplary life, a living demonstration of the Word of God, and all that it is and means to us with regard to our present life. This life the humble believer may possess, and without it he is no more than an abject slave of Satan, held captive and controlled by him at his will.

There are many who are aware that secret societies are an evil, and who are really anxious to do all in their power to banish them. They step boldly out armored with a conviction of the truth that the lodge system is a menace to the commonwealth and opposed to the law of Christ. They pray earnestly that God will bless them in their work of rescuing souls from the snare into which they have fallen. They sacrifice much for the cause. Their preaching is earnest and their logic sound. Yet, alas, their powerful arguments seem to the lodgemen as "sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal." They are often driven away from the Gospel which they so much need.

We often wonder how it is that we can talk and write truth, and argue and convince people that they are wrong, and even get them to admit it, but still they are not converted. Let us see if we can find the stand on which we can come in touch with the divine, where we can be the humble instruments in His hands of giving a saving Gospel to those who are perishing around us. That there is such a way we may rest assured. If we "follow in Christ's steps, who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth," then we not feel assured that we shall then meet with divine approval, and be the means of reforming others? He has promised "I will be with you even unto the end of the world." And, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth," and this is the power that converts.

Let us fully submit ourselves to God who always rewards with his divine presence and power. Faith is based on the promises of God. What we want is the faith that will prompt us to step into his way although it may be difficult. Let us "fight the good fight of faith."

BLEEDING KANSAS.

BY S. C. HART.

LANE'S ARMY BEFORE LECOMPTON—AWFUL REIGN OF TERROR AT LEAVENWORTH.

After Harvey had given up the co-operation of Lane's forces and withdrawn from behind Lecompton, and was well on his way to Lawrence; and after the Lecompton militia had disbanded, and the prisoners were released; and after Woodson, Donaldson, Jones & Co. had ceased repenting, thinking they had escaped a calamity, then Lane appeared on the heights overlooking Lecompton, about four o'clock, Sept. 5, 1856, and his cannon, the "Abbott Howitzer" or Old Sacramento," was aimed at the headquarters of the "bogus" officials.

At his approach there was a lively fleeing of citizens across the river. What disbanded militia there was in town made no sign of defense. Messengers were sent in hot haste, by Woodson, to the camp of Col. Cooke for United States troops to protect the town against the threatening enemy. Lane sent Mr. Branscomb and Capt. Cline to town under a flag of truce and demanded the unconditional surrender of the prisoners confined there.

Being informed of the release of the prisoners, they returned to Lane with that information. Just then Col. Cooke made his appearance, and leaving his troops in town went over to Lane's camp. He told Lane he had made a mistake in coming there, as the militia was disbanded and the prisoners released. After an official parley, the men arrested after the battle of Franklin and other times, and the committee from Lawrence arrested as spies, went over to the camp of Lane and returned with them to Lawrence. These did not include the prisoners in the camp of the United States troops held for treason, etc., one of whom was John Brown Jr., who by exposure and chagrin became subject to spells of insanity.

When Harvey returned to Lawrence from his armed demonstration before Lecompton, he found the town full of refugees fled from Leavenworth, where, under the encouragement of Gov. Woodson's attitude, a fresh and greatly intensified reign of terror had been inaugurated. The Free State men had from the start been hopelessly in the minority on the north side of the river. The Free State towns of Topeka and Lawrence being on the south side, and having more than they could do at times to protect themselves, could furnish no assistance to their suffering brethren on the north side. The refugees whom Harvey found on his return from Lecompton fled from such scenes as the following:

On Aug. 19th a Missouri "border ruffian" named Fuget bet six dollars against a pair of boots that in less than two hours he would bring in the scalp of an Abolitionist. Starting out on his inhuman errand he met an inoffensive German just from Illinois by the name of Hoppe, who was returning from Lawrence whence he had taken his wife to see her sister, the wife of a Unitarian minister there. Fuget shot Hoppe and took his scalp and his conveyance, leaving the dead body by the roadside. Returning to Leavenworth he displayed the reeking scalp and was applauded by Emory of the "Regulators," at which a German standing by expressed horror at the spectacle and the deed, when he was instantly shot dead too, but not scalped. Fuget got his boots, put them on, wrapped the scalp in a Pro-slavery newspaper (a very befitting place) and fled to Missouri. He was afterward arrested, tried and acquitted.

The Pro-slavery ruffians had sworn that no Free State man could travel over the road between Lawrence and Leavenworth which was guarded by "Law and Order" men under Miller. A few days after, the young wife, in company with the Unitarian minister and others, went back to Leavenworth in search of her husband, and were arrested on the road by the "Law and Order" gang. The grief-stricken wife succeeded in getting passage down the river from the scene of her husband's cruel murder and scalping.

Emory was a United States mail contractor, and in the name of "Law and Order" took his gang and entered the houses and stores of Free State people, driving them out into the streets without regard to age, sex or condition; arresting them, robbing them and confiscating their property and killing men who resisted.

The first few days of September, 1856, one hundred and fifty were torn away from their homes, driven into boats and sent down the river without provisions and landed at St. Louis. From such scenes all who could, fled to Fort Leavenworth, three miles away, for protection, and to Lawrence, thirty five or forty miles distant, dodging the "Law and Order" guards by traveling nights. Finally Gen. Richardson lost confidence in his troops, and in the heat of the confusion and dispute he resigned his command.

Harvey lay at Lecompton till noon; and Lane not yet appearing, thinking something unusual must have happened at Lawrence, he broke camp and started back. At the disappearance of Harvey the militia was glad of an excuse to disband, and most of them went to their homes in different parts of the Territory. After the Missouri army had been driven out by Lane, Richardson evidently lost his bravery, as did all the rest of the Pro-slavery element in and about Lecompton.

OUR CONSTITUTION FORMULATED BY FREEMASONS.

That the Constitution of the United States was framed by Freemasons will be news to most of our readers. Yet this claim is made by the editor of the American Tyler. Strange to say, the editor, a prominent Freemason of Detroit, is a strong advocate of the religious amendment. One of his Masonic contributors took him to task for advocating this amendment, which he claims every true Mason should oppose. But the following is the letter and the editor's reply taken from ths Tyler of Aug. 8th:

EDITOR TYLER:—In your issue of July 18th, you have an article under the title "The Christian Amendment," in which your comment plainly shows you to be in favor of the Morse bill which provides for a recognition of God in the Constitution of the United States, and of Jesus Christ as the Son of God and ruler of nations. The best boast of all true Americans is that we enjoy a religious liberty which this bill manifestly attacks. Every true Christian, as every true Mason, is in duty bound, the more for that reason, to defend the religious liberty which the Master claimed and taught. Consider the Golden Rule and follow it. Conceive yourself a Mohammedan, a Buddhist or a Jew, and apply the Master's rule to yourself in connection with this alleged "amendment."

Whoever strikes a blow at religious liberty is justly charged with having, thereby, inscribed his name upon the scroll of infamy, as surely as his name who upholds it is justly on the scroll of fame. Else were religious liberty unfit to be, and God's best justice were unjust. As the Tyler it is your office to guard the gates of the Temple against invasion. Make eager haste to correct yourself, publicly, for having been off guard and let your enemies inside the outer gates. I am, most truly,

THE MASTER.

To this the Tyler replies:

"What the Tyler previously said on this question was entirely from a Masonic standpoint, and we deny in toto that we have been false to our trust as a guardian of the gates of the Temple. No true Freemason can be false to his God, the God as revealed in the Great Light of Freemasonry. Then he must be recognized first in all things. To state the fact is to prove it.

"Freemasons formulated the Constitution of this Republic on the foundation of Freemasonry, which inculcates charity to all mankind—a charity without stint, a brotherhood without boundaries, religion without sectarianism, patriotism without party, a union not of hands only, but of hearts; a union not limited to persons, but embracing States and nations, and all this accompanied by the profoundest recognition of man's dependence upon Him whose all-seeing eye is the emblem of Masonry, and in the strong grip of the paw of the 'Lion of the Tribe of Judah' is the hope of every Mason.

"Take God out of Masonry in the United States and the Masonry of the world would smite it with a stroke of death, as it has done that of infidel France. Is the Mason's religious liberty interferred with because God and Jesus Christ—the I Am that I Am and the All in All—is recognized as supreme in the constitution of Freemasonry?

"Reasoning from analogy, then, what has the putting of God into the Constitution of the United States to do with a man's religious liberty? Why, bless you, he would still have a right under our laws and government, as he has now, to worship Mary or Joseph, or a piece of bread, or a stick of wood, a dead or a historical Christ, if he wishes to do so. On the other hand, now that the question has been raised, it is of vital importance to this people as a nation that God hath the first place in their Constitution. He is still supreme, and he has declared that if we forget him we shall be turned into hell with all the other nations that have denied his authority.

"Our fathers came here to worship God, not to deny him. They died that we might have religious liberty, and not to found a nation of Mohammedans, Buddhists or Jews. What is religious liberty? To the Tyler it means vastly more than the vague, selfish and licentious conception of it entertained by the modern skeptic. Pilate is still calling, 'What is truth?' Christ came to give religious liberty (the man whom Christ makes free is free indeed) and also to call the nations to a just recognition of the claims of God, his Father, upon them. And they cried, 'Give us Barabbas'—now Barabbas was a robber.

"It was the scribes and Pharisees then, as now, that struck as they thought a fatal blow at the enemy of religious liberty, and their names have been entered on the scroll of infamy, and Him whom they would destroy had the government of the nations placed upon his shoulders, and John, the patron saint of Freemasonry, saw the 'kings of the earth, and the princes, and the chief captains, and the rich, and the strong, and every bondman and freeman, hiding themselves in the caves and in the rocks of the mountains; and they say to the mountains and the rocks, fall on us and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of their wrath is come, and who is able to stand.'

"Why should our critic ask us to 'consider the Golden Rule' and at the same time to deny its author? Why take the 'Golden Rule' and leave out of consideration all the other truths uttered by the Master, whose coming to earth was made vocal by the song of 'Glory to God on high, peace on earth, good will to men.' No, this nation is built upon the idea of a supreme ruler, beginning and ending in the Great Architect of the universe, and the time has come when this people, who have been so signally blessed by him, should no longer blush to speak his name and to acknowledge him as the founder, ruler and preserver of this nation.

"There are lords many and masters many, but to the anonymous writer who signs himself as 'The Master,' the Tyler boldly declares it has no master but one, whom it acknowledges to be 'the Lord of lords and King of kings.'"

MORGAN'S PRESS.

THE MOST FAMOUS BOOK OF WESTERN NEW YORK.

The story of its destruction, nearly half a century ago—Something about the later fortunes of various people who were associated with the great "exposer" of Masonic secrets.

In December, 1847, Attica was visited by a fire that swept the entire business portion of Market street; eleven stores, besides a large flouring mill, built in 1809. It was about three hours burning itself out (we had no fire companies or water works then) and was a good example of the regulation bonfire fifty years ago, in a wooden town; it would have served as a good object lesson for any chance reader of the French surgeon Larry's description of the burning of Moscow.

In this fire was destroyed the press on which was printed William Morgan's purported exposure of the secrets and ritual of Freemasonry.

In 1834, David Scott, an Attica business man experimenting in politics, became ambitious to add a newspaper to his other irons in the fire, and, to that end, purchased of David C. Miller, the proprietor of the Batavia Republican Advocate, a quantity of printing material, including that press. Mr. Scott's paper was christened the Attica Republican; it subsequently changed hands as well as name, once or twice, and finally became a Whig paper under the title of the Attica Democrat, published by E. A. Cooley, and for several years was issued from quarters in the third story of one of the buildings referred to. A new-fashioned iron "Hoe" press had been added, and had displaced the Morgan press, which, however, was set up and kept in working order in an ante-room of the main office.

In the Hard Cider campaign of 1840, I, a boy not yet thirteen years old, and an enthusiastic Whig, became possessed with the idea of serving my country and gaining distinction by learning the printer's trade, and was accorded the privilege of doing so in Mr. Cooley's office—without pay. I pursued my whim long enough to become quite a passable compositor, and I likewise picked up considerable concerning other branches of the art. The old Morgan press was frequently brought into service when "forms" were on the other press, and I was often permitted to assist in working it.

About 1842, the printing office was removed to quarters across the street, but from want of room the old press was left in the deserted office, and there it remained until destroyed in the fire. Let me briefly describe the queer old relic. It was built of wood, being of the so-called "Ramage" pattern, and did not contain iron enough to iron a one-horse lumber wagon. In its general appearance and details it very much resembled the press of Benjamin Franklin in the patent office at Washington, and it was doubtless built as far back as the Revolution.

It bore no tablet to indicate its place of manufacture, but I am inclined to believe it was of English make, and substantially a modification of the pattern invented, or rather improved, by Willem Jansen Blaew, a noted printer of Amsterdam, who died early in the seventeenth century; the original press from which he copied was likewise a Dutch invention of two centuries before. No great invention ever had so slow a growth as the printing press; it stood almost at a standstill for nearly 400 years. Mark the very slight difference between Dr. Franklin's old press and that invented by Lawrence Coster, of Haerlem, in 1430. The great power presses of the present day, with their wonderful mechanism and enormous capacity, as well as the ordinary iron hand presses in common use, are all the offspring of the inventive genius of the ninteenth century.—R. H. Farnham, in Buffalo Illustrated Express.

FEARFUL COMMENTARY.

It is no favorable index of the purity of our politics that such a Masonic character will keep coming to the front, of which the Boston Woman's Voice aptly remarks:

"Breckenridge, the unsavory, is again at the fore, leading the sound money Democrats of Kentucky, at their State convention, made up, according to press reports, of 'the best and most influential citizens,' who received him 'with a whirlwind of enthusiasm.' Which was entirely false as regards the first part, for the best citizens—granting women are citizens—stayed at home. If this class had the ballot, whatever their politics, they would soon force that brazen incarnation of all vileness to at least take a back seat. Yet this man whose name can neither be written or spoken without a sense of loathing, virtuously alluded to the St. Louis convention as a 'cess-pool into which he refused to walk.' We can only say that if he had walked into it, the worse for the cess-pool. Hercules himself couldn't have cleansed it afterwards."

Any who do not use their Cynosures after reading, can do excellent missionary work by mailing them, at the rate of two for one cent, to Beacon Light Mission, 355 Pennsylvania Ave., Washington, D. C., where the papers will be used to the very best advantage to the cause.

ANTI-SECRET STATE CONVENTION AT PORTLAND, OREGON.

ROUSING ADDRESSES, STRONG RESOLUTIONS AND TESTIMONIES ALMOST LEAD TO THE BREAKING OUT OF A REVIVAL

PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 29, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The convention was held in the old Congregational church, Portland, Oregon, Aug. 27, 1896, beginning at 9 A. M Rev. H. F. Wallace, D. D., presided. Rev. B. A. Bonewell conducted the devotional exercises. Dr. Wallace made a good opening address, presenting the nature of our work. He said in part:

"We represent a very unpopular reform. It is about as much as a man's position is worth to oppose the secret orders. But, how can a Christian or Christian minister unite with such an institution?" He was followed by the secretary, who submitted his annual report, which was approved. (See report published elsewhere in the Cynosure.)

The experience meeting for those who have left the lodges was led by Rev. L. F. Clark. He had been a member of three, A. O. U. W., Woodmen and Good Templars. Saw nothing in them to commend them to the intelligence and piety of a Christian, and is glad he is free from them. Revs. Reed and Anderson were not present. Bishop Dillon presented the subject of "The Scriptures and Secret Societies." This was a clear arraignment of the orders by the Word of God. The closing prayer was by Rev. Scott of Salem.

The devotional exercises at 2 P M. were led by Rev. Walter Reynolds of Salem. "Secret Societies, Benevolent or Selfish," was ably handled by Rev. T. Thomas of the M. E. church South. He showed them to be organized selfishness. We hope to get his paper for publication.

For forty-five minutes your agent "Reviewed Freemasonry," and will furnish this for publication. The "Insurance Feature of Secret Societies" was very ably handled by Rev. G. E. Henderson of Oakville, Oregon. He showed that the claims of these societies were fabulous, and though they may carry out their promises for a time, yet as they grow older they are bound to fail in keeping faith with the members. Bishop Dillon treated the same subject for a few minutes, arguing against all insurance. He calls it a guardianship for individuals incapable of conducting their own business. Men ought to be able to manage their own concerns to better advantage than anyone else.

Bishop Dillon spoke at length on the lodge, Freemasonry in particular. It was—

1. Devoid of all true religion.
2. Guilty of iniquity forbidden by the Bible, and
3. Professes to save men.

By the time he concluded this address, there were very many in the audience who could not remain absent from the evening session. Rev. G. E. Henderson closed the afternoon session with prayer.

At 7:30 Rev. E. Scott conducted the devotions, and in addition to singing and prayer, led a praise and testimony service for a few minutes. The committee on resolutions presented some strong resolutions which were adopted unanimously. The committee on nominations reported, and in adopting their report the following officers were elected for the ensuing year.

President, Rev. W. M. Howie, Seattle.

Vice President, Rev. C. E. McReynolds, Seattle.

Secretary and agent, P. B. Williams, Portland, Ore.

Treasurer, Rev. M. L. Larsen, Seattle.

Seattle was chosen as the place for holding the next convention, the time to be left with the officers of the Association.

The "Best Method of Opposing Great Evils" was handled by P. B. Williams, in the absence of Rev. G. E. Hawes. Be plain, not evasive. Be thorough, not slight in their treatment. We can never succeed by appearing as if there is not much wrong. Arouse the mind to think and the heart to feel on the subject of the great evil. Then Bishop Dillon delivered the address of the day. It was a masterly presentation of the evils of the secret lodge system, and no mistake. Every one could understand it. The Bishop took the position that the ministry and churches are largely to blame for the state of affairs as they exist to-day.

Quite a good impression was made. A member said to me, this kind of talk and preaching if kept up would produce a great revival in Portland. Rev. George Newton, superintendent of the Adelphi Mission, where the convention was held, took a part in the discussion against the lodge. He has been a Freemason, but could not endure it as a Christian.

A dear good brother who has been a Mason thirty years, an Odd-fellow twenty years, and a member of two or more of the fraternal insurance societies, came into the convention, listened with deep interest, spoke twice with great candor, manifested that he was at least on the edge of decision against them. He took a number of Lodge Lamps, tracts, etc., and signed for the Cynosure a year. And I am confident that he is greatly spoiled for such worldly associations. Dr. Wallace delivered a very appropriate closing address, after which we gave him a rousing vote of thanks for the able manner in which he presided over us. Bishop Dillon pronounced the benediction. Thus closed the very best convention we have ever held on the coast.

P. B. WILLIAMS.

ANNUAL REPORT OF

SECRETARY P. B WILLIAMS.

The year has been one of toil, anxiety and a measure of success. Immediately after the convention a year ago, I went to California and commenced arrangements for a convention in Oakland. I spent one month in Humboldt county, and a month and a half in and around San Francisco and Oakland, holding the convention in the Asbury M. E. church South, on Dec. 16, 17.

The place of meeting was central, and on this account and the fact that it was most thoroughly advertised there should have been a large audience. But there was not a large attendence; however, there was a deep interest manifested. The daily papers had special reporters present, who gave to the public a very fair account of the proceedings. The convention was not a failure by any means.

As soon as the convention closed I went to Los Angeles, and began at once to arrange for a convention there. The time was fixed Jan. 16th for the meeting. In the meantime I lectured at the following points: Alosta, Ontario, Santa Monica and Whittier outside the city, and First U. P. church, Free Methodist, Swedish Lutheran and Reformed Presbyterian church in the city. This was an excellent means of getting the matter before the people, and had it not been for the immense rain on the 16th we would have had a full house. It had not rained a drop for three months until the night of the 15th.

It poured down, raining out most completely every important meeting in the city save ours. We went on and held the convention. Seventeen ministers were present, and the program was carried out faithfully. The Los Angeles dailies had their reporters on hand, and gave very excellent reports of the addresses. To my surprise, when I returned to San Francisco (enroute for home) I found that the Oakland and San Francisco papers had copied reports from the Los Angeles dailies, even to the resolutions adopted, giving a wide circulation to our work.

About two months later a prominent minister of Los Angeles undertook to counteract the influence of our convention, and preached a discourse on the "Freemasonry of the New Testament." Among other things he said, "Christ was not only a Freemason but a Worshipful Master of a Masonic lodge. He was initiated when John baptized him at the river Jordan; then the Holy Spirit was his guide, Satan his prompter, and up in the wilderness he took the other two degrees; after which angels ministered unto him. On the Mount of Transfiguration Christ held a Grand Lodge and was visited by two Past Grand Masters: Moses, an Egyptian Mason, and Elijah, a Persian Mason." These quotations are sufficient to show us the character of the effort. It makes me anxious to hold another convention there, which I hope to do in the near future.

My work from January 20th to April 23d was in Oregon. On April 23d I started East to attend the General Convention in Chicago, having been elected by your convention in Sept. I spoke forty-three times while East; in Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio and Missouri. I had excellent congregations, and good interest. The General Convention, May 13, 14, was a success. Rev. Samuel Swarts, D. D., of the M. E. church, was elected president for the year, and Rev. W. T. Campbell, D. D., of the United Presbyterian church, vice president. All the other officers, with the Board of Directors, were re-elected. The National Christian Association with its auxillaries is a fixture in this land. Since the General Convention I have put in my time in Oregon. I have been busy all the time in one way and another, during the year.

I have spoken as follows during the year.

Anti-secrecy addresses, 159.

Addresses on other subjects, 205; in all 364.

Number of Cynosure subscription taken, 340.

Receipts for Cynosure taken, $145 90.

Collections taken during year, $457.90; total $603 80.

Expenses during the year, $651 24.

Expenses above income, $47.44.

The coming year should be one of still greater achievements for the Master on these lines of moral reform. Respectfully submitted,

P. B. WILLIAMS.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM OUR PACIFIC COAST AGENT.

SAVING MEN FROM THE LODGE.

PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 25, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—From Plainview I went to Eugene and was met by Rev. Robert Miller, pastor of Lane circuit. On the train from Plainview I met Dr. Charles and wife, who formerly resided at Philomath, Ore. Mrs. C. asked me how the church work was going now, adding, "I think the secret orders are a great hindrance to the churches." Of course we were agreed as to that.

I spoke on the lodge evil at Dexter to a full house. There were a few lodgemen present. They neither replied nor asked questions. The large majority were in accord with the sentiments expressed in the address.

One year ago, while in the adjoining neighborhood, young Rev. Chandler, of the Baptist church, took the Cynosure for one year, and he informed me that he has been stirring the lodgeites since by his preaching straight against them. They have voted to have him preach for them another year. He is for Christ against the lodge. I would that we had many more such men.

The next night I spoke again on the lodge at Unity. The house was full. Some lodgemen were out. They behaved well. One lodge preacher at the close tried to defend the Odd-fellows, but succeeded very poorly, about as well as men generally do. In fact no man can defend secret societies; they cannot be defended.

A nice young man here took the Cynosure a year. He said he had thought sometimes of joining a lodge. He had never heard it discussed before from our side, and finds that the burden of proof is against the orders. The young gentleman, who is not a Christian, went so far as to offer to pay for the affidavit of the Christian minister if he would go and make oath that Christ's name is in their legal prayers. They would not accept his offer.

I think it due the public to say that the Odd-fellow preacher thrashed all day at his crop one Sabbath not more than a month ago, and to-morrow (Sabbath the 23d) he is billed to preach at the camp ground on the subject, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." I for one will not hear him, or any other such man if I know it.

At the hour of service on the camp ground a number of us went to where a man was sick. I preached a discourse and he renounced his former faith, Roman Catholic, and professed saving faith in Christ; he and his wife united with the United Brethren church and I baptized them. I spoke again at night on the camp ground to a very good audience.

On Monday I was conveyed to Fairmount by the stage driver, who, if true to his promise, will leave two secret societies, Woodmen and A. P. A's. He agreed that if I would show him any wrong in them he would abandon them. I am certain I showed him the wrong; and believing him to be an honest man, I have hopes of his coming out from the lodges.

At Fairmount I spoke on Monday night in the Cumberland Presbyterian church to a fair-sized audience. A few lodgemen were present. Though they squirmed a little, they held their jewel all right. At 3 A. M. I left Eugene for Portland to prepare for the convention. P. B. WILLIAMS.

LODGE INSURANCE A FRAUD.

NORTHWOOD, Iowa, Sept. 4, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Willmar, Minn., is a hotbed for secret societies. Consequently there is a strong pull on the Lutheran congregations for material. The young people of Rev. Estrem's congregation thought it would be a nice thing to give the subject some airing, and invited your correspondent to speak on secret orders.

On Tuesday evening, Sept. 2d, the town was thoroughly billed for an English lecture. A fair audience turned out, although many had gone to the twin cities on account of the Grand Army and Knights of Pythias encampment. For an hour and a half the orderly audience listened to true lodge doctrine. Some time was taken up discussing fraternal insurance. A few examples in addition and multiplication proved fraternal insurance to be a fraud and a swindle upon its victims.

The efforts being made on part of the A. O. U. W. to change from a level to a graded or classified insurance show that that order in many jurisdictions has commenced to stare grim death in the face. This plan is intended to postpone the closing up scene.

A young man belonging to the Modern Woodmen intended to gather laurels by demanding a part of the ritual read. Your correspondent, who has been lucky enough to get a copy of the revised ritual, satisfied the astonished interrogator, who seeing the mistake became silent as the chair he sat on. The audience noticed the effect and was of course satisfied that they had had woodcraft doctrine.

The following evening the congregation belonging to Rev. Estrem had a meeting for discussion of the same subject. The object of this meeting was to adopt a paragraph to exclude members of secret orders from membership in the congregations. Those in attendance argued that there must be total separation between church and lodge. There can be no fellowship between worshipers of the only true God and the worship of idols. May this congregation be a salt in that much lodge-ridden city. Several books from the N. C. A. were sold. O. T. LEE,

Pastor Norwegian Lutheran church.

National sin means national poison, and the unstemmed progress of national disease means eventual national death. It has and always will, and God will make no exception in behalf of the Western Continent.

CORRESPONDENCE.

STICK TO BIBLE TERMS.

LARWILL, Ind., Sept. 1, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In your issue of July 16th, I find an excellent article on page two, entitled, "The Christian and the Lodge," by Rev. J. M. Foster, but I must take exception to a few of the terms he uses. He states the following points:

1. That the church teaches a perfect standard of morals.

2. Morality has its seat in the nature and will of God.

3. These were revealed in the moral law, and this was embodied in the perfect life of Christ.

4. The perfect life of Christ is the model, and the moral law embodied in it is the rule of the Christian which the church must teach.

Now in the above lines we find morality, moral and morals which we will leave out, and then these points will read as follows:

1. That the church teaches a perfect standard of Christian principles which have their seat in the nature and will of God, that was revealed in the law of Christ, and these are embodied in the perfect life of Christ.

2. And his life is the model of his divine law embodied in it. These are the rules of Christianity, or the life of a Christian.

I wish to raise the question, from whence come the words morals and morality? I fail to find them anywhere in the Bible, the blessed Word of God. In answer to the above, I wish to say, that we have enough words to teach and to preach, without the use of those words, the principles of our Christianity. The principles of Freemasonry and other secret societies are self-righteousness, and Freemasonry has invented these words, "morals" and "morality," in order to supplant righteousness, and in its stead substitute self-righteousness, so that a man without repentance toward God and faith in our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, when he comes down to the valley and shadow of death, his lodge-blinded and deceived spirit may wing its flight to the grand lodge above. Oh, what deception! It is right in the face of the teachings of Jesus Christ. "He that entereth not by the door or gate of the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber." The church is the door, and Christ is the way, the truth, and the life.

Oh, ye people, why will ye be blinded thus when the way of life is so plain! Freemasonry has been cunning enough to manufacture such words that suit foolish Christian professors like sounding brass and tinkling cymbals. The churches, or rather the people who constitute them, are greatly to be blamed for such deception, because they do not raise the warning cry. I think the Cynosure is the organ of truth in reform. It is sounding the trumpet of the angel of the Lord. Oh, may it awaken sinners to look up and see the approaching day when the fiery indignation of the Lord will destroy all the nations that forget God. JOHN SHUH.

DOWNING THE SALOONS AT WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 2, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The Anti-saloon League opened its fall campaign against the liquor traffic with a rousing public meeting in Calvary Baptist church. Rev. C. F. Winbigler, D. D., of Chicago, who has been filling the pulpit of that church during Dr. Green's vacation, delivered the principal address, which he called "The End of the Twenty Million Dollar-Man," and which was based upon the Biblical story of Mordecai and Haman. The latter it will be remembered applied for a license to kill all the Jews, and to rob them of their wealth, for which privilege he was to pay what would be about equivalent to $20,000,000 in our money.

Dr. Winbigler said in effect that the saloon-keeper of to-day who applied for a license to sell intoxicants was the modern prototype of Haman, because his license allows him to legally rob the people of their wealth and their lives. He expressed the belief that the time would come when liquor licenses would be refused by the government, and when every saloon would be swept away by the "mighty flood of public opinion which has been gathering for years against the liquor traffic." He estimated that under present laws where $2.75 is allotted for the education of youth, $9 is allowed for making them drunkards.

Most of the organizations engaged in temperance work advocate a total abstinence as a moral reform, and such it unquestionably is; but great progress is being made in temperance by ignoring its moral reform side entirely and putting it on a plain common sense business basis, not by reform organizations, but by great business corporations, which may be called heartless, but which know the value of dollars and cents as represented by clear headed service on the part of their employes. The following editorial extract from the Washington Post gives an excellent idea of how this comparatively new and powerful ally of Christian temperance work is regarded by the secular press: "During the past ten years some of the largest railway corporations have found it necessary to adopt stringent rules for the enforcement of temperance among the men employed on trains and in other capacities where absolute fidelity to duty is essential to the safety of life and property. Some of the great railroads will not employ any man who uses liquor even moderately, and many roads will not trust a train to the care of an engineer who is known to be a patron, or even a visitor, of the saloon.

"There is no fanaticism in this; it is simply sound business sense. Of all places on earth, where is there one requiring a more complete control of all the faculties of mind and body than that of a locomotive engineer? A drunken doctor might do a retail killing business, but a drunken engineer might slaughter men, women and children by wholesale, and cause almost incalculable damage to property, to say nothing of the enormous liabilities for killing and injuring passengers. The risk of accidents by rail is great enough when transportation is safeguarded by every possible precaution, and experience has shown that the drink habit among railway employes is a contributer to disasters, that it exposes the drinkers themselves, as well as the passangers on trains, to needless danger." C. A. S.

LETTER FROM VERMONT.

MONTPELIER, Vt., Aug. 26, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It has been my privilege to spend a short while in this place and Barre, working in the interests of the New England Christian Association. We brought along all the literature we could possibly carry to the depot. The houses here almost uniformly have yards and porches, and in the evening the families sit on these porches. One of the most novel experiences we had was to go along one side of a street for a square handing out tracts, and then looking back, see every porch occupied by interested tract readers. As I passed down the other side one called to me and said, without taking his eyes from the paper, "This has the right of it." Dr. Gordon, Dr. Culver, Wendell Phillips, Rev. J. P. Stoddard and your correspondent were the authors of the tracts given out.

These two cities are hot-beds of secretism. They are like Pergamos. There "Satan has his seat." The churches are lodge-ridden, and the ministers are with one exception silent on the subject. We had a pleasant interview with Rev. Alfred H. Webb, pastor of the M. E Trinity church. He is an Odd-fellow, and has neither disposition nor purpose to oppose the lodge. He admitted that the multiplication of orders in our day was a great evil, and injurious to the church. We suggested Dr. Wm. M. Taylor's declaration. A friend went to Broadway Tabernacle to hear the doctor preach. At the close of the service he went forward and congratulated him on his large audience, and that so many men were present. The doctor replied: "This was not my congregation. These men come to hear me preach, but they are not members. On communion Sabbaths after the sermon the men go away, and the women and myself have the sacramental feast. The men think the lodge is church enough for them and will not join the church."

Rev. A. N. Lewis, pastor of Christ's church, is a Mason and has no inclination to oppose secrecy. We suggested to both these brethren that a convention, in which papers would be presented on "Marriage and Divorce," "Temperance," "Sabbath Reform," "Secret Societies and Citizenship," "Christ's Authority and Law in Politics," etc., might be for the profit of the community. Neither were averse to the suggestion, but Bro. Webb thought all such meetings come to Montpelier, and of course the delegates and speakers would be expected to pay their own car fare and entertainment. Rev. Numan W. Seaver, of the Congregational church, was away on his vacation, and Rev. G. O. Webster, of the First Baptist church, had recently removed from his charge, so we missed seeing them. There are two weekly papers published in Montpelier. They have a wide circulation, but are so absorbed in party politics that reform questions are severely let alone.

Barre is six miles from Montpelier. It is a new place compared to the other. The granite business caused its growth. The Presbyterian minister removed a short time ago and his successor is not yet installed. We found the pastor of the Congregational church, Rev. Dr. Jackson, at his home. He is a strong man physically, and from his broad forehead I would judge that he could think deeply and clearly. He takes no part in reform movements and side-tracked our suggestion of a convention by proposing that it be held in Montpelier, and they could go down. Rev. J. A. Wright, of the Free Methodist church, was away in New Hampshire with his family, and a substitute who reads the Cynosure was filling his place both in home and pulpit. Rev. P. C. Abbey, of the M. E. church, was away on his vacation. The Universalists were gathering from all parts of the State to attend their convention. One of them told me he had been a pastor in Barre forty years ago. He was a personal acquaintance of Dr. A. A. Miner, of Boston, who championed all great reforms during his lifetime. It looked as if this great gathering had been prepared for us. It was a surprise to get among so many preachers.

Granite works are the chief enterprise of these two cities. The granite State house in Montpelier is typical of the granite mountains of Vermont, of which it is the capital. It is said people become like what they do. It cannot be said that the religion of these two cities is like the granite in which they work. The Christianity of these cities is sadly degenerated. The people are rich and worldly, live in fine houses, fare sumptuously and enjoy the pleasures of life. In these things the people are unchanging as the granite. Their consciences and hearts seem to be hard and unresponsive like the granite. But in morals and devotion to principles they are wholly unlike the granite. In these things they are plastic as clay in the hands of the potter. New England was once the model for the nation. How has the fine gold become dim!

SECRETISM IN AMERICAN POLITICS.

STARTLING FACTS SHOWING THE HAND OF THE LODGE IN INCITING THE SLAVEHOLDERS' REBELLION.—THE SOUTHERN CONFEDERACY EXISTED ON PAPER FIFTEEN YEARS BEFORE IT FIRED ON SUMTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 29, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Last evening the Hon. R. S. Tharin, President of the Pro-Armenian Alliance, delivered a lecture in this city which was highly appreciated by those who heard it. Previous to our civil war he was engaged in the practice of law in the State of Alabama, which he had to leave for acting as legal counsel for men who had been maltreated by Southern secessionists. I give such of his remarks as I think will be of most interest to your readers.

The secret order outwardly known as the Pan-Anglican Club of London, consisting of the nobility and merchant princes, has its branches in every American republic, for the purpose of reacting against republican institutions and promoting the commercial interests of England. In the cotton States its branch was called the Golden Circle, a secret society into which were admitted slaveholders only.

Fifteen years before the secession ordinances were passed, the Southern Confederacy existed on paper, and its recognition as belligerents had already been arranged for. A commissioner from the so-called Confederate States, and the rest of the program were thoroughly understood. Arms were furnished and men were drilled in secret under the patrol system of the South.

By the census of 1850 we are informed that the population of the slaveholding States was 9,747,525, of which 6,000,000 were non-slaveholders. Of slaves there were 3,000,000, and of free persons of color, 400,000. The slaveholders numbered 347,525. Dividing the foregoing numbers by five we have the number of each class capable of bearing arms: 1,200,000 non-slaveholders; 600,000 slaves; 80,000 free colored, and 69,505 slaveholders.

The non-slaveholders were for the most part unarmed and undisciplined as soldiers. The only persons drilled, armed and secretly prepared to array slavery against liberty and to destroy the American Union in the interest of England were the members of the Golden Circle, who were for the most part descendants and successors of the Tories of the Revolution.

The thirteen colonies which afterward became the United States were named plantations, and were granted to large proprietors, under charters, by the British Crown. The granters were titled, and strutted the earth in frills and furbelows, and were of that side of British politics then and since known as Tories. They were opposed to the independence of the colonies, and some of them drew the sword on the side of King George.

The indignation which that treason produced in the minds of the colonists compelled them to flee from the country. They took refuge in the shadow of the British throne, and prolonged the war by predicting disaster to Mr. Washington. When after eight years their predictions were discovered to be false prophecies, they found that they had worn out their last welcome and held a secret session to see what was best to be done. The English nobility were taken into the secret and the outcome was the formation of the Pan-Anglican Club.

It was determined that a Mr. Hutchinson, who was a pensioner of the British government for services rendered as a Tory before his flight to England, should furnish most of the money necessary to reach the legislatures of the several States then under the articles of confederation. Petitions were drawn up to the several States and signed respectively by the Tories who desired to return thereto.

The petitioners prayed that they might be permitted to return to America and to resume possession of their confiscated estates; apologizing for their conduct by stating that their distrust of the ability of the colonists to erect a stable government had rendered them uneasy concerning the future. This uneasiness had been removed by the Whigs, who were asked in effect to re-enslave the Negroes who had been confiscated to freedom, and to restore to the traitors their plantations.

They agreed to make their first effort in the State of Virginia, and their petition arrived at Petersburgh and was formally laid before the Virginia House of Delegates, of which Patrick Henry was then an honored member. All waited to hear from the great orator, who finally arose and astonished all present by advocating the cause of the petitioners.

During his remarks he put forth the following exclamation: "What! Shall we who have conquered the lion be afraid of her whelps?" This expression was more witty than wise. Whelps are young lions, and after having left the country they should have been kept out of it forever.

This was the first time in the history of the United States when those who had levied war against us and had given aid and comfort to the enemy, asked and received amnesty and the removal of their disabilities. They knew the reason of their return. It was the secret of the Pan-Anglican Club and of the Tories who belonged to it. They soon married their daughters to Whig generals and statesmen, and retaliated the cry of the Whigs of 1763: "No taxation without representation."

Having executed this flank movement on the colonists, they thus obtained representation in State and national legislatures. The judicial branch, consisting of Anglican precedents, was already at their disposal. It only remained for them to secure the executive branch by finding and placing in the chair a suitable instrument in the interests of the one-man power, which is their memory and their hope. Their centuriated conspiracy will never be satisfied by anything less than the overthrow of popular sovereignty and national integrity.

They next made themselves heard in 1832, when they declared that one State could nullify an act of Congress. But President Jackson, though a Southern man, did not belong to the conspiracy. He nullified nullification, and for twenty years the whelps were compelled to reserve their aggressiveness.

In 1852 South Carolina called a convention to consider the question whether separate State action, as secession is still called, or co-operation with the other slave States should be her mode of procedure for dissolving the Union. Co-operation prevailed; and from that time until the Presidential election in 1860 secretism was actively engaged in launching the Anglo-American belligerents. This was what the petitioners meant in 1783. This was what the whining whelps meant in 1832. This was what the young lions howled in 1852. And this was what the British lion roared in 1860.

The machinery of secession was diabolism. The Unionists were black-listed for destruction throughout the slave States, and like murdering Kurds descending on the disarmed Armenians, these murderous cavaliers destroyed every Unionist dangerous to their cause. Between the nomination of John C. Breckenridge and firing the first gun at Fort Sumter, at least 30,000 Unionists were deliberately slaughtered for opinion's sake. It was impossible for the United States Government, in the event of a successful issue of the war, to carry out the constitutional provision for the capital punishment for treason without incurring war with Great Britain, the Pope of Rome, and other foreign powers which joined England in her American policy.

The secret societies of secession, in the shape of lynch law, dominated the South, and during the Presidential election practically destroyed the Constitution and laws, and the sovereignty of the States, the right of trial by jury, the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, and all the rights and immunities of American citizens, from magna carta down to the last amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

When the State of Alabama seceded (in which the present speaker resided) the constitution provided that the following oath be read aloud in open court, and be signed by those entering on the practice of law:

"I do solemnly swear that I will support the Constitution of the United States and the constitution of the State of Alabama, and will never, for considerations personal to myself, neglect the cause of the defenceless and the oppressed."

For taking this oath, while all other members of the bar feared to offend the mob, he who now stands before you was compelled to retire before the storm and seek refuge among the Northern people who remained faithful to the Union. "Unionists who had been mobbed applied to me to seek redress for them before the courts of justice. My oath left me no alternative." Hence the mob turned on the attorney and compelled the speaker to leave the State of Alabama.

The same secret society is still plotting for the dismemberment of the Union. The unholy alliance of Old World monarchies watch our Presidential election like obscene birds anticipating a festival of blood. Again have the people in their frenzy let fall the reins of government upon the smoking flax of sectional tumult, whilst the chariot of government is being dragged with accelerated velocity toward the butting precipice of commercial, financial and political disaster.

That there be no distinction between races, no clashing of sections, let all true patriots unite against secretism, foreign and domestic, and restore the country to tranquility and prosperity, platformed on the immutable principles of the Declaration of Independence, the Farewell Address of Washington and the Constitution of the United States.

WANTED TO HEAR THE PLEDGE.

WOODLAND, Ill., Aug. 27, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am a Cynosure man from sole of foot to crown of head. Why? Because God wonderfully opened my eyes the night I was initiated into my first secret organization, and I was powerfully condemned before I had scarcely gotten started. Truly God has said, with your lips ye worship me, but your hearts are far from me. I read the letter from the Rev. C. P. Luce in August 27th number with much surprise. It reminded me of a personal instance that occurred in our church not long ago, and if you will permit this to be published it will probably explain the feeling of all lodge church members.

Our Epworth League was very slack, owing to so few of its members taking interest in its meetings, so our president set a Sabbath evening when all members should be present and take the pledge, and all renew our interests and get to work and do something for the Lord. The evening came and there was about twenty members ready to renew their pledge to God and the league.

The pastor called on all the members to assemble themselves at the altar. All came forward but one man, and the pastor said to him, "Bro., are you not a member of our league?" He answered, "Yes, but I want to hear what that pledge is before I take it." The pledge was read for his personal benefit, and so he came forward and knelt at the altar. What think you of this?

To me it was an insult to Almighty God and his church. I could scarcely refrain from raising and inquiring of him if he demanded all the pledges read before he submitted himself to the Masonic order of which he is a staunch believer. This same man has paid 50 cents within the last six months to the cause of Christ. I fully agree with Bro. Torrey, "No man can be a true Christian and a lodge man at the same time." "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon."

HOW TO CARE FOR CLOTHING.

Hints About Closets—Packing Away Unused Articles.

If in a freshly whitewashed closet it is necessary to hang dark clothing, tack against the wall an old piece of sheeting or calico as a protection for the clothes against the lime, which would otherwise rub on them. The cleat upon which the hooks are screwed should be about 4½ or 5 feet from the floor, and your closet shelf about 3 inches above the cleat. This is a convenient distance and prevents reaching and straining when things are to be put on or taken off the shelf. The capacity of a closet is increased by screwing to the underside of the shelf a row of double hooks shaped like the letter T. Another excellent plan is to run a rod across the closet lengthwise and then fasten to this a number of movable hooks of galvanized wire. These hooks are excellent, as the clothing can be hung loosely on them, and they can be pushed along the rod to make room in the same way that clothing stores arrange dresses and coats. The yokes which many clothing houses send along with coats and wraps are the best things for keeping cloaks and wraps in shape. Any housekeeper can make herself a supply of these by taking pieces of barrel hoops about 10 or 12 inches long and winding about them pieces of old cambric or muslin.

Woolen will not serve, as it invites the attention of moths. Suspend the yokes by a loop made at the center with stout cord, wire or cloth.

Closet floors need special attention. Wide cracks in them collect dust and lint or afford lodgment to moths and other troublesome insects. These should be carefully filled with putty or plaster of paris. A good substitute for these is newspaper shredded finely and made into a paste with gum tragacanth or a little hot water and glue.

Camphor, tar balls, tarred paper and cedar chests have proved inadequate as moth exterminators. It seems to be decided that the only safe thing is to thoroughly beat all dust out of the clothes, give them a thorough sunning, wrap them first in a piece of old muslin, then tightly inclose the bundle in newspaper. Printer's ink is very distasteful to insect forces.

A wise plan is to label these parcels, as the uniformity of appearance may lead to mistakes. Tack a seet of paper on the inside of closet doors and on the lids of boxes and trunks. As each garment is laid away write its name on the paper. By this plan the closet, the shelf and the package which holds a desired garment can be recognized at a glance.

How Gypsies Came to Be Called So.

Gypsies were popularly supposed to be of Egyptian origin, their name being, in fact, a corruption of the word Egyptians. It is generally believed now, however, that they came originally from India, and the only point in dispute is the date at which they left that country. Some affirm that they were expelled by Tamerlane when he conquered Hindustan in 1398-9, while other authorities say that they left Asia for Europe in the twelfth century. Either of these theories may be correct, though it was not until the commencement of the fifteenth century that they reached Europe in large numbers. At a meeting of the Royal Geographical society some years ago Sir H. Rawlinson gave an account of the migration of the gypsies, tracing them distinctly from the Indus through Persia, Syria and Asia Minor to the Bosporus. Their dialect corresponds with Hindoostanee, and in Aleppo they may be conversed with in that language without difficulty.

How Green Color Is Produced In Plants.

The chemical process by which the green color is produced in the leaves of plants is almost entirely dependent upon light. The substance to which the leaves owe their green color is termed chlorophyll. It is similar to wax and floats about in the cells of the leaves in the form of minute granules. Light is indispensable for the formation of this pigment, and in the absence of light the cells of plants are unable to secrete or form it.

How to Have Pretty Lips.

Though very red lips do not follow us into old age, we can at least keep them fresh and attractive looking all our lives. To do this great care must be taken to remain in perfect health and also to attend to any little ailment of the lips as soon as it is noticed. Too much sitting over the fire and too little outdoor exercise are fatal to the beauty of the lips.

Very pale colored lips, of course, show that the possessor is much out of health, usually suffering from bloodlessness. Strong iron tonics should be taken, plenty of milk drunk and outdoor exercise freely indulged in. The diet should be generous, and the rooms we live in and sleep in should be most carefully ventilated by night as well as by day. As the health improves the color will return to the lips.

The lips should also never be rubbed with strong scent, such as eau de cologne or vinegar or lemon. Friction is also very bad for their well being. Lips may only be a pale pink (red lips are constitutional), but if they are smooth and soft they will look attractive.

RELIABLE TESTIMONY.

Some one has disputed the testimony from Grand Lodge Reports of Missouri, given in Butler's American Hand Book in reference to the lodge as a promoter of intemperance and vice. But we can assure anyone that the following quotations in Butler's Hand Book are from the Missouri Masonic Grand Lodge Report for 1878. And what makes this testimony important is that it is high Masonic testimony in reference to the moral influence of their own institution of Freemasonry. This Grand Lodge Report says on page 46 of the Appendix:

No Mason will question the declaration that thousands of the craft in these lands are constantly violating the moral law. "A Mason is obliged by his tenure to obey the moral law; and if he rightly understands the art, he will never be a stupid atheist nor an irreligious libertine." To such an extent is the moral law disregarded that there are thousands of professed Masons who are practical atheists. The only difference between them and the "stupid atheist" of the "Old Charges" is this: The "stupid atheists" says "there is no God." The profane Mason says "there is a God," and professes to put his trust in him; is obligated in his presence and name, and goes from the "place representing" the dwelling of God, and acts as if there is no God. Often he does not wait to leave the "place represent ing the Holy of Holies," where he was made a Mason, before belching out profanities that would make the devil b ush, or cause the cheek of darkness to turn pale. We have heard such oft repeated.—Missouri Grand Lodge Report, 1878.

On the same page we find this fearful Masonic testimony as to why so many Masons after joining the lodge become victims of strong drink:

Since engaged on this Report we attended lodge and witnessed the work of the third degree. The lodge closed, and the brother who conferred the degree—an old Master—swore most profanely in the presence of the newly made brother, and within a few feet of the holy altar. He then said socially, "let us go round to the 'Monkeys.'" We did not know what the "Monkeys" meant. Always giving ourselves the benefit of a doubt, we thought home a better place than "Monkeys," especially after a long, laborious l dge session. Taking the street car we went a little distance, thinking the while, Masonry leads men at a late hour to see their ancestors, the "Monkeys." Soon all was explained. There over a brilliantly lighted, gilded palace of death, was the sign, "The Monkeys." Within the well-named place were those who resembled men, and once had been men, chattering and evidencing all the silly affinities possible to our supposed ancestry. The saloon was making "monkeys" out of human beings, and reversing the development theory. To that "monkey"-making shop our brethren went at a very late hour, when wife and family were wondering why does the "lodge hold so long."—Ibid. 1878.

LODGE-ENSLAVED LABOR.

In last week's Cynosure we noted a remarkable case in which the building of a church was stopped because the pastor, who did not have the mark of the beast, ventured to aid in the work. This mark, it seems, must not only characterize those who buy and sell, but also those who build churches. But here is the interesting account of the affair as given in a recent issue of the Chicago News Record:

"The strike in which a minister is concerned yesterday completely tied up the work on the new church edifice of the Messiah Baptist church, at Sacramento avenue and Flournoy street. There is but one union man involved. The one man was a carpenter, and he is still on strike, and no amount of importuning, coaxing, promises and arguments can induce him to return. And while he is on strike, and the work on the building is stopped, 8,000 other union men stand shoulder to shoulder and say that not one of them will take his place. Notwithstanding the small force involved, it is a full-fledged strike, and is of as much importance to the union carpenters as though there were 100 of their number out. The strike brings to light a state of affairs which illustrates how a body of men may make rules which at times even they do not like, and which they might overstep if it were not for the danger of establishing a precedent that might work serious injury to them in the future.

"The Messiah Baptist church some time ago decided to erect a new place of worship. It had $1,000 in its treasury, and succeeded in borrowing $2,500 more. The plans were drawn and various contractors figured on the work, but after all had figured it was found that the lowest was $4,000, or $500 more than was at the command of the board of directors. In its extremity the Rev. Howland Hanson, pastor of the flock, came to its assistance. Before donning the priestly garb he had driven nails and crawled along many a ridge-pole shingling roofs in the capacity of a journeyman carpenter. Although of late it had been used principally in turning over the pages of holy writ and shaking hands with the brethren and sisters on prayer meeting nights, his hand had not forgot its cunning, nor did his mind shrink at the idea of again donning blue overalls and facing the sun's rays on the heights of a scaffold. He would go to work on the building and save the wages of a carpenter who would have to be employed to do the work. In this way the structure might be completed within the bounds of the amount of funds on hand.

"The Rev. Mr. Hanson, however, had neglected to secure for himself a card in the carpenters' union, and while the men were perfectly willing to go to his church Sundays and listen to his sermons, they objected strenuously to him climbing ladders on the sides of the building and doing the work that belonged to them. For, they said, none of their members ever attemped to occupy the pulpits of the regularly ordained ministers on Sabbaths. And so it happened that when the walking delegate of the carpenters' union went around yesterday and found the Rev. Mr. Hanson making considerably more noise with his hammer than came from that of the one union man—and the only other man—on the building he gazed in amazement and asked for an explanation. After one had been given, the delegate in a solemn voice said that it could not be, and that he would be compelled to declare the job on strike.

"Slowly the one union man removed his overalls and wrapped his saw and hammer up in them. Slowly the eyes of the anxious preacher wandered from the face of the one union man to that of the walking delegate, but not one expression of a thought to relent could he find in either. Neither did the appeal which he made a minute later have any effect, and the two men left with the strike in full force, after having remarked: 'Come down to the captain's office.' The minister was at headquarters yesterday afternoon, and he related his tale of woe to those high in authority in the councils of the carpenters. They had no hesitancy in telling him that they sympathized with him, but when he left the strike was still on."

EVOLUTION OF THE SPANISH INQUISITION.

That Freemasonry is an evolution of the Spanish Inquisition is evident from the death penalties which every Freemason is sworn to inflict. Freemasonry has death penalties for a certain class—those who expose the order, or what it called the secrets of the order. Freemasonry must inflict its own penalties if they are inflicted; therefore every Freemason is sworn to commit murder, for the inflicting of the penalty would be murder. We have never read of murder being effected by the pulling out of the tongue except in connection with the Spanish Inquisition.

An Italian philosopher was charged with being an atheist. He was brought before the Inquisition, when he said to them, "Gentlemen, I am not an atheist. Do you see that straw? That straw came from a grain; that grain came from another straw. But, gentlemen, who made the first straw, or the first grain? God. Gentlemen, I am no atheist."

Yet his tongue was ordered pulled out by the roots, and he was fastened to the stake and burned to ashes. Thus, the sworn penalty of Freemasonry, of pulling out the tongue by the roots, came from the Spanish Inquisition, which exhausted human ingenuity to invent death torture for those whom they wished to destroy.

A SAD EXPERIENCE.

We have personal knowledge of several sad experiences like the following taken from Butler's Hand Book, page 138.

A lady whose husband stands suspended for un-Masonic conduct, said to us: "My husband never drank a drop of liquor until he joined the Masons. They led him astray by their conviviality, and he fell into deep dissipation and ruin." We know all the circumstances. This is only one of thousands, especially about the cities. Many Masons think the order was intended just to afford its members a "good time," and they go in for fun. Numbers are led off by the influence and example of older and more prominent brethren. Being less used to such dissipation, and less stable in character, these younger brethren take a down ward course, and soon fall into utter disgrace. Then some of those who wrought this ruin will sit in judgment upon the fallen one, belching whisky fumes from a drunkard's stomach, while they vote aye, for the condemnation of him whose greatest fault was that he could not carry as much steam as others.

To those who never attended a Grand Lodge, and never studied certain aspects of its makeup, the above extract will be strange and startling. But we have for twenty years been observant of such conduct, and cognizant of such conditions on the part of Grand Lodge representatives as to bring reproach upon the craft, and the blush of shame to the cheeks of good men and true. Some visit haunts of vice and dissipation during the session, engaging in the low sensualities of brute beasts, spending means and time that should be devoted to the relief of distress, the service of God, or in refreshment and sleep. The next day finds them stupid and dozing during business hours in the Grand Lodge. Such representatives are better patrons of saloons and brothels than any other place, while misrepresenting Masonry during the sessions of Grand Lodge.

We have seen such, in their representative character, so full of whiskey, that a good shake would cause a slosh to be heard like a barrel. We have heard prominent (?) men in Grand Lodge deliver grand homilies upon morality and virtue. We have heard them indulge in profanity before leaving the room and heard them propose a visit to the houses of vice, in thirty minutes after leaving the lodge. We have seen them start to the very places where virtue and purity never dwell. We have known of their return to the hotel at the most unseasonable hours, and heard their licentious rehearsals of brothel scenes. Yes, these representatative (?) Masons do some strange things during the sessions of our Grand Lodge.—Missouri Grand Lodge Report, 1878.

A TWO-MINUTE TALK.

While I was on a lecture tour a few years ago, I spent several days in an Iowa town and hunted up an old schoolmate, whom I had not seen for thirty years. In our boyhood days we sat upon the same bench in an old log school house in Wisconsin. After spending four years in the army he came home at the close of the war and married a banker's daughter, one of the most promising girls in our county seat. They settled in this Iowa town, accumulated property, had an elegant home, a son in college and a daughter of great promise just blooming into womanhood.

But I was saddened to find a great grief was corroding the heart of the once happy wife and mother. The father had fallen into the drink habit, and she had faithfully remonstrated with him until her appeals had lost all effect. She had borne her grief in silence, but now amid sobs and tears appealed to me, as his early friend and schoolmate, to try and reclaim her husband.

I found that he was a Knight Templar, and, though living in a prohibition town, yet he obtained liquor through his lodge associates. His wife told me that his intemperate habits began when he joined the lodge. Her pastor, the M. E. minister, had gone with him through the Knight Templar degrees, and had often told her that the lodge is a handmaid to religion. "But oh," said she, "if the lodge is such an aid to religion, why is it that my husband's bad habits began when he became a member?"

I explained to her the demoralizing influence of the lodge which made her husband's reformation wellnigh impossiple so long as he remained in it. He must not only cut loose from the lodge, but also from association with a minister who lends his influence to such an institution, which in so many cases leads men down to ruin. And what a fearful condemnation must rest upon such a pastor. Surely the blood of the perishing will be required of such a watchman.

IS FREEMASONRY A PRIVATE INSTITUTION?

Conversing with a gentleman on the train recently he remarked that a man's lodge connection was his own private business, with which no one had a right to meddle. He was reminded that an institution like Freemasonry, which suspended a Mason for testifying against a brother Mason in a civil court, as was recently done in a Hartford, Conn., lodge; and in filling such a large proportion of the offices of the country while its members were but a small proportion of the voters—that such an institution concerned the public enough to justify it investigation.

Besides if Freemasonry is what it claims to be, the handmaid of religion, and school of history, science and art, can we afford to treat it as a private affair? History lies at the very root of science, and yet no greater offense can be offered to ninety-nine out of a hundred Freemasons than to speak of the history of Freemasonry, as given by those who have been through it and know most about it. Freemasonry, claiming to be the repository of science, art and religion, forbids and resents every effort at investigation of its origin, of its preparation, initiation, forms and ceremonies and penalties. The great secret of Freemasonry is the ignorance of the members of the order, of its origin and history.

Those who have any information upon the matter do all they can to conceal this from the credulous and uninformed members of the lodge; and when any one who knows about such matter speaks, they keep silent and look wise, and then by grips and signs egg on the vulgar and ignorant to insult and slander, and resort to every method of unlawful pursuit to destroy business and character, and if possible, make life a burden. No relation in life is too sacred for their sworn invasion. Drunkards, and libertines, and seducers, and deceivers become the henchmen of these quiet persons, who know of the origin, and who know the whole matter of Freemasonry to be the most consummate fraud, and can only be used by those who wish to take undue advantage.

THE SITUATION IN MANY TOWNS.

A faithful M. E. pastor writes us of the situation in his town which may be taken as an exponent of many towns in our land:

"But you can realize what must be the condition when this place is over-shadowed with the lunacy of secret societies, and gangrened to the bottom with rum. I declare to you the situation is awful. Of course the decent Freemasons are kind and polite to me, as they know I tell the truth, and that their Freemasonry is just what I declare it to be.

"But the organization is crowded with drunkards, libertines, seducers, gamblers, slanderers and every form of character which defileth and maketh a lie. There is no more dangerous organization menacing the rights of the people today than Freemasonry.

"It is of little use for you to speak of it as anti-Christ. Nothing pleases the average Freemason better than to be regarded as antagonistic to Christ. To mention the Bible as authority against their organization, does but please many of them. The most effective way to destroy the monster is to keep before the people—

"1. The ignorance and immodesty practiced in their preparation for initiation.

"2. The degrading and wicked superstition practiced in the initiation.

"3. The savage, and more than savage, death penalties which they are sworn to inflict.

"Keep these nailed to your masthead and you will sink the enemy's craft as sure as God reigns. If you would publish each week one of the Masonic oaths, beginning with the first and continuing to the thirty-third, they would be eye-openers, and I believe your readers would be greatly interested."

A PROHIBITION CHURCH.

The pastor of the First Prohibition church of Cleveland, Ohio, sends out the following open letter to church members generally. It will be profitable reading, we believe, in these confused times of political excitement.

"DEAR BROTHER:—I wish you to be fully satisfied for yourself as to what position the church to which you belong occupies on the subject of the liquor traffic and kindred reforms. It seems that churches like political parties have had their rise to accomplish certain ends, to emphasize certain truths, and that when they have accomplished their special mission they have become obsolete. This should not be so. They should maintain an open attitude so as to be led by the Holy Spirit in such a way as to take a proper stand on new issues and rising questions. But church history shows that churches do not do this or at least that they have not done so. And reasoning from the analogy of history we cannot expect anything different in the future. Of course this method of reasoning is not conclusive, but it is presumptive and interesting.

"There is evidence that the Pharisees were at the first a very devout sect, that in the beginning it was a revival of the knowledge and worship of God, but as we all know it degen erated into the externals of the law and the ritualism of ceremonies. Christianity was itself pure in its primitive state, but it degenerated into the Roman church.

"Next came the reformation under Luther. But the church which bears his name is now formal and unprogressive. It has become a fossil. The Episcopalian church, which was the outgrowth of the reformation in England, is but very little better than the Roman church.

"The Quakers were originally a holiness people, and had they been true to God and had they not degenerated into formalism (the very thing they antagonized at the first) there would have been no need of Methodism. And we know that Methodism, which originated in a general revival, has degenerated until now in many places it tends strongly to ritualism and is not less corrupt than other churches.

"Congregationalism was a revival at the first. It was a reformation from the formalism of the Established church (the Episcopalian). Their complaint was the godlessness of the membership of the Church of England. The like remark could be made about the Presbyterian church. It cannot be said of any of these churches that they measure up to the present day issues on moral questions. It is true of the Free Methodist that while it is even now exceedingly circumspect about certain trivialities, such as dress, etc., they are not disposed to give attention to the great moral issues of this day in which we live. This church holds a test of membership on the use of tobacco, but nevertheless it will admit license voters to membership.

"A new church such as the church of the Open Bible should take warning from history not to become fossilized, but be progressive and aggressive, following the leadings of the Holy Spirit."

RELIEF FOR THE PERSECUTED ARMENIANS.

The following resolutions concerning the persecuted Christians of Asia Minor were adopted by the late International Conference of the Evangelical Alliance which met in London:

On the occasion of the celebration of the jubilee of the Evangelical Alliance, we, delegates from Great Britain and Ireland, the United States of America, Canada, France, Germany, Holland, Austria, Hungary, Belgium, Switzerland, Sweden and Norway, Denmark, Spain, Italy, Greece, Turkey, Egypt, Russia, South Africa and Australia, are of one accord in giving expression to our deep sorrow at the terrible persecutions which our brethren, the Christians in Turkey, have endured. As members together with them of the body of Christ we suffer in their sufferings, and pray that in this furnace of affliction their faith may not fail, and we hereby unanimously resolve,

1. To call upon the whole Church of Christ to unite in earnest prayer to Almighty God that it may please him graciously to comfort the sufferers, and to send speedy and effectual relief by moving the hearts of rulers to interpose in behalf of the oppressed.

2. To appeal to Christians of every land to raise relief funds, thus ministering of their abundance to the necessities of their brethren, who, for the name of Christ, have suffered the loss of all things; and seeking to ameliorate the distressing condition of thousands of starving and homeless people.

3. To urge our fellow Christians everywhere to create, if possible, such public opinion as will support their respective governments in every effort to put an end to these persecutions.

FREEMASONRY IS DRUIDISM MODERNIZED.

That Freemasonry is the successor of the Druid religion is evident from the most reliable history bearing upon the subject, from the prominence given by Freemasonry to the sun, which was the great object of Druidical worship, and from the offering of human sacrifice, as shamly practiced by Freemasonry, when it has Hiram Abiff to play dead at the hands of the three ruffians, Jubela, Jubelo, Jubelum. This is a sham imitation of the Druids offering human sacrifice. For historical proof we refer the readers to chapter 1, page 6, of Hume's and Sollett's Histories of England as abridged by John Robinson, D. D.

Human sacrifices were practiced among the Druids. Their penalties were of the most horrible and savage character. Of all the ignorance which has ever brought suffering to the world, of all the superstition that has ever been imposed upon the cupidity of the race, of all the savage penalties ever offered to place the credulous under the dominion of fear, Freemasonry is the superlative, for it is the worst and most stupid combination of ignorance and superstition and savagery that any age ever produced.

And yet this monstrosity is claimed by its champions to be on the increase. So was the wickedness of the Antediluvians on the increase; but the increase brought the flood to wash away the dismal stain, which the increased wickedness had produced.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—"We take thought for things honorable not only in the sight of the Lord but also in the sight of men."—2 Cor. 8:21.

—The Preacher's Magazine for September comes to us with some excellent articles and sermons. It is $1.50 a year and published by Wilbur B. Ketcham, No. 2 Cooper Union, New York.

—Editor M. A. Gault preached twice last Sabbath in the Immanuel Congregational church, Drexel Ave. The pastor, Rev. Charles R. Hunt, was formerly a highly esteemed co-laborer in the cause of reform in Iowa.

—Rev. Samuel F. Porter, our missionary agent, returned from Dakota last week and spent last Sabbath at Wheaton, the guest of President Blanchard. He is in good health and started this week to visit friends in Michigan and Ohio.

—In a private note Rev. P. B. Williams says, "Our recent Portland Convention was the best in the history of the Association. Owing to a call from Seattle to hold the next convention there we elected all the officers in that city save your humble secretary."

—James R. Sharp of Blanchard, Iowa, a tried and faithful friend of our cause, was a welcome visitor at the Cynosure office last week and spent a night with the editor in Wheaton. He has been visiting a sister in Newburgh, N. Y., and a daughter in Evanston.

—Elder Rufus Smith and son, Arthur, visited the Cynosure office last week. He has given a valuable donation to the cause, of a large number of "Butler's Hand Books" on Freemasonry. We wish all our readers could supply themselves with this magazine of anti-secret ammunition.

—A devoted Illinois pastor writes: "There are persons who belong to Freemasonry who could not be prevailed upon to think of observing their Masonic oaths. The ignorant and vicious do as far as they dare to inflict such injury upon those who know what Freemasonry is, and dare to speak of it just as it is."

—General Horace Porter's personal recollections of General Grant, which The Century will publish beginning in November, are to be called "Campaigning with Grant." General Porter first met General Grant at Chattanooga; he soon became attached to his staff, and was with him constantly from that time until the close of General Grant's first term as President, during which he was Grant's private secretary.

—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold writes from Naperville, at the close of a series of meetings there: "This completes the seven cities of Dupage county, and we had a large turnout to each of the seven Prohibition mass meetings." Bro. Arnold goes next to Warrensville, and then to Big Woods. We venture that no public speaker in Du Page county has reached more people with saving reforming truth and impressed them so deeply as Bro. Arnold with his illustrated lectures. We wish he could visit every town in the State as he has those of Du Page county.

—"Modern Substitutes for Christianity" is a consideration of the claims of theosophy, Christian science, spiritualism, socialism and agnosticism, by Geo. W. Shinn, D. D. 12mo. paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents. Thomas Whittaker, publisher, 2 and 3 Bible House, New York. The contents of this book were delivered originally as a course of lectures in and around Boston, where new fashions in religion are so likely to be favored. The lectures are exceedingly helpful and timely in presenting answers to the specious arguments presented by enthusiastic errorists. The treatment of the topics is not after the manner of technical theological essays, but in the language of the people. There is nothing denominational in them, so that the book can be freely distributed as a defense of our common Christianity against these new assailants.

A PEOPLE'S CHANCE.

THE NONPARTISAN, POOR MAN VIEW OF THE POLITICAL FIELD.

The Present Struggle Embraces the Attempt to Break Through the Outposts of Plutocracy—It Is Not Nearly All, but Is Much More Than Nothing.

[Special Correspondence.]

The butterfly becomes a bright, lively creature by simply dropping the envelope of the clumsy caterpillar. Something of the kind has taken place in the recent Chicago convention of July, 1896. The Democracy has dropped the heavy envelope of the gold plutocracy. It has done something more than that. Its platform contains two very important planks besides the silver one, two planks inviting the people to rebuke that judiciary of ours which, in the last two years, has twice insulted the majesty of the American nation, as follows:

First.—Our judiciary has established despotism by injunction against the working masses and practically made strikes impossible, when they are the only weapon that our infernal monopoly laws leave for the workers to at least check the constant exactions of our masters, the corporations and large employers of labor.

Second.—Our judiciary has vetoed the income tax, wanted by the people, on the pretext of its being class legislation.

The supreme stupidity of that pretext can be noticed by the fact that it would have meant an average $60 tax on our 400,000 richest chaps, when by right they should pay ten times as much, if anything. Why? Because our class monopoly legislation condemns 90 per cent of the race to live on a bare average of $500 per annum for each family group when they need and would have four times as much under laws of equal freedom. What a farce that of speaking of class legislation when you attempt to take back a small fragment from 3 per cent of the nation, about $25,000,000, out of the $7,000,000,000 we give them per annum through the most criminal laws of privilege that were ever concocted on the face of the earth.

Well, it remains to be seen what the American people shall do next November on the subject of rebuking our plutocratic judiciary, as the two indicated planks invite us to do. If the invitation is not accepted, if we fail to record that the natural rights of the American people mean something higher, in the eyes of God, than any human constitution or the whims of any lawyers in trying to read it to suit their spirit of oppression, then we shall proclaim to the world that we don't care anything for real freedom, judiciary despotism being good enough for us.

The elections next November shall determine something more than the triumph of this or that party. They shall fix the line of progress for the next 50 years on this side of the Atlantic. We are face to face with a supreme struggle, when all partisanship feelings should be drawn into love for that freedom and that justice without which manhood is impossible. Now is the time to remember that there can be but two logical parties after all in a social compact where the workers want to be the real citizens of their own nation and not the puppets or miserable tools of machine politicians and plutocratic masters. The two parties in question are as follows:

That of monopoly, and so of especial and class privileges.

That of the people, and so of the working masses and equal rights.

The latter party should include all honest, working capitalists and all men rendering useful, healthy services to humanity. That excludes nothing but monopolists, gamblers and schemers, actual or potential, in the flesh or in the spirit. The men just mentioned would melt away like glaciers under a tropical sun as soon as we had a social structure without laws of privilege.

The real happiness or wretchedness of nations is conditioned on two central, social thoughts formulated as follows:

First.—Mighty few laws, only those indispensable to specialize the eternal verities ingrained in the structure of the universe as revealed by human needs and the ethics of the golden rule.

Second.—As many laws as possible, by the bushel and the ton, as we have forever been manufacturing under the despotisms of all monarchs and all parliamentary systems and through which we defy the wisdom of nature and God.

The birth of the antiplutocratic Democracy in Chicago may yet prove a failure. It will all depend on the people whether it becomes plutocratic or not, in this or that form. Just now it simply represents an improvement when in contrast with the intense plutocratic elements against which it has revolted.

We can hardly expect more than a partial success, at the utmost; but that should not discourage the brave and the true. We should remember that the working masses here are essentially conservative, as they have always been in all nations, heathen and Christian, ancient and modern; that conservatism has been the eternal stumbling block of healthy, rapid progress. It has always sent humanity away from the straight line of march toward fundamental truth. It has kept men and nations lingering in the suburbs of all that is right and hanging around that fatal tree of good and evil. We have thus been forever mixing evil with good and giving to evil the power of self existence that good alone can impart to it.

The grand, eternal law of God is to eschew evil, to fly from all evil, to have nothing to do with any wretched mixture of the two elements. And civilization must necessarily be a war against the Father in heaven and all his truth as long as we insist upon our insane philosophy of mixing up evil with good. The final triumph of truth is inevitable, but it can only come through work and hope backed with prayers for the guidance of the All High. JOSE GROS.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Sept. 13
Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—Our tongues for Christ.—Prov. xv, 1, 2, 4, 7, 10, 14, 23, 26.

The ability to communicate our thoughts, feelings and desires to one another is one of the greatest blessings God has bestowed upon man. The organ through which this communication is made is the tongue. Though one of the smallest members of the human body, the tongue is one of the most important. It may be used as a power for good, and, alas, also as a power for evil! If we use our tongues for Christ, they will be powers for good, but if we use them for satan they will be powers for evil; hence the importance of consecrating our tongues to Christ.

Solomon had much to say about the proper use of the tongue, and in this chapter we have placed before us many important characteristics of the tongue which may guide us in its use and warn us against its abuse.

1. A soft tongue. "A soft answer turneth away wrath," verse 1. Wrath and anger are very common to us. It is difficult to live even a day without becoming angry and unkind. Calm and sweet tempers are rare. We have real grievances and supposed ones against our fellows. How are the evil results of such conditions to be guarded against? By a soft tongue. It is the best of weapons to be used against wrath. It turns it away, while a harsh tongue only inflames the anger already supposed.

2. A wise tongue, verses 2, 7, 14. "The tongue of the wise useth knowledge aright, but the mouth of fools poureth out foolishness," verse 2. Wisdom is an important gift of God. How important, if we have been blessed with it, that we use it aright. The tongue is the organ by which we can do this, for it is through it that we can use our wisdom for God in giving instructions, counsels and comforts to others. A foolish tongue is detrimental to the one who possesses it and injurious and grievous to others.

3. A wholesome tongue, verse 4. "A wholesome tongue is a tree of life." The tree of life had the power to give life. So has a wholesome, good tongue. It gives new life to the afflicted and troubled by comforting them, to the despairing and despondent by sympathizing with and encouraging them, and to the sin sick soul by convincing it of sin and leading it to Christ for peace.

4. A seasonable tongue, verse 23. "A word spoken in due season, how good it is!" There is a time to speak and a time to be silent. The seasonable tongue speaks at the right time the word of sympathy, the word of encouragement, the word of warning or the word of explanation and apology.

Bible Readings.—Ps. xxxiv, 1-3; xxxix, 1; lxvi, 1-4; xcii, 1, 2; cvii, 1-3; Prov. iv, 24; xviii, 6-8; Eccl. iii, 7; x, 12-14; Math. xii, 36, 37; Eph. iv, 29; v, 1-4; Col. iii, 8; iv, 6; Titus ii, 7, 8; iii, 1, 2; James iii, 3-6; I Pet. iii, 10.

A Cheerful Face.

Next to the sunlight of heaven is the cheerful face. There is no mistaking it. The bright eye, the unclouded brow, the sunny smile, all tell of that which dwells within. Who has not felt its electrifying influence? One glance at this face lifts us out of the mists and shadows into the beautiful realms of hope. One cheerful face in the household will keep everything warm and light within. It may be a very plain face, but there is something in it we feel, but cannot express, and its cheery smile sends the blood dancing through the veins for very joy. There is a world of blessed magic in the plain, cheerful face, and we would not exchange it for all the soulless beauty that ever graced the fairest form on earth.—Churchman.

The Watchword.

"Each for all and all for each," is the watchword of the hour. A nobler message has not gone out to the people since the angels sang the song of "peace on earth and good will unto men!" "Each for all," then each shall be saved from the sins that do beset the soul, the sins of self seeking selfishness. "All for each," then no man shall be left to make the struggle alone and single handed, and, if "all for each," then each and all shall enter into the large, nobler service that brings the kingdom of God in the heart of the world.—G. L. Perin, D. D.

Christian Endeavor In Great Britain.

During the year nearly 1,000 new societies have been registered, making a magnificent total of 3,609. There are 101,784 active members, 44,333 associates and 13,764 honorary members, making a total of 159,881. Of the 964 new societies, 160 are Juniors, 7,278 associate members have become active, and 9,052 have been church members. The Baptists still lead the way, with 947 societies; the Congregationalists come next with 933; then the Methodists, 751; Presbyterians, 311; Episcopalians, 19; Moravians, 16; Friends, 10.

A Public Trust.

The public odium attached to some great fortunes amassed by men who have done business on the piratical theory that it is a cruise for spoils bears witness to the truth they defy—that all legitimate business exists for public service and should be regarded by conscience as a kind of public trust.—Universalist.

Professor Maria Mitchell.

Mrs. Frances Fisher Wood of New York recently gave a lecture in Buffalo on Professor Maria Mitchell. While a student at Vassar, Mrs. Wood had an experience which illustrates the nobility and unselfishness of the celebrated woman astronomer. One evening Mrs. Wood, while in the observatory, had the rare good fortune to see one of the satellites of Jupiter over another. Just as it was almost over Miss Mitchell came in. Mrs. Wood says:

It was one of the greatest disappointments of her life, I know, not to have been there to make the observation, not to have added this to her long list of discoveries. But there was nothing of this apparent in her manner. She had me study up the subject, and I found that once before the same thing had happened.

The next morning in class she said to the students, "I must tell you about a wonderful observation that was made here last night." Then she called me to the board and made me illustrate the observation and read the notes made during the time I was looking through the telescope.

Later Professor Mitchell had me send an account of the observation to a scientific journal. The real nobility of her nature was shown in her manner of receiving the intelligence. There was never a thought of self. She was glad for me that I had made the observation, and, though it was a great disappointment to her not to have made it herself and not to have seen it, she never let that appear at all.

The Right to Excel.

Secretary Morton advertised for two male assistants. Thirty men entered the examinations together with 8 uninvited women. The 30 men failed, and the 8 women passed. Two women were given the places. There's women's rights for you—the right to excel.—Golden Rule.

AN AMERICAN GIRL.

Mary F. Winston, a Doctor of Philosophy at Gottingen University.

Another American woman has invaded the exclusive and conservative universities of Germany and carried away the highest honors. Recently a cablegram was received by the parents of Miss Mary F. Winston, residing at 6109 Monroe avenue, that their daughter had passed the examination for the degree of doctor of philosophy at the Gottingen university, magna sum laude. Miss Winston's subject for the degree was in mathematics, which fact makes the distinction conferred the more remarkable. She is the third American woman who has been admitted to any German university and the second to receive the doctor's degree.

Miss Winston has many friends at the University of Chicago, where she was a fellow in mathematics during the scholastic year of 1892-3. Miss Winston comes from a family of scholars and has two brothers and two sisters in the university at the present time.

The recipient of the high honors at the hands of the Gottingen faculty has had a remarkable success in her collegiate career. She graduated from the University of Wisconsin in 1891 with high honors in mathematics and was offered a fellowship at Bryn Mawr college the same year. After studying a year at the University of Chicago she was awarded the private fellowship of Mrs. Fabian Franklyn of Baltimore and immediately entered the University of Gottingen. From the very start she made rapid strides toward recognition, and last year Miss Winston held the foreign fellowship of the Association of Collegiate Alumnæ.—Chicago Herald.

Miss Bella Hamilton.

Miss Bella Jeannette Hamilton fills the position of head order clerk in the Crocker-Wheeler Electric company at Ampere, N. J. She entered the service of the company as stenographer in June, 1890, since which time she has risen to the highest clerical and confidential position in the company. Stationed in the New York office, she has sole charge of the entry of every order on the works.

The interpretation of orders and the figuring of many electrical questions, for which she has fitted herself by private study, are done in a way that surprises many engineers and is a great credit to her. She acts also as confidential clerk to the directors.

An Active Woman.

Mrs. Marian Adele Longfellow O'Donoghue, a niece of Henry W Longfellow, is well known in Washington as a society woman, a writer and a director of the Washington Choral society and is active in club life. She is a great-granddaughter of General Peleg Wadsworth, of Revolutionary fame, a direct descendant of John Alden and Priscilla Mullins and also of Governor Broadstreet, one of the early colonial governors of Massachusetts. Her poems, written over the names of Marian Longfellow and Marian Lester, have attracted attention.

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

A GIRL TANDEM.

The Devany Sisters of San Francisco Are the Youngest In the World.

Though the little Benner brothers of Philadelphia are the youngest tandem riders on record, San Francisco has the honor of producing the youngest and no doubt the speediest girl tandem scorchers.

There are few cyclers who visit the park who have not seen tiny Clotilde and her tinier sister, Laurine Devany, mounted on a miniature "bicycle built for two," flying along the roadway with the speed and nonchalance of trained racers. Their tandem, with its 24 inch wheels and low frame, weighing in all less than 25 pounds, is a thing of beauty, to which are added the youthful charm and grace of the fair riders.

Much speculation has been caused by their free and easy riding as to just what speed they could make, but no test has ever been made because their father has always frowned upon the idea, cautioning the little tots at all times against overexertion.

Sometimes, however, quite unconsciously, they develop uncommon speed when out for one of their daily spins, which never fails to attract attention. Indeed, for children whose combined ages is only 13 years, their riding is wonderful, that of Laurine especially, for she is scarcely 5 years old.

On occasions the elder brother of these two little record breakers, who is himself far from being 10 years old, alternates with Miss Clotilde and occupies the elevated seat behind pert and rosy Laurine. He is a clean cut, straight limbed little chap, and his strength goes far toward relaxing the work imposed upon his younger sister when the road is steep and difficult.—San Francisco Examiner.

Joe's Angleworm Farm.

Joe Crewdye is a Maine boy who has an angleworm farm. He started it a year ago and has made nearly $100 by selling worms to city men who go fishing in the lakes and streams of the country in which Joe lives.

The worm colony is kept in a large box, which covers the floor of an old shed. Joe filled the box with soil to within 18 inches of the top. He and his brothers began gathering the worms last year during the fall planting, and he thinks he put more than three barrels of the fish bait in the angleworm incubator.

The worms thrived and increased in number even during the cold days of winter, when the thermometer went down to 25 below zero. Fishermen leave orders for the worms with the groceryman in the little town near Joe's farm home, and the worms are delivered to the anglers Joe sells his worms for $1 a quart, and he guarantees his bait to be good, big worms, which will tempt the most cunning fish to take the hook.

The boys in the neighborhood say that when one of the Crewdye boys plays on his mouth organ the worms work themselves out of the dirt and wriggle and squirm as though they enjoyed the music. Joe says they do nothing of the sort, for he does not know how to play on a mouth organ.—Exchange.

Little Things.

The influences of little things are as real and as constantly about us as the air we breathe or the light by which we see. These are the small—the often invisible—the almost unthought of strands which are inweaving and twisting by millions to bind us to character. —Tryon Edwards.

Eddie's Funny Question.

Edward was watching mamma as she brushed the letters of her typewriter with a brush which she kept for that purpose. After looking for a few moments he asked, "Mamma, are you cleaning its teeth?"—Youth's Companion.

A BOY THAT WON'T DRINK.

His Studies at School Taught Him That Alcohol Is a Poison.

The moral effect of early acquaintance with scientific truth is illustrated by a little story which the Rev. Dr. Plumb tells in the Boston Transcript:

A millionaire brewer, a senator in another state, said to Mrs. Hunt: "I shall vote for your bill. I have sold out my brewery and am clean from the whole business. Let me tell you what occurred at my table. A guest was taken dangerously ill at dinner—insensible—and there was a call for brandy to restore him. My little boy at once exclaimed: 'No, that is just what he don't need! It will paralyze the nerves and muscles of the blood vessels so they will not send back the blood to the heart.'

"When the liquor was poured out to give the man, the lad insisted on pushing it back.

"'You will kill him. He has too much blood in his head already.'

"'How did you know all that?' I afterward asked.

"'Why, it is in my physiology at school.'"

It seems the textbooks, prepared by such men as Professor Newell Martin, F. R. S., of Johns Hopkins university, had succeeded in giving the lad some definite information which was proving useful.

"Senator," said Mrs. Hunt, "are you sorry your boy learned that at school?"

"Madam," the man replied, raising his hand, "I would not take $5,000 for the assurance this gives me that my boy will never be a drunkard."

PROOF AGAINST SNEERS.

A Brave Youth Who Remembered His Mother's Advice to Shun the Fatal Cup.

How many young men, just budding into manhood, have taken the first fatal cup, and not stopping at the first, as they may have thought of doing, but taking a second soon after the first, have gone on until their ruin was complete!

There was once a young man who was clerking in a large dry goods store where many other young men were employed.

Some of the latter urged the newcomer to accept a social glass, but he refused. The young men laughed at him, calling him a baby, and they also said that one glass would not hurt him.

"Ah, no," he replied, "if I should take one glass, I could easily be persuaded to take another. My mother taught me to shun the fatal cup. And when I was a little child she taught me this verse among many others, 'Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise.'"

The lads laughed and sneered at him, but it was useless to try to remove his scruples.

"My father," the brave boy continued, "went that downward path and at last filled a drunkard's grave. I do not intend to follow in his footsteps."

If other young men would only stand their ground firmly for the right, doing nobly as this one did, there would be a great many fewer drunkards' graves and a great many more happy hearts and homes.—Selected.

ALCOHOL WEAKENS.

Total Abstainers Are Healthier and Stronger Than Drinking Men.

The average workingman has an idea that beer or liquor of some sort is necessary to his health, strength and comfort. This notion is so deeply grounded that it will be hard to eradicate it. But it has been demonstrated time and again that alcoholic beverages have the very opposite effect.

One reason that it is so hard to make a drinker believe this is that if he lets up on his beer or booze for a few days he does not feel quite so well, is not quite so strong, and his appetite is not up to the standard. This is because his system has become used to such stimulants, and when they are withdrawn their loss is felt.

During the past five years a number of careful tests have been made in English and French mills and workshops, and in every one the total abstainer has been shown to be the superior in every material point. He enjoys better health, has greater powers of endurance and is more profitable to his employer, to say nothing of his superior domestic and social qualities.—Banner of Gold.

Concerning Drink.

In Great Britain last year 32,973,000 barrels of beer were brewed.

Six of the Protestant bishops of Ireland are total abstainers—an encouraging fact.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON XII, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, SEPT. 20.

Text of the Lesson, Prov. xvi, 22-33—Memory Verses, 25-27—Golden Text, Prov. xvi, 25—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

22. "Understanding is a wellspring of life unto him that hath it, but the instruction of fools is folly." In verse 16 of this chapter we read that wisdom is better than gold and understanding than silver; and again in chapter iv, 7, "Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom, and with all thy getting get understanding." In I Cor. i, 24, we read, "Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God." We conclude, therefore, that the wellspring of life is none other than the living water, which is the gift of God and which becomes in us a well of water springing up into everlasting life (John iv, 14). God Himself is the fountain, and when we receive Christ we have God in us (Jer. ii, 13; John xiv, 23).

23. "The heart of the wise teacheth his mouth and addeth learning to his lips." It is from the heart that all proceeds. An evil heart gives forth all manner of evil (Math. xv, 18, 19), and a good heart gives forth that which is helpful, for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh (Math. xii, 34). The natural heart or carnal mind is enmity against God and never can be made subject to Him (Rom. viii, 7), but God offers to give a new heart and a new spirit (Ezek. xxxvi, 26), or, in other words, a new birth or a new creation (John iii, 5, 16; II Cor. v, 17), and this will send forth good words from the lips.

24. "Pleasant words are as an honeycomb, sweet to the soul and health to the bones." If we keep the words of God in us, they will by the Spirit be fitted in our lips as the Spirit may desire to use them (Prov. xxii, 18). The people wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of the mouth of our Lord (Luke iv, 22), but they were the words of God who spoke through Him (John xii, 49).

25. "There is a way that seemeth right unto the man, but the end thereof is the way of death." There is but one right way, and that is He who said, "I am the way." It is God's way of reaching us and our only way of reaching God. There is one other name given under heaven by which we can be saved (John xiv, 6; Acts iv, 12). Whatever may seem right to us, if the Lord Jesus is not the center of it and the author of it, it is not of God, and therefore must be the way of death and not of life (I John ii, 15-17; v, 12).

26. "He that laboreth laboreth for himself, for his mouth craveth it of him." What multitudes spend all their strength in getting something for themselves, something to eat or drink or wear or enjoy! All this is folly. And one who could do it as perhaps no other mere man that ever lived tried it to the utmost, and his testimony is on record in these words, "Behold, all was vanity and vexation of spirit, and there was no profit under the sun" (Ecc. ii, 11).

27. "An ungodly man diggeth up evil, and in his lips there is as a burning fire." The margin says "a man of Belial," and the R. V. says "a worthless man." All such are servants of him who began the work of evil on the earth in the garden in Eden and whose constant business is to stir up strife and burnings. Happy are they who escape the everlasting burning where he is doomed to dwell (Isa. xxxiii, 14; Rev. xx, 10; xxi, 8).

28. "A froward man soweth strife, and a whisperer separateth chief friends." It seems to me more and more that if we were only familiar with the Bible the Spirit would bring to mind as we read what He has elsewhere said upon this or that topic, and thus we would have the best of commentaries, even the Spirit's own explanation of His own words. He now brings to mind Jas. iii, 14-16, "If ye have bitter envying and strife in your hearts, glory not and lie not against the truth. This wisdom descendeth not from above, but is earthly, sensual, devilish."

29. "A violent man enticeth his neighbor and leadeth him into the way that is not good." The devil and his followers are at this business unceasingly day and night, Sunday and weekday. Deceit and destruction are his work, and there is nothing good in him. God is good and giveth Himself to each one who receives Jesus Christ His Son with the assurance that goodness and mercy shall follow us, and we shall find all His ways pleasantness and peace. It is, however, a narrow way, and will not admit the world, the flesh or the devil.

30. "He shutteth his eyes to devise froward things. Moving his lips, he bringeth evil to pass." He closes his eyes against the light and will not see the goodness of God. He loves darkness rather than light, because his deeds are evil and his heart and tongue and lips are the property of his master for evil purposes. His mouth pours out evil things, and his thoughts are an abomination to the Lord (chapter xv, 26, 28). God permits him to bring his evil thoughts to pass, but they will prove his own destruction.

31. "The hoary head is a crown of glory if it be found in the way of righteousness." The sinner may prosper and live a long life on the earth, but there is nothing glorious about his life, for it is only a ripening for eternal torment. On the other hand, the white hairs of the righteous man are a crown of glory, for they point forward to an eternity of bliss and purity with Him whom John saw on Patmos having His head and His hairs white like wool, as white as snow (Rev. i, 14). There is also the beautiful promise for such a one, "Even to your old age I am He, and even to hoar hairs will I carry you" (Isa. xlvi, 4).

32. "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty, and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city." He that is slow to anger appeaseth strife and is of great understanding (chapters xv, 18; xiv, 29). Anger, wrath and malice are of the flesh and of the devil, but by the grace of God, having received Jesus Christ, and being thus born of God, we may have victory over the besetting sins of our old nature. He saves us from the wrath to come, but He is also able to save us from ourselves (Math. i, 21) and from our sins. It is for us to yield to Him and cry, "Thine is the power" (I Chron. xxix, 11).

33. "The lot is cast into the lap, but the whole disposing thereof is of the Lord." However things may seem to go at present, the final disposition of everything is of the Lord. He permits the wicked to choose their own evil ways and continue in them and for a time to prosper. He also permits the righteous to be afflicted and suffer, but the end will declare His justice. It becomes us continually to say, "Just and true are Thy words." "Show me Thy ways, O Lord" (Rev. xv, 3; Ps. xxv, 4).

Legislators Set a Bad Example.

It is stated that the drink bill of the house of commons for five months, according to latest official returns, is £6,500, a very large amount for each when temperance members are deducted. Small wonder that temperance legislation makes no headway in England.

ELEVEN ARE DEAD.

The Result of a Terrible Accident at a Fire.

OPERA HOUSE AT BENTON HARBOR

Breaks into Flames That Plays Havoc with the Firemen, Five of Whom Are Instantly Killed and Six Given but an Hour of Life After Their Rescue—Falling Wall Does the Mischief, Catching the Men in the Alley—List of the Dead.

Detroit, Sept. 7.—A special to the Free Press from Benton Harbor, Mich., says: The most horrible holocaust, with great loss of life, that has ever occurred in this part of the state occurred Saturday night at midnight, when Yore's Opera house took fire, and in the fight to save the building and other blocks adjoining eleven firemen, one a volunteer, met their fate at one fell swoop, the death being instantaneous with five of them; six lived only a few hours in awful agony, while several others got severe bruises and burns. During the evening the play "A Factory Girl" had been given by local talent and had closed but a half hour before the fire was discovered.

Caught While Hoisting Fire Ladders.

Then the building was filled from basement to fourth story with a suffocating smoke which burst into a sheet of flames throughout the entire audieonce room almost instantaneously, before the fire department could respond with a single stream of water. There was some confusion at the outset, owing to the lack of hook and ladder facilities, although the local fire companies had the same day closed a two days' tournament exhibiting much skill in quick work. St. Joseph was called on for assistance at the outset, her firemen approaching the building through an alley and unloading ladders in the rear of the building. It was while hoisting them that the upper walls fell over without second's warning covering the men, which was witnessedby hundreds of spectators.

List of the Men Who Died.

The following were killed: Frank Watson, of St. Joseph, legs broken, skull crushed, leaves a widow; John Hoffman, Benton Harbor, crushed into an unrecognizable mass, leaves widow and five children; Thomas Kidd, Benton Harbor, unmarried, killed by live wires; Frank Woodley, Benton Harbor, killed by live electric wires, leaves widow and three children; Ed H. Gange St. Joseph, drayman, head crushed, legs broken; Scott Rice, bell boy at the Benton hotel, skull fractured, internal injuries, lived but few minutes; Will I. Mitten, Benton Harbor, both legs fractured, internal injuries, lived two hours, leaves widow and several children; Louis Hoffman, Benton Harbor, head smashed, thigh crushed, widower, leaves two small children; Arthur C. Hill, St. Joseph, foreman St. Joe Hose company, legs broken, terribly burned, lived one hour; Frank Seaver, St. Joseph, leg broken, badly cut and burned, lived three hours; Robert Rofe, St. Joseph, compound fracture of the left leg, burned and internal injuries, lived one hour.

Three Men Cut, Burned and Bruised.

The injured are: John A. Crawford, ex-chief of Benton Harbor fire department, overcome by heat and smoke, burned about the head, will recover; Will Freund, of St. Joseph, cut about the head; Frank Paget, of St. Joseph, leg bruised by falling brick.

Frank Woodley and Thomas Kidd were on top of adjoining buildings with hose when the encountered live electric wires, on which they were hanging when found. Policeman Charles Johnson narrowly escaped, as falling bricks tore his coat off, while another was protected by a telephone pole. The work of removing the debris was commenced at once and those pinned in were removed in a few minutes, except C. A. Hill, whose body was recovered at 4 o'clock yesterday morning. It was believed that several more bodies were under the pile of brick and search was continued till every doubt was passed.

SOME SUSPICION OF FIRE-BUGISM.

Young Man Under Arrest Who Appears to Know Something.

The cause of the fire is a mystery; several theories, from a cigar stub to a lamp explosion, are given. Guy Prescott is under arrest as being one who knows of the origin, but when asked by a reporter the cause remarked that he was not going to give anybody away, assuming that he was in possession of facts that caused his detention. The building was comparatively new, having been erected seven years ago at a cost of $40,000 by Patrick Yore, a wealthy farmer who had since leased it to J. A. Simon, who has had charge for six years. A two-story brick block owned by Joseph Frick, which stood adjoining, was demolished by the Opera House walls falling on top and crashing through to the basement.

The Opera block was occupied by the Evening News, S. M. Austin's bakery, J. Bernstein (clothing), John Holmes (barber shop) and fruit packing in the basement. The Frick block was used for the retail boot and shoe business and dwelling. The buildings and stock destroyed with losses are as follows: Opera House block, loss $40,000, insurance $19,000; Evening News plant, loss $4,000, insurance $2,500; J. Bernstein, loss $3,000, no insurance; S. M. Austin, loss $300, no insurance; Holmes, loss $100, no insurance; J. M. Frick, loss $7,000, insurance $3,000; J. N. Herr (grocery), damage to building and stock, $1,000, fully insured: Dr. Hunt and S. M. Austin, grocers, damage to building and stock respectively $600, fully insured.

Bank Failure at Helena.

Helena, Mont., Sept. 4.—The failure of the First National bank of this city was announced Friday morning by the posting of a notice that the bank was unable to meet withdrawals demanded of it. The notice was signed by H. Edgerton, vice president and manager, who says creditors will be paid in full. The directors refuse to talk and no statement of the assets and liabilities has been made. It is said that the failure is due to the bank's inability to realize on assets to cover demands of eastern creditors.

No Tuition to Be Charged.

St. Paul, Sept. 7.—Archbishop Ireland has issued a letter announcing that hereafter in the Catholic parochial schools no tuition will be charged, such tuition being considered an obstacle to the growth of these schools.

THE PRIVILEGED CLASSES.

Described In the Double Distilled Style of the Veteran Labor Leader.

The privileged classes believe in a state of society in which the poor must submit to the rich and the majority to the minority; they believe in prosperity for themselves, and that poverty is the natural state of the rest of mankind; they believe in a peace that comes of fear and compulsion; they do not believe in a town meeting government; they favor government by commission and by injunction; they advocate biennial or less frequent elections, biennial or less frequent sessions of legislative bodies and in lengthening the terms of office and the increase of the salaries of high officials; they boycott industrial enterprises by the formation of trusts and syndicates; they force men out of employment, devour the products of the farm by usury, force a tax upon products, denounce all attempts to tax their earnings and surpluses as unconstitutional; they control political conventions, or, failing to control, seek to destroy their own political organization.

They have opposed every step in legislation for the poor, such as a reduction of the hours of labor, the increase of the school age and school terms, and have succeeded in securing court decisions that have left the poor at their mercy. They have debauched the pulpit, purchased the press, corrupted the judiciary, legislative bodies and educational institutions, caused financial panics, paralyzed industry and appreciated the value of one metal—gold—so that the cheap things of which they boast have been too dear for their cheaper laborers to purchase. They have called into existence the great army of the unemployed, have repeatedly robbed the government of its gold, forbade the administration to keep faith with the plain people. They would limit the government to the simple police power of protecting "scabs" and breaking the heads of union men.—George E. McNeill in Boston Globe.

Is It Selfishness?

In an address to the miners' union in Hanley in Staffordshire, England, John Morley, member of parliament, made the following remarks: "People sometimes talk of the selfishness of trades unions. But there is all the difference in the world between the selfishness of a capitalist and the selfishness of a great labor organization. The one means an increase of selfish luxury for one man or a single family. The other means not luxury, but increase of decency, increase of comfort, increase of self respect, more ease for the aged and more schooling for the young, not for one, but for 10,000 families. Others may call this selfishness if they please. I call it humanity and civilization and the furtherance of the common weal."

An Advanced Programme.

The Virginia State Federation of Labor has been permanently organized. The declaration of principles adopted declares that no special privileges should be granted by the state without adequate compensation and never without the state retaining direct control. It recommends municipal ownership of street cars, water and gas works, nationalization of telegraphs, telephones, railroads and gold and silver mines, abolition of all laws that do not bear equally on labor and capital, abolition of child labor in mines, workshops and factories, abolition of the monopoly privileges of issuing money and the substitution therefor of a system of direct issuance of money by the government.

Go to Work on a Farm.

The following from the Washington Star reads like sensible advice, until one asks, What will the farmer, who cannot get enough for his products to pay the expenses of raising them, say to the proposition? However, The Star's advice, if acted upon, may broaden the knowledge of the workingman as to the true condition of the country.

"In all the great cities of this country are many thousands of unemployed men—men who have practical knowledge of various trades, and who, until the coming of this miserable era of hard times, had been accustomed to earn sufficient money with which to support themselves and their families. There is nothing upon which to base present hope of speedy employment for these men in the trades with which they are familiar, but it does not necessarily follow that these unfortunately idle men shall continue to be idle until our manufacturing industries now slumbering are reawakened by the coming of new legislative or commercial conditions. In every agricultural region in the United States there is room for many of these unemployed. In some places the farmers find it practically impossible to secure the assistance they need to make successful crops. It is understood, of course, that agriculture is not universally popular as an avocation, but the man who is out of work and who is sincere in his desire to meet with an opportunity to earn a living ought not to be overparticular. Any industry is honorable, no matter how humble it may seem to be. It may be argued that farm labor is not attractive; that the hours are long, and the life somewhat monotonous. If there was plenty for everybody to do, there would be no impropriety in a man's insisting upon his unquestioned right to work when and where he pleases, but in such times as these real men will not be too choice. They will take up farming until something more nearly to their tastes turns up; then they can return to their old trades, better off in matters physical and moral for their agricultural experience."

Saturday Half Holiday.

It is a fact, well established by statistics based on experience, that in a given period the man who works six days a week produces as much as the man who works seven. The energy saved in the one day of rest is expended in the six days of labor. The same rule will apply to the half holiday.

There is a great deal of force, too, in the statement that when men are worn to exhaustion on Saturday night they need Sunday to recuperate, and so there is little which will appeal to their higher natures.

St. Louis occupies a better position than most other cities in the matter of the half holiday. It is to be hoped that it will soon be made universal and that it will not be limited to the summer months. The average man not only wants time for recreation and the cultivation of home joys, but his work is improved by them.—St. Louis Republic.

The aim of the United Garment Workers, with which the Brotherhood of Tailors is affiliated, is to abolish the contract system altogether. The contractors will then become either operators or superintendents of clothing factories.

Address W. I. PHILLIPS,
221 West Madison Street, Chicago, Ill.

RICHARD RUSH: "Hooker, personifying law, eloquently exclaims, 'her seat is the bosom of God, her voice the harmony of the world; everything on earth does her homage, the highest as not beyond her control, the least as claiming her protection.' Masonry has overset this primordial system. She has dethroned this image of God upon earth. To reinstate it over so insolent a victor, we must have a political organization. There is no other way of assaulting, there is no other hope of vanquishing, there need be no other dream of humbling such a foe. It fights with desperation."

JOHN MARSHALL: "I never did utter the words ascribed to me, nor any other words importing the sentiment they convey. I never did say, 'Freemasonry is a jewel of the utmost value, that the pure in heart and life can only appreciate it fully, and that in a free government it must, it will be sustained and protected.' The fact mentioned in the resolution, that I have been in a lodge but once, so far as I can recollect, for nearly forty years, is evidence that I have no disposition to volunteer in this controversy, as the zealous partisan which this language would indicate."—Letter to Hon. John Bailey, Oct. 18, 1833.

HON. EDWARD BLAKE, Leader in Canadian Parliament, in a Debate, March, 1884: "I am not in favor of State recognition of any secret societies. I have never joined one, though many of my best friends are members of secret societies. But I believe the tendency of secrecy itself to be injurious. I believe that it brings with it the possibility of evil; I believe that it involves a certain amount of sacrifice of individuality and independence, and gives very great facilities for the misleading of members by designing leaders—very great and mischievous facilities for that purpose." "I believe that a great deal of the trouble, social and political, that has occurred in those countries [Europe and America] is due to secret societies."

GEN. HENRY SEWELL, a Companion of Washington: "I was initiated an Entered Apprentice to the Masonic rites in October, 1777, at Albany, soon after the capture of Burgoyne, being then an officer in the American army..... I was led by the influence of this 'Perfect Rule of faith and practice,' during the year 1784, to view speculative Masonry in a shape still more deformed. Its character appeared to be selfishness, because restricted to its own members; its religion, deism, because entirely devoid of the Gospel. Its history appeared fabulous; its claims to antiquity, unsustainable; its titles, fulsome; its rites, barbarous and absurd; its oaths, extra-judicial, unlawfully imposed and blindly taken; and the penal sanctions annexed, horrid and impious."

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Speech in the Senate: "Secret societies, sir? Before I would place my hand between the hands of other men, in a secret lodge, order, class or council, and bending on my knee before them, enter into combination with them for any object, personal or political, good or bad, I would pray to God that that hand and that knee might be paralyzed, and that I might become an object of pity and even the mockery of my fellow men. Swear, sir! I, a man, an American citizen, a Christian, swear to submit myself to the guidance and direction of other men, surrendering my own judgment to their judgments, and my own conscience to their keeping! No. No, sir. I know quite well the fallibility of my own judgment, and my liability to fall into error and temptation. But my life has been spent in breaking the bonds of the slavery of men. I, therefore, know too well the danger of confiding power to irresponsible hands, to make myself a willing slave."

GEORGE WASHINGTON, in Farewell Address: "The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish Government, pre-supposes the duty of every individual to obey the established Government. All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive to this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency. They serve to organize faction, to give it an artificial and extraordinary force, to put in the place of the delegated will of the nation, the will of a party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community..... However combinations and associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to become potent engines, by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men, will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of Government; destroying, afterwards, the very engines which had lifted them to unjust dominion."

PALMER AND BUCKNER NOMINATED

The Illinois Statesman Gets the Honor on the First Ballot, with Nearly All the Votes, and the Kentuckian Has no Opposition at All—Cleveland's Telegram Declining — The Platform Adopted — What the Governor of North Carolina Said to the Governor of South Carolina.

Indianapolis, Sept. 4.—John M. Palmer. of Illinois, and Simon Bolivar Buckner, of Kentucky, two white-haired veterans of the war, rival commanders of the blue and gray, were nominated yesterday by the National Democratic convention for president and vice president, on a brief but emphatic platform which repudiates the the doctrines ennunciated by the Chicago convention, indorses President Cleveland and his administration in glowing terms, declares for gold standard, tariff for revenue only, liberal shipping laws, currency reform, civil service and economy in public expenditures. The spirit that animated the convention was contained in this declaration of the platform:

SIMON BOLIVAR BUCKNER.
[Nominated to run with Palmer.]

"The Democratic party has survived many defeats, but it could not survive a victory won in behalf of the doctrine and policy proclaimed in its name at Chicago."

And so, in the language of Hammond, of Louisana, this convention placed in the hands of other nominees their banner, and bade them fling it forth "skyward and seaward, high and wide."

Platform Report Was Delayed.

The real work of the convention was soon transacted when it was reached, but the delay in reporting the platform gave opportunity for a series of eloquent and stirring speeches. The attendance was larger than Wednesday and the enthusiasm was great. Colonel W. C. P. Breckinridge, the famous Blue Grass orator; Dewitt C. Warner, of New York; H. A. Hammond, of Georgia; F. W. Lehman, of Missouri; W. D. Bynum, of Indiana, and Controller of the Currency Eckels were in turn called to the stand and stirred the enthusiasm to a high pitch. When the platform was at last brought in, shortly before 2 o'clock, it was read amid an almost continuous storm of applause, and was adopted unanimously without a word of debate. When the nominations for president were called for, it was apparent that Palmer would be nominated over his protest, as the opposition to Bragg had concentrated upon him. These two names were the only ones presented to the convention.

Cleveland and Watterson Eliminated.

It was known that a message from President Cleveland had reached the convention that he could not entertain for a moment the suggestion of his own nomination, and his decision was at once accepted as final. Before the states were called for nominations Henry Watterson was taken out of the lists by Carroll, of Louisville, who conveyed to the convention a message from the Kentucky editor in his retreat in the mountains of Switzerland. Watterson, Carroll said, four days after the Chicago convention had cabled that other candidates must be named or the Democracy was lost. Later he said he did not want the honor, but that if no one else could be found to take command he would not ask others to go where he would not lead. Now that others were ready to accept he preferred to do battle in the ranks.

Some of the nominating speeches were eloquent and full of fire. Kilbourn, of Michigan, placed Senator Palmer in nomination, and there was a series of seconding speeches. Burr W. Jones, of Wisconsin, nominated General Bragg, "the hero of fifty battles and the commander of the Iron brigade." Illinois waited until all the other states had been called. Then Judge Moran, of Chicago, took the stage and said they had recognized from the first that Senator Palmer was the man to lead the fight. He was, he said, a platform in himself. All his life he had fought fiatism, greenbackism, free silver and other vagaries. But he had sealed their lips. After seeing the temper of the convention, however, Illinois was compelled to join hands with her sister states in urging his nomination. The roll call immediately developed the overwhelming majority in favor of Palmer, but it proceeded to the end, Palmer receiving 757½ votes and Bragg 124½.

NOMINATION MADE UNANIMOUS.

On the Motion of Bragg—Buckner Has a Walkover—Platform.

At its conclusion the commander of the Iron brigade mounted a chair and in a brief but graceful speech moved that the nomination be made unanimous, and pledged that he and Wisconsin in the coming battle would be where brave soldiers should always be—nearest the flashing of the guns. He was given three hearty cheers, and General Palmer was declared the nominee amid an enthusiastic demonstration, during which the state guidons were carried about the hall in the wake of the standard of Illinois. There never was any doubt about Buckner's nomination for vice president, except while his nomination was being talked of for president. When Chairman Caffrey instructed the secretary to call the states for nominations for vice president he called but one state, "Kentucky," and the band struck up "My Old Kentucky Home." William F. Brooder, of Russellville, Ky., placed General Buckner's name formally in nomination and the nomination was forthwith made unanimous.

Resolutions were then adopted thanking the provisional committee for its work and thanking the business people of Indianapolis for their hospitality. And then, "You know about the governor of North Carolina and the governor of South Carolina," shouted a West Virginia delegate amid a roar of laughter. "I move the convention adjourn sine die."

The motion was put and carried, and at 4:32 the first convention of the National Democratic party adjourned sine die.

The platform begins with a review of the business situation, and the conditions held to be hostile to prosperity and proceeds: "With the Republican party increasing these conditions, which are pleaded in justification of a heavy increase of the burdens of the people and a further resort to protection, we therefore denounce protection and its ally, free coinage of silver, as schemes for the personal profit of a few at the expense of the many, and oppose the two parties which stand for these schemes as hostile to the people of the republic whose food and shelter, comfort and property are attacked by higher taxes and depreciated money.

"In fine, we reaffirm the historic Democratic doctrine of tariff for revenue only.

"We demand that henceforth modern and liberal policies towards American shipping shall take the place of our imitation of the restrictive statutes of the eighteenth century, which were abandoned by every maritime power but the United States, and which to the nation's humiliation have driven American capital and enterprise to the use of alien flags and alien crews, have made the stars and stripes an almost unknown emblem in foreign countries, and have virtually extinguished the race of American seamen. We oppose the pretence that discriminating duties will promote shipping and declare that scheme an invitation to commercial warfare upon the United States, un-American in the light of our great commercial treaties, offering no gain whatever to American shipping, while greatly increasing ocean freights on our agricultural and manufactured products.

"The experience of mankind has shown that by reason of their natural qualities, gold is the necessary money of the large affairs of commerce and business, while silver is conveniently adapted to minor transactions, and the most beneficial use of both together can be ensured only by the adoption of the former as a standard of monetary measure and the maintenance of silver at a parity with gold by its limited coinage under safeguards of law. Thus the largest possible enjoyment of both metals is gained with the value universally accepted throughout the world, which constitutes the only practical currency, assuring the most stable standard, and especially the best and safest money for all who earn a livelihood by labor or the product of husbandry. They cannot suffer when paid in the best money known to men, but are the peculiar and most defenseless victims of a debased and fluctuating currency, which offers continued profits to the money changer at their cost.

"Realizing these truths, demonstrated by long public inconvenience and loss, the Democratic party, in the interests of the masses and of equal justice to all, practically established by the legislation of 1834 and 1853 the gold standard of monetary measurement, and likewise entirely divorced the government from banking and currency issues. To this long established Democratic policy we adhere, and insist upon the maintenance of the gold standard."

LABOR DAY PARADE AT CHICAGO.

The Holiday Generally Observed by Workers at the Western Metropolis.

Chicago, Sept. 7.—Labor Day in this city was generally kept by the labor unions, many factories closing down for the day, and all the banks "shutting up shop." The stores were, however, all open and business went on as usual there. The labor parade was the largest held in this city so far, there being eleven divisions in line, headed by Grand Marshal Carroll, president of the Building Trades Council. According to the numerical strength of the organizations in each division the number in line should be about 35,000. The divisions formed in Michigan avenue, from Jackson to Twelfth street, with the head of the line at the north. The parade moved promptly at 10 o'clock a. m., marching west in Jackson street and Jackson boulevard to Loomis street, north to Monroe street, east to Peoria street, north to Randolph street, east to Market street, where it will disband.

The parade is practically a combination of all the general organizations in the city, which were so much at outs last year that two separate meetings were held under the auspices of the Building Trades council and Trade and Labor assembly, respectively. This year the parade was a real "union" demonstration, organized labor from all the general organizations taking part. One thing, however, arose to mar the prospects of a harmonious parade and threatens to partly mar the unity of the celebration. This is the old-time disagreement between the two organizations of musicians—the Chicago Musical society and the American Musical union.

The former, which belongs to the American Federation of Labor, has the larger support, but the latter body, which is an assembly of the Knights of Labor, believes it has a right to furnish music for organized labor; but the Chicago Musical society says it hasn't and that if any of its bands attempt to enter the parade the Chicago Musical society bands will strike then and there.

A meeting of the N. C. A. Board of Directors will be held at the Association Rooms at 9 A. M. Friday, Sept. 18.

If you were to enter a lodge with only your present knowledge you would go there to assume unconsidered obligations. You would not marry in that way. Business arrangements that may terminate in a few years are considered and reexamined for some time. Opposite methods distinguish the lodge even to the degree of outrage.

Rev. P. B. Williams has begun a lecture campaign in California. Let all our readers in that State arrange meetings for this popular advocate of the cause. Write to his address at Portland, Ore., telling him of the prospects for meetings in your neighborhood. Remember that his cause has the right of way, having behind it our Lord's great commission.

Rev. Wm. Fenton has started on a lecture tour of Minnesota. We hope every friend of the cause in that State will bestir himself at once to open as many doors as possible for the presentation of this all important reform. If they cannot secure a church or hall let them invite their friends and neighbors to a parlor meeting that they may enjoy a hand-to-hand conference with this earnest and well posted advocate of our reform. Write to him at once to 74 South Robert St., St. Paul.

That which prolongs and fortifies the curse of secretism is that the agitation is suppressed in so many pulpits. Even in radical reform churches the same object is accomplished by cunning manipulation of committees. We recall an instance in a high church court of a committee reporting on National Reform and expressing the vital relation of this reform to the cause of anti-secrecy. But this was all stricken from the report by recommitting it and adding to the committee a prominent liberalist.

PROF. JOHN A. WILSON, D. D.

Of all the ministers of the United Presbyterian church, perhaps the most relentless opponent of secret societies is Dr. John A. Wilson, of the Allegheny Theological Seminary. On another page we give an extract from his sermon on college fraternities preached at Wooster, Ohio. In it he said, "In earlier years I was frequently solicited to join this, that or the other society, but I never saw the day when I would not rather have put that hand into the flame than to have raised it in taking an oath in violation of an engagement I had already made with all the force and solemnity of an oath."

Dr. Wilson was born in 1839, in Western Pennsylvania. He grew up on a farm and worked his own way through college, graduating at Westminster. He read law with B. H. Brewster of Philadelphia, and practiced for two years. He then studied theology in Allegheny, and was pastor four years in Beaver, Pa., ten years in St. Louis, and seven years in Wooster, Ohio. He was chosen professor of Apologetics in Xenia Theological Seminary in 1884, but declined. In 1893 he was elected professor of church history in the Allegheny Theological Seminary, and since then has filled this chair with eminent acceptance to all. He was moderator of the General Assembly in 1894.

Dr. John A. Wilson was one of the directors of Monmouth College many years ago, when that institution was greatly infested with the curse of college fraternities, and it was largely through his influence that they were banished. The writer well remembers that when a student at Monmouth, the old Eccritean Hall was more than once the scene of exciting conflicts between the fraters and the antis. Sometimes the members, drawn up in battle array, armed with clubs, shovel and tongs, and it was feared even with more dangerous weapons, seriously imperiled the students' lives. The directors backed by the Illinois Synod finally succeeded in stamping out the fraternities, even, as was intimated, if it necessitated a change of the faculty.

In the agitation of special reform issues we are often accused of riding hobbies; but when God by his providence saddles a hobby and bridles it, and brings it to the front, it is our business to ride it, and we cannot get around it. There are many indications that God will soon bring the anti-secret question to the front. Along this line the people will be ranged in line of battle, just as they were thirty-five years ago on the slavery question. That was one of the hobbies that God saddled and bridled, and which we had to ride through to Appomatox.

State prison convict Griswold is a Freemason in good standing in the lodge, though not in good standing as a citizen. He has no standing in the lodge, which expelled him for being a good citizen of Connecticut, where every voter must take an oath of loyalty. Yet, that class of Masons who advocate the institution which many other Masons wish they could annihilate, desire to have those not in the secret believe that Masonry is opposite what its relation to the bad citizen Griswold, and the good citizen Jackson, proves it to be. The proof was needless, for it only followed Masonic law.

Ancient sun worship consisted largely of bowing, kneeling or making prostrations toward the East where the sun appears. Sun worship of the same kind appears in Eastern paganism at the present time, and in Western paganism developed in the Masonic lodge. There is no Mason who is not, at least in this physical sense, a sun worshiper. What pagans do Masons do; some of them are pagans, and others are apparently in a considerable degree paganized in their ideas, which become conformed to the principles of Masonry. In order to continue what it is, Masonry must necessarily retain sun worship.

A. G. Wolfenbarger, of Lincoln, Nebraska, says: "In these times of intense feeling on the money question, men of all parties have seen fit in greater or less numbers to break away from the political ties that have bound them to a single party for a quarter of a century or more. I have entertained pronounced convictions on the money question, which need not be discussed here, but I have come to see that the abandonment of the warfare against the legalized liquor traffic may imperil even the foundations of the republic, and leave us at the mercy of a band of anarchists and outlaws bred by this monstrous crime. I look upon this question of prohibition as involving more of money, more of patriotism, more of bread and butter, more of human happiness and hope, than any other question that has been raised by a political party in the history of our government. The destructive waste of the liquor traffic is more in a single year than all the gold, silver and paper money in the United States."

GO WORK TO-DAY.

REV. CHARLES H. HUNT, PH. D.

My grace is sufficient for thee,
I will never leave nor forsake;
Of love all abounding and free,
Thou art heir; then why not partake?

CHORUS.—My soul shall exalt in the Lord;
Take what is promised to me,
The exceedingly great reward,
Abounding, joyous and free.

My hand I will never withdraw,
Thy foot shall be guided by me;
All things now work for thy good,
I have planned thus eternally.—CHO.

O child, enter thou the field
Where grain is wasting to-day;
Do not to thine enemies yield,
But reap and bind for aye.—CHO.

If joint heir with the Blessed One,
Who was given for all mankind,
Shall not thy day's battle be won,
And thy soul its portion find?—CHO.

DROP YOUR BUCKET WHERE YOU ARE.

BY S. W. FOSS.

"Oh, ship ahoy!" rang out the cry;
"Oh, give us water, or we die;"
A voice came o'er the waters far,
"Just drop your bucket where you are."
And then they dipped and drank their fill
Of waters fresh from mead and hill;
And then they knew they sailed upon
The broad mouth of the Amazon.

O'er tossing wastes we sail and cry,
"Oh, give us water or we die!"
On high, relentless waves we roll
Through arid climates for the soul;
'Neath parching skies we pant for breath,
Smit with the thirst that drags to death,
And fail, while faint for fountains far,
To drop our buckets where we are.

Oh, ship ahoy! your're sailing on
The broad mouth of the Amazon,
Whose mighty current flows and sings
Of mountain streams and inland springs,
Of night-kissed morning's dewy balm,
Of heaven-dropt evening's twilight calm,
Of nature's peace in earth and star—
Just drop your bucket where you are!

Seek not for fresher founts afar,
Just drop your bucket where you are;
And while the ship right onward leaps
Uplift it from exhaustless deeps;
Dull not your life with dry despair
The stream of hope flows everywhere—
So, under every sky and star,
Just drop your bucket where you are.

DANGER FROM THE MINOR ORDERS.

BY REV. F. M. FOSTER.

The tippler carries his badge on his nose—the Mason on his lapel if he wishes to be known as such. The tippler's badge admits him to the saloon, where he is received by the keeper with smiling countenance, loud laughter and language which comes up through the saloon, as a great chimney, from the pit. The Mason's badge admits him through darkened rooms and locked doors and past sentries until he stands under blazing chandeliers in the rich furniture of the lodge, surrounded by others who, on similar errands, have thought it wise to shield their deeds from view. I was amused while in the mountains this past summer at a man who, as he would start for town, would put on a gold "square and compass," strutting about as a rooster. These men are anxious to be known—at times—as "lodgers," but appear to entertain but little anxiety to be known as members of the church.

The number of societies is legion. Our danger is not so much from the large ones as those of more recent date. They present all kinds of pretexts as reasons for public favor and patronage. The insurance feature is one of Satan's masterpieces. Not a few are drawn in by this net. Some Covenanters have yielded, accepting membership in the Royal Arcanum for these supposed worldly advantages. One congregation in New York lost several members through insurance in this society. Rumor has it that not all sessions in said church regard membership as a violation of the church's covenant. Those who will read the obligation must be convinced that the Royal Arcanum is a secret society, and membership in it inconsistent and wrong.

These small societies, such as the G. A. R., labor unions, college fraternities, etc., are more dangerous than Masonry itself. They slay more good people and teach the doctrine of secrecy. It has come to pass that you can hardly buy or sell, or be a mechanic, or get work unless you bow to Baal. Blow the trumpet in Mount Ephraim for there is noise of war! The enemy is invading our liberties!

COLLEGE SECRET FRATERNITIES.

EXTRACT FROM A SERMON PREACHED AT WOOSTER, OHIO, BY PROF. JOHN A. WILSON, D. D., OF THE U. P. THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, ALLEGHENY, PA.

In my indictment against college fraternities I have several counts:

1. It is a violation of the law of our church. This argument I address as a United Presbyterian to United Presbyterians.

In the XV article of her testimony our church declares, "that all associations, whether formed for political or benevolent purposes, which impose upon their members an oath of secrecy, or an obligation to obey a code of unknown laws, are inconsistent with the genius and spirit of Christianity, and church members ought not to have fellowship with such associations." This article all who come into our church accept and promise to obey. How they promise one thing and do another I do not attempt to explain. I am not the keeper of any one's conscience save my own; but I am sure I could not have a conscience void of offense under like circumstances. In earlier years I was frequently solicited to join this, that or the other society, but I never saw the day when I would not rather have put that hand into the flame than to have raised it in taking an oath in violation of an engagement I had already made with all the force and solemnity of an oath.

Many say, and no doubt sincerely believe, that our position as a church, with which they suppose they are in hearty sympathy, does not forbid membership in these little societies. This is a mistake. Our church believes that a little viper is a viper, and that a little wrong is a wrong. The fact is, the whole horde of these secret organizations, numbered now by the hundred, are the children of one fruitful, frightful mother—a mother that Milton might have had in mind when he described the mother that kept the gate of hell. As Dr. Lytle says, "they all belong to one kingdom, the kingdom of darkness; they all bear a family resemblance, and are animated by one spirit, the spirit of selfishness; and they all have a strong fellow-feeling for each other." If you want proof of this just step on the corns of one of the family and watch them all wince and make wry faces.

2. But I pass on to the second count in my declaration, viz., the guards of secretism naturally and properly subject to suspicion those who erect them. The Saviour lays down the broad principle, "He that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light lest his deeds should be reproved; but he that doeth truth cometh to the light that his deeds may be manifest that they are wrought in God." There is something in our nature that responds to that declaration as the eye responds to light. Take a little child; it is frank and ingenuous. When does it first seek to conceal? When it becomes conscious of having done wrong. So, I say, the resort to secrecy warrants a suspicion of our conduct, and is strong presumptive proof that there is something wrong. This suspicion is strengthened as the barriers to free inspection are multiplied. It seems to me we may lay it down as an axiom that only deeds of darkness demand the dark.

If a man walks right up to your door by day or by night, you take him to be a straightforward man, there for some honest purpose. But if you see him skulking round the corner of the henhouse or the coal shed you assume and know that he is on no honest errand bent, and you get down your shot-gun.

Let some strangers come to our town, rent a room, close the blinds, bolt the doors, come and go stealthily, using mysterious raps and passwords, would not even the authorities of Wooster suspect that there was something rotten back of all that mystery, and insist on seeing into that room? By what principle of sound reasoning can we come to a different conclusion with respect to those associations that require bolts and blinds to prevent open, honest inspection? even building their halls, as at Yale, without a window.

Our suspicion is still further awakened and warranted by the restiveness and petulance of these orders under criticism. If they are a good thing, founded on the adamant of truth and virtue, should they not rather court assault, that they may show their power to resist it, like the granite promontory that hurls back in foam the billows that beat against it. We may discuss everything under heaven or above it, save and except secret societies. They and they alone say as the devils said to Christ, "Let us alone; what have we to do with thee?" Political parties are criticised unmercifully, and a novice in political science can see that this is one of the surest grounds of hope for political purity. On the church, from turret to foundation, is turned the white light of criticism. This is right, and the Christian church courts it.

MOTIVE OF THE LODGES.

BY PROF. W. H. DAVIS.

The lodge enables men to bind themselves together to accomplish an object. The strong and well and young bind themselves to protect themselves. They claim to be benevolent in character. The primary object of an action determines its moral quality. As theirs is to help the strong, excluding the weak, it cannot be benevolent, or well-wishing and well-doing in the ordinary sense. It must be a benevolence in an exceptional or technical sense. This technical sense must be the doing of good to a certain class, to the exclusion of others. Whatever the pretended cause, this is the real and ultimate inducement to join any secret order. Dues and assessments form a basis of distribution of their "benevolences," and the unfortunate among themselves receive help.

The churches distribute their vast sums of benevolence in their gigantic missionary operations for a half of one per cent of their collections, while the average well-ordered lodge expends perhaps seventy-five per cent of its dues to distribute its benevolence. This is a most unfavorable showing, but is accounted for, not by dishonesty, but by the different objects lying as a basis of benevolence. One is a benevolence world-wide, proceeding from a desire to do good to our fellowmen; the other a benevolence that centers in self and will go no farther than the impetus of the money which self will contribute. It has behind it no throbbing heart of sympathy with the needy to carry it forward.

The reasons then for entering the lodge, and purposes to be accomplished, must be different from that of benevolence or any approach to it. Is it not to help themselves into the many places there are to be filled? and this, too, regardless of the claims or merits of others outside of the lodge? I wished to show the tendency of the lodges to lift their men into place. But it is useless to make argument. It is too plain for demonstration. It is confessedly what they enter the lodge for. It is the prime motive power to hope, without merit or above those with whom they are in competition, to be lifted into place by the influence of the lodge, and the help of its individual members.

The time may have been when the "mysteries," so-called, had an influence over men, but in our day of light these fooleries of the lodge, that, if shown, would make them a mock and a derision, have very little to do in attracting and holding men in the secret conclave. Greed, greed, greed is the basis of the whole of it. Can I have this office? Can I get this trade? Can I occupy this pulpit? The how, as to these questions, is the "initiatory and referendum," the fountain spring and the dead sea of the muddy and seditious waters of secretism. Alas, that the minister is greeted at the conference with a Masonic grip and sent away to a good appointment. □

Men may be so desperately ignorant as to think this is right, but how can such men be clear as Gospel ministers? Beloved in the Lord, young men about to enter the ministry, shun this Edenic viper that will mar and dwarf your ministry, and in the end ruin your soul, because you have not done this work singly for Christ, but for place and power.

BLEEDING KANSAS.

BY S. C. HART.

BATTLE OF NEWELL'S MILL—GOVERNOR GEARY'S ARRIVAL.

After Lane and Harvey had returned from their demonstration on Lecompton, Lawrence, including the refugees that had fled there from Pro-slavery fire, pillage and cruelty north of the river, could muster perhaps 800 men on the 6th of September. Unknown to the Free State people, the Pro-slavery leaders were endeavoring to get up a magnificent carnival of destruction in the Territory while Woodson was acting governor and things in general were favorable, lest a new governor should arrive whose humanity would assert itself and retard the consummation of their cherished hopes.

Lawrence, as usual, was the objective point, but Lane and Harvey were there and had already just spoiled the advance movement in this direction by driving back the Missourians and causing the dispersion of Richardson's Pro-slavery militia.

Not yet willing to give up that cherished project of one terrible final carnage before cold weather, and, if possible, before a new governor should arrive, Palmer's South Carolinians, who now arrived at Lecompton, returned to the north side to continue depredations about Newell's Mill, where Newell was dragged around by the neck and hung till nearly dead. Simultaneously Capt. Robertson was depredating between Lecompton and Leavenworth, and a party had sacked the "Falls," all doubtless to draw Harvey and Lane away from about Lawrence and Lecompton; for at this very moment, as these Pro-slavery leaders and officers doubtless knew, extensive military preparations were going on all along the Missouri river for the final Pro-slavery campaign and slaughter of 1856.

The new governor, Geary, was now on his way to Kansas, and saw these warlike preparations and bodies of armed men at every landing along the borders of Kansas and Missouri, but may not have found out why it was. Arriving at Fort Leavenworth, Sept. 9th, he was soon besieged by the Free State refugees from Leavenworth City, three miles south, and the country about there for protection, who poured into his ears their tales of woe.

While this was transpiring, Pro-slavery squads passed by, bragging of being mounted on stolen horses, confirming what he had heard, and some of the refugees pointed out horses that had recently been stolen from them. Presently a detachment of United States troops came in and complained to the commander that the prisoners he had sent them with to a certain place had been taken away by an armed force. And still others came in with tales of outrage committed on them by Pro-slavery bands. At this the commander sent troops after the marauders, but when they returned with them Geary had gone, and the commander told them to consider themselves under arrest; and, as usual, that was all there was of it. Geary stayed at Ft. Leavenworth only a day, starting for Lecompton at ten A. M., Sept. 10th, with a few friends and a small escort.

All along the route were melancholy evidences of the anarchy that prevailed. Houses were deserted and only chimneys of some standing, some smouldering, and armed bands of horsemen fleeing at their approach, all of which told of the missrule that had fallen on the Territory. The party arrived at the river north of Lecompton at midnight on the 10th, and were permitted by the Pro-slavery patrols to pass over.

In view of the pitiful pleading of the refugees that were fleeing to Lawrence from fresh deeds of cruelty, Lane and Harvey concluded to carry the war across the river into the enemy's country. Col. Harvey and Capt. Hull started with a force toward Leavenworth, but hearing on the 10th that Capt. Palmer with his "Palmetto Guards," from South Carolina, was depredating at Newell's Mill, now Oskaloosa, he traveled all night and came upon them in camp at three o'clock the morning of the 11th. They were completely surprised and all captured but Palmer and Lieut. Morral, who were a short distance away from the main camp. Harvey and one of the enemy were slightly wounded.

Sixty stand of arms, a number of fine horses, two wagons and provisions were taken: also their South Carolina flag of red cotton cloth with a single star, and inscribed on one side "South Carolina," and on the other "Southern Rights." It was placed in the Kansas Historical Department at the State House afterward at Topeka. While Geary was nearing Lecompton, and Harvey was nearing the South Carolinians, Judge Lecompte was examining the political prisoners that had languished in prison now for about four months, with a view to making some humane disposition of them, as he would not be able to give any good reason to a new governor for retaining them.

On the 10th Charles Robinson was released on $5,500 bail. John Brown, Jr., who had been unlawfully held without indictment, on $1,000 bail. Others were released on different sums and the docket was cleared. The same evening they were taken to Lawrence and met a mile out of town by the "Stubbs" and other military, and escorted into town mid great cheering and rejoicing of all the people. The Unitarian minister, the brother-in-law of Hoppe who was scalped, and other prisoners who had been taken at the same time, all returned, by happy coincidence, the same evening, and the people rejoiced till a late hour.

Geary was formally welcomed by the officials at Lecompton on Sept. 11th. They volunteered the information that "the lamentable state of affairs was owing entirely to the unprovoked aggressions of Abolitionists, and urged with an earnestness, calculated to admit of no denial, a continuation of the policy adopted by Woodson, till the Free State element should be thoroughly subdued or exterminated within the Territory."

But Geary had already seen too much of the effects of this policy, and on the 12th issued a proclamation disbanding all the militia then under arms in the Territory, and providing for the enrollment of nothing but bonafide resident militia. All other bodies of men whatsoever were ordered to forthwith disperse or leave the Territory.

PURE OR CLOSE COMMUNION.

BY REV. JOHN BROWN, A. M.

All the members of the apostolic churches were visible saints—regenerated and baptized. Christ commissioned his apostles to make disciples, to baptize them, and to teach them to "observe all things whatsoever he commanded." Matt. 28: 19. In strict accordance with this commission, on the day of Pentecost, Peter preached the Gospel, and they that "gladly received his word were baptized, and continued steadfastly in the apostles' teaching and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers." Acts 2: 41, 42. Paul asks the Romans, "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?" and he assures the Galatians that "as many of them as had been baptized into Christ had put on Christ." Rom. 6: 3; Gal. 2: 27. The same idiom occurs in Acts 3: 24, where the phrase, "as many as," means "all." The Colossians also were both regenerated and baptized. Col. 2: 11, 12. Not only were all the members of the apostolic churches baptized, but baptism was required as a prerequisite to the Lord's Supper, in all ages, down from the apostolic age to the Reformation. The first that introduced open or free communion, I believe, was Socinus.

It is sometimes asserted that John the Baptist was not baptized himself; but on what authority does the assertion rest? None whatever. He may have baptized himself, and then others; as Abraham circumcised himself, and then his household. Gen. 17. Be that as it may, however, it does not follow that Christians may observe the Lord's Supper without baptism, any more than that Jews might eat the Passover without circumcision. It is expressly said, "No uncircumcised person shall eat thereof." Ex. 12: 48.

If baptism commenced with John, it would have been impossible for him to have been baptized by a baptized person, because there would have been no baptized person to perform the rite; but whether John baptized himself, or whether he was ever baptized, if he received his commission from God that would not invalidate the baptisms performed by him.

As a general rule, it is the duty of Christians to be baptized and to observe the Lord's Supper; but when ritual observances conflict with moral duties, the ritual must give place to the moral. As the Sabbath was profaned in cases of necessity (Matt. 12: 5), so baptism or the Lord's Supper may be neglected when they come into competition with "mercy," either to ourselves or others. Matt. 12: 7. For example, it is a moral duty for Christians to come out of corrupt churches. "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? and what part hath he that believeth with an unbeliever? and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? For ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people: Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord." 2 Cor. 6: 14–17.

But they may not find a scriptural church within their reach. In that case they must either stand alone or unite with a purer church whose members may not be baptized, in their estimation, or observe the Lord's Supper by themselves, as a few disciples do in this place who came out from the ritualistic Lutheran congregation. If Christians act up to their knowledge, though they may "eat" the Lord's Supper "otherwise than it is written, the good Lord will pardon everyone that prepareth his heart to seek God, though he be not cleansed according to the purification of the sanctuary." 2 Chron. 30: 18, 19. John Knox speaks of a layman "who baptized his ain bairn" because he could not find a priest in whom he had confidence to do it.

A REVIEW OF FREEMASONRY.

PART OF AN ADDRESS BEFORE THE OREGON STATE CONVENTION AT PORTLAND, AUG 27, BY SECRETARY P. B. WILLIAMS.

In the Pacific Mason of March, 1896, the editor, in closing a six-column attack on the coast agent, says of secret societies:

These are all organized for good purposes, such as insurance, mutual aid, relief in sickness, and the like. Freemasonry, their venerable parent and model, will easily survive the misguided agitation against it, and will succeed in its mission of promoting friendship, morality and brotherly love.

We think it can be clearly shown that leading Freemasons agree with us that Freemasonry has stamped its impress on most, if not all, the secret societies of the land. As to the venerable character of this parent, we are not so well agreed, except it be as to its spirit or philosophy.

According to Masonic authority Freemasonry originated in Egypt, and was patronized by Egyptian priests, who connected their mythology and their metaphysical speculations with the institution, resulting in that combination of science and pagan theology which in after ages formed such a conspicuous part of the principles of Freemasonry. It is further contended that the Eleusinian mysteries and Dionysian mysteries, or in other words, that the Dionysia and the mysteries of Eleusis were societies of Freemasons, tinctured with the doctrines of Egyptian mythology.

The Eleusinian mysteries were instituted in honor of Ceres, the Panathanea in honor of Minerva, and the Dionysian mysteries in honor of Bacchus; and they were modeled upon the mysteries of Isis and Osiris. In treating the subject we shall be governed by the statements of Masonic authors themselves, and deduce our conclusions accordingly.

Mr. Cross, in his Masonic chart, says:

"The striking similarity among the external forms of these secret associations, and the still more striking similarity of the objects they had, are strong proofs that they were only different streams issuing from a common fountain."

Again he says:

"Those who were initiated into the Eleusinian mysteries were bound by the most awful engagements to conceal the instruction they received and the ceremonies that were performed."

It is not necessary to quote further at present touching the origin of this society. The fact is indisputable, if Masonic testimony be true, that it is of pagan origin, having pagan rites and ceremonies; such rites and ceremonies as characterized the worship of Ceres, Minerva, Bacchus, Isis and Osiris! The following statement confirms the position that the "mysteries" so often spoken of as "ancient" were pagan mysteries:

"About the beginning of the fifth century Theodosius the Great prohibited, almost totally extinguished, the pagan theology in the Roman Empire, and the mysteries of Eleusis suffered in the general devastation."—Cross's Chart, p. 220.

Here is an acknowledgment of the fact for which we contend. But let us hear Cross still further:

"It is probable, however, that these mysteries were secretly celebrated in spite of the severe edicts of Theodosius (against pagan rites, ceremonies and theology), and that they were partly continued during the dark ages, though stripped of their original purity and splendor. We are certain, at least, that many rites of the pagan religion were performed under the dissembled name of convivial meetings long after the publication of the Emperor's edict; and Pesellus informs us that the mysteries of Ceres subsisted in Athens till the eighth century of the Christian era, and were never totally suppressed."

The Egyptian mysteries gave rise to those of the Eleusis, and had a still nearer affinity to the mysteries of Freemasonry. What the "ancient purity and splendor" of these mysteries, rites and ceremonies were, which are respectfully spoken of as the mysteries of Egypt, of Eleusis, and of Dionysia, may be inferred from the worship, the sacrifices, the hymns and the dances necessary in the festivals of Ceres, Minerva and Bacchus.

But we are told that "the sacrifices, hymns and dances" have no place in the society of Freemasons. This may be so now, but how long has it been so? And what of those "ancient rites and ceremonies so pure and splendid?" Mr. Cross says:

"It cannot be expected that in the reign of Polytheism just sentiments of the deity should be entertained; and much less that the adherents of Christianity should bend their knees to the gods of the heathens."

Of course not! But then the institution was begotten in Egyptian darkness, was conceived in Polytheism, was born in pagan mythology and was costumed in heathen rites and ceremonies.

Mr. Cross continues:

"The primitive worship of the ancients was gradually perverted into the worship of those symbols by which true worship was represented."

What "symbols" were these "by which the true worship was represented?" Why did Mr. Cross not tell us? "True worship" indeed! Were the Egyptians true worshipers? But we will hear him again:

"But when revelation had disclosed to man correct ideas concerning the Divine Being, the society of Freemasons banished from their mysteries these useless rites which the ancient brethren of the order incorporated in their mysteries and remodeled their ceremonies upon this foundation; that there is but one God, who must be worshiped in spirit and in truth."

So Freemasonry, from being Polytheistic, now became deistic. And yet we are told more than once in the chart of Mr. Cross, as well as by other standard Masonic authorities, "It is not in the power of any man, or body of men, to make innovations in the body of Masonry." Let the reader please observe the contradictions of this high Masonic authority. In the very next paragraph he says:

"We shall have occasion to consider Freemasonry when connected with the idolatry of the heathens, when devoted to the Church of Rome, and when flourishing under the milder influence of the reformed religion; for as every human institution is subject to great and numerous variations, so Freemasonry is effected by the progress of civilization by the nature of the government under which it exists, and by the peculiar opinions and habits of its members."

So it is not now, nor has it been, that immutable thing it claims to be. But as we are treating now of its origin, we will not continue this line of remark.

According to some Masonic authors it is older than Christianity, older than the Mosaic economy, and even older than any of the writings of the Old Testament, for it "precedes the records of authentic history." It comes up from the hoary ages of the past, invested with all the charms of mystery. Its gates are all closed to the outside world, and no one is permitted to partake of the "tree of knowledge" which grows in the midst of the sacred enclosure. Its foundation, we are told, is geometry, and "it is so far interwoven with religion as to lay us under obligation to pay that rational homage to the deity which at once constitutes our duty and our happiness." It is, therefore, a religious system, having its own peculiar rites, ceremonies and obligations, of which we shall speak more particularly hereafter.

REFORM NEWS.

PROHIBITION DAY IN BOSTON.

BOSTON, Mass., Sept. 11, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Yesterday was pre-eminently Prohibition day in Boston and Massachusetts. The narrow and broad guage parties each held State conventions with ratification speeches, and were addressed by their respective national standard bearers. It was a great pleasure to listen to these chieftains in a great reform, and to note the clean and dignified personality of the men, and the chaste and intelligible utterances into which they coined their sentences.

While I have a decided preference, both champions are entitled to the credit of respectful mention of their opponents in all parties, and the entire absence of epithets or accusations of insincerity or intentional disloyalty to the highest good of the people. Reports from all parts of the State were very encouraging, and the more than 225 accredited delegates who rallied around the Levering and Johnson standard fairly bubbled over with enthusiasm.

The "single plank" meeting was held in Y. M. C. A. hall, and the authorities kindly allowed me the use of a table on which to display our tracts. Considerable interest was shown in our leaflets, and although I thought my supply ample, every one was taken, and quite a number stopped to make sure that one of each kind had been secured. Circulars for the prize essay found their way into the hands of the leading members, and one Prohibitionist of long standing and a well-known Congregational pastor in New England said, after reading the circular, "I think I shall try for that prize."

Slowly but surely the work moves forward. Let all New England friends help together with prayer, and as many as "give willingly" let them send their offerings to push on the good work.

JAMES P. STODDARD.

A SABBATH ON THE SEA SHORE.

REV. W. B. STODDARD AT CRESCENT BEACH.

BOSTON, Mass., Sept. 10, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—There is a saying that "He who will observe providences shall not want for providences to observe." Looking over the field, seeing so much to be done, so many open doors, and so few to work, one needs special divine guidance that he may be where God would have him. A number of providences seemed to indicate Boston as the field for my labor for a few weeks.

Crescent Beach is becoming very popular as a seaside resort. Its close proximity to the heart of Boston gives opportunity to the toiling thousands who are too poor to seek recreation elsewhere. During the heated term its beautiful sand is thronged with the thousands who come to breathe its refreshing air or bathe in the surf.

For years it has been the custom of "Father" Green and his co-laborers to go on the Sabbath, and during the week as they might be able, with the "Gospel Carriage" and "throw out the life line" to such sin-wrecked as might drift to these open-air meetings. Many a perishing one has thus been rescued.

Since it has come into its possesion, preaching has been strictly prohibited. It is generally believed that this is the work of the Catholics. The open-air services have always been orderly. Nothing but orthodox Protestantism has been preached. The meetings are held now as near the Beach as the workers are permitted to come.

Your agent was invited to preach twice at these meetings. The day was all that could be desired and and the attendance large, all things considered. Lay College, an institution preparing young men for evangelistic work, is near at hand. In the pulpit of the chapel of this institution I found Rev. Gunn. He preached an instructive sermon on the offices of the Holy Spirit. Bro. Gunn has written for the Cynosure, and is in full sympathy with us.

In response to his invitation I occupied the pulpit in the evening, and took occasion to strike the lodge in such a way as to at least arouse some of the lodge adherents. I trust the spirit of God so brought home the truth as to convict them of the evil. Several expressed sympathy and thanks for my address. The friends in Boston and vicinity are holding on and will be ready for a forward move when the call comes for the convention.

At Brockton the lodges have been deceiving some of the Swedish friends, offering cheap insurance and other temporal advantage. They have led a number into minor orders. Some of the pastors discover the evil effect in the lives of the initiated and as faithful shepherds are warning of the danger. A postal card from Rev. V. N. Thoren, pastor of the Swedish Lutheran church, Brockton, dated Sept. 7th, reads:

DEAR BROTHER:—I have announced a lecture for you in my church for next Thursday, 7:30 P. M. You are welcome to us, and we hope there will come much good from it.

There are probably ten thousand Swedish people in Brockton, and we are expecting a good time to-night. There are more boots and shoes manufactured in this city, I judge, than any other in the United States; and strange to say, I found some of the manufacturers very busy. As long as children are born barefooted, it is thought there will be a demand for shoes, whether the gold and silver be much or little.

Several cheering letters come from the Pennsylvania field. Bro. E. W. Hollopeter, of Rockton, Clearfield, Co., wants some lectures. Will not some of the friends in that section correspond with this brother and arrange for a series of lectures at a future date? Vice-president Myers writes encouragingly regarding the State convention. I shall, D. V., be engaged in the preparation for this during much of October and the early part of November.

I expect to address a union meeting of the young people of the Ohio Synod Lutheran churches of Baltimore, Md., in the lecture room of the large, new Lutheran church, 1101 Fayette St., Baltimore, on Thursday eve. Sept. 24th. Every Cynosure reader and your friends in that city expected. Let no one feel discouraged; Truth never dies. Our God stops the lions' mouths and leads his children. There are many victories for us in the fall and winter to come. Let every man be found at his post.

W. B. STODDARD.

FROM OUR KANSAS COLPORTEUR.

YATES CENTER, Sept. 7, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am aware of the fact that some people go around carrying dark lamps instead of Lodge Lamps. When I leave one town for another, I enquire first for the ministers. When I met with two M. E. ministers at Norborne, Mo., I took them to be faithful embassadors for Christ. I introduced myself as your agent and showed them my books. I also read some Scripture passages and some extracts from M. N. Butler's Hand Book. I explained the difference between their paid-for charity in a lodge of a select few of the strong and able-bodied of this free country, and they whom our Lord helped and admonished us to help. Then I described their horrible Masonic oaths of the third and seventh degrees, and was sorry to tell them that I sometimes met ministers of the Gospel of Jesus Christ that are in these lodges, although they professed to give light to the world. I told them that I believed this was the cause of so much spiritual deadness in the churches, and why they were filled with so many women and so few men. I explained that it was largely because of these secret rings, cliques and monopolies that the wealth was fast going out of the hands of the masses and going into the coffers of the rich.

They inquired if I had ever been in any of these secret orders. I told them that I had been entered, raised and passed in the Masonic order, and I knew what I was talking about for I had tried it, and that I had the same reason to believe that the same was true of all the others.

They doubly assured me there was not a word of truth in any of the N. C. A. expositions, and earnestly exhorted me not to disturb the handmaids of the church that were doing more real spiritual and charitable good than even the church itself. I warned them of the general rising sentiment all over the land, and how that spirit was centered in the National Christian Association, and in the glowing pages of the Christian Cynosure. The very essence of opposition to all these orders was that they were anti-Christian and in opposition to the moral, spiritual, political, financial and judicial welfare of the country.

But they denied it all, and denounced us as a set of cranks. I begged an opportunity to make mention of the work in their prayer meeting, but they refused. I attended the meeting and asked the privilege of reading extracts from the books, but they would not permit me. Then I said, will you please permit me just to read the Bible, and I will not add a word of comment; but they said you can't do it, it will create discord. I was reminded of the words of Christ: "Can the blind lead the blind?" Let them alone, they both shall fall into the ditch.

I find many of this class of ministers. Are they lights set on a candlestick? No. Are they lights put under a bushel? No. They are lights put in a bulls-eye-lantern, looking everyone to his own quarter for his own gain. Yea, they are greedy dogs which can not bark. They are unfaithful shepherds that care only for the fleece. Paul says of such shepherds, Rom. 16:17,18, "Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned, and avoid them; for they that are such serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly, and by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple." Again he says in Phil. 3:19, "For many walk disorderly," etc.; they are the enemies of the cross of Christ, "whose end is distruction, and whose God is their belly."

The next day W. F. Smearingin, of E. Camden, Mo., after I had shown the Odd-fellows' exposition to him and other brethren on the street, said: "Yes, that is just like we do in the lodge." He was not a minister who is leading people down to hell, but he was actuated by a principle of honesty between man and man, I tell you an institution which makes liars out of ministers is surely of the devil who has transformed himself into an angel of light. In Kansas City I found Rev. R. N. Countee grandly unfurling the banner of reform. He is a faithful watchman on Zion's walls. J. T. CULLOR.

MORE ABOUT THE PORTLAND CONVENTION.

PORTLAND, Ore., Sept. 3, 1896.

Among the ministers in attendance, I would mention Dr. Wallace, Rev. G. E. Henderson and Rev. Stevenson, of the United Presbyterian church; Rev. T. Thomas, of the M. E. church South; Rev. N. C. Mower of the Free Methodists; Rev. T. Wiles of the Wesleyan Methodist; Rev. G. W. Ingalls, Baptist; Bishop Dillon, P. B. Williams, L. F. Clark, Walter Reynolds, W. W. Gregory, A. Marchion and T. W. Ward of the United Brethren; Elwood Scott of Friends church and Rev Geo. Newton of the Adelphi mission.

Hon. Reuben Gant and wife, of Philomath, Oregon, were in attendance at all the sessions.

Dr. Wallace stood by me grandly in arranging for and carrying out the convention. Rev. N. C. Mower did all in his power to help make the convention a success. Rev. John Skans, of the Swedish Lutheran church, also assisted, and regretted very much that he was called away to Astoria so he could not attend. He advertised it well, and quite a number of his people were present. Rev. L. F. Clark related an amusing incident, which shows how children view the subject of secret societies.

While engaged at Ranier some time ago in constructing a church, a little boy where he boarded was urged by his parents to join the junior order of Good Templars. Night after night they urged the little fellow, six years old, to go down and be initiated, at the same time cautioning him to be careful not to tell anything about what occurred in the lodge. Finally the little fellow asked, "What is there wrong about it you don't want me to tell?" A sensible answer surely for a child or even an older person. Rev. Clark very gently rebuked the parents, by suggesting that ultimately they might be coaxing their child to stay at home rather than coaxing him to go to a lodge.

Bishop Dillon awakened thought in some minds not accustomed to think on the subject. A number of letters were received from parties regretting that they could not attend the convention, among whom I mention Rev. W. H. Pruett, Weston, Ore., Arthur I. Chapman, Vancouver, Wash., William Adams, Salem, Ore., Rev. S. Mathew, Canby, Ore.

The Oregonian and Telegram had reporters at the convention. They were by request furnished with a copy of our minutes and some of the addresses. When their reports came, they were very meager, but rather fair.

When I called on the city editor and received the manuscript I said, "You gentlemen touched the matter very lightly considering the amount of material you had on hand. I guess it dosen't take much of this kind to do you. But, if you live a few years longer, you will be more anxious for the truth on these lines, for ultimately it will be popular like the anti slavery movement." The editor looked out from under his glasses and smiled gracefully.

Some very good friends as usual forgot the time and consequently were not there. The friends in Seattle should begin to plan now to make the next convention a success.

P. B. WILLIAMS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

OUR ORIENTAL GUEST, LI HUNG CHANG.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 9, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Several Washington ministers referred in their sermons Sabbath day to the visit of the Chinese statesman, and Rev. S. J. Smith, pastor of the Central M. P. church made "Our Oriental Guest, Li Hung Chang," the subject of an interesting discourse, taking his text from Job 1: 3: "So that the man was the greatest of all the men of the East." While speaking in the kindest terms of our recent visitor, Mr. Smith made it plain that he did not think our Christianity had been sufficiently impressed upon the mind of Li. For instance, he said: "When Earl Li visited Russia and Germany and England he was shown the great standing armies and the huge battleships and was no doubt inspired with the greatness of those nations. Here too, in New York, he was shown our great men-of-war, and when he came to the capital he was taken to see the navy yard and the Capitol.

"It would have been much better had he been taught our greatness as Queen Victoria once taught the cause of the greatness of England to a visiting African prince. She handed him an open Bible and told him that there and in their institutions of learning was found the greatness of civilized countries." In conclusion Mr. Smith said: "A great deal has been said about the customs and habits of the distinguished visitor, but it is safe to say that if any of us were to go to China, from their standpoint we would not have acted more intelligently. When he returns to China, however, it is to be hoped that he will not attribute our greatness to the number of our warships or our beautiful public buildings, but will report it as founded on the Bible, our public schools and free institutions."

"Universal Peace and How to Realize It," was the interesting subject upon which Rev. Dr. Henry, for some years a missionary in China, preached at the Church of the Covenant, last Sabbath, taking his text from Psalms 72: 7. "In his days shall the righteous flourish; and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth." Space prevents anything like a connected report of the eloquent sermon, but the following is too good not to be quoted: "Peace is the crowning blessing of Christ in heaven and on earth. It has been the ceaseless cry and watchword through the ages and laws of time. It is heard above the din and roar of fiercest battle. Its advent is longed for in the midst of party strife and turmoil. It is prayed for by the weary souls torn and tossed about in the struggle of every-day life. It is the one thing hoped for and dreamed of by the poets and the sages—the golden era of the race.

What a blessed time will that be when the nations shall beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning hooks. What does this mean? It means that there will be no more war. It means that Africa, Europe, Asia and America shall disband their armed forces and that peace will universally abide. Millions of men will be restored to peaceful avocations and hundreds of millions of dollars be employed for the betterment of the race. That the vast and yet unused natural resources will be utilized; that the masses will be uplifted; that the condition of the poor will be ameliorated, and prosperity will begin a long and lasting reign.....Peace councils, councils of arbitration and all like organizations and movements are noble, but their efforts will be spasmodic only, unless the Gospel of the Prince of Peace is taken as the sure and only guide in all endeavors to bring about a cessation of hostility among the nations of the earth." C. A. S.

AN OPEN LETTER.

HARTFORD, Ohio, Sept. 6, 1896.

Hon. Wm. McKinley, Canton, Ohio:

MY DEAR SIR:—You are the nominee for the highest office in this nation. As such, you expect the thoughtful scrutiny of your life as to your fitness for the office by all the people. As one of that number, it is my duty and privilege to do this. Your clean public life has ever been a cause for rejoicing and a source of pleasure to your many friends.

But is it true, as announced by the press, that you are a Knight Templar Mason? Can it be? If true, do you not realize that the oath of the seventh degree in Masonry is rank treason against the state? That so long as you do not openly and positively renounce Masonry, you are a traitor to the government, for the life of which you struggled and suffered in the war of 1861-1865? Can a man swear on naked bended knee, before an altar upon which rests an open Bible, that he will espouse the cause of a brother Mason in any difficulty, even to murder and treason, and not be a traitor to his country?

You, with all other seventh-degree Masons, have taken this oath. Have you ever renounced it? According to your own statements in your letter of acceptance, the greatest need of this nation to day is confidence. Restore confidence and prosperity must follow. With confidence restored, the coining of a few millions of silver, even though large profits may accrue therefrom to a few, can not possibly hinder the prosperity of a nation like this.

Can there be any permanent confidence in any nation where the government is in the hands of men who have taken such an oath? Never. Why not come out openly upon a platform created by God himself, the King of kings and Ruler of all nations; a platform embodied in the national Constitution, "freedom and equal rights to all men," renouncing the bidden works of darkness, and let the nation elect you as a free man, and thus qualified by the highest possible power, govern a nation of freemen? Is it not through the ignorance of the masses on this subject that you can possibly hope to gain this high office? Could the nation know to-day that you have taken, and still adhere to, such a treasonable oath, do you think you could be elected? Never.

I was for years a member of the Masonic order without the slightest realization of these awful facts, but my eyes were opened, as hundreds and thousands of others are being opened, and to-day God calls on all men everywhere to repent.

Masonry is a system of religion. It is grossest idolatry. Church and state are to-day within its power.

Most kindly and truly,

A SECEDED MASON.

LETTER FROM A FOREIGN MISSIONARY.

SECUNDERABAD, India, Aug. 15, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The regular visits of the Cynosure are enjoyed more and more. It seems to me as I read its teeming columns, that the cause of anti-secrecy is gaining ground among thoughtful people. Yet it is perhaps true that secrecy abounds more and more. I say it with shame that among Methodists the number of Freemasons increases. The great argument is influence. Yes, we can easily see what the influence amounts to in conferences. I can point to men who, on their own merits, could hardly hold on to a place in conference at all, who are, or have been, kept in the best appointments.

Each year that passes by confirms me more and more in the conviction that the Holy Spirit of God has no use for secret societies, and that Christians are altogether out of place in them.

In 1894, when in America, I was in a little town of not more than 500 inhabitants in Illinois, with two churches and six secret societies. Week-day meetings had to give place to the lodge meetings right along, the best members of the church were in so many lodges. The choir, the prayer meeting, the teachers' meeting, etc., all had to go, unless the pastor and wife could run them. Lodge dues are all promptly kept up, but the official members of one of the churches have been regularly lying to each successive pastor for years, promising to give him what they do not. They rob their pastor and run the lodges. We tried to have a revival there, but it were easier to powder a mountain with a feather. In the work of the National Christian Association I think there is danger of underestimating opportunities by measuring possibilities by the number of public open doors to churches and congregations. I sometimes fear that modern religious work in America is taking on a form that permits of nothing unless it is in halls or churches with a crowd to work on by public methods.

Here in India we are almost wholly shut off from all such effort. Build a church among the heathen, and while some may look through the window, none will enter. No place for eloquent pulpiteers. We have to go out and hunt up our hearers, and in most unceremonious ways preach Christ to them; not often, except in large bazars and towns, to crowds of any size. Here is a man mending his cot with three friends sitting by. By tact he is asked a question or two about his work. While he works you preach Christ for a few minutes. Before you go, sing and pray with them. We go into the bazar, we find the merchant settling accounts with customers. Afterwards, and without the least formality, sitting or standing, you tell them all of the great day of accounts. Thus, at the public well, by the threshing floor, in the work shop, by the way, anywhere, anyhow a congregation of one or one hundred. A text in anything you see people doing or suffering. Always eternally at it.

This is the way most of our missionary work in India is done. I have seen some men missionaries in late years so well trained for their work (?) they could not and would not do this sort of work. A church or hall, a platform or pulpit, and a congregation must be had. Is not this the drift in America? What seems to me to be wanted in all religious and reform work is a revival of old-time religious methods, when little dependence was put on the preacher, but everybody worked. Then class-leaders saw more conversions in a quarter than modern ministers in a year.

Let every Christian, business man, minister, Sunday-school teacher, farmer, carpenter, tinker, tailor, shoemaker, clerk, mechanic, seamstress, servant maid and stranger, witness, work, give and pray, and the cause will take on new life and make grander strides against the fearful odds we have in this battle to face.

But, and if it need be that secrecy goes on triumphing more and more, still we should praise God, world without end, for the honor of being a witness against the evil. There is no such thing as defeat in the battle of the Lord. Though outnumbered and reviled for apparent failure, we win, for the battle does not end till God's voice is heard in the judgment. There is no place for secret societies in heaven. If people are determined to keep them up, there is another place where I suppose they will be welcome. Some lovers of secrecy, if their love continue as strong as in this world, will go there of choice, for the sake of lodge meeting and fellowship.

My family are at present in Wheaton. I am hoping that my three boys and two girls may get there a basis for the truth that will forever put them among the anti-secrecy lovers of truth and righteousness.

If any friends should chance to visit Wheaton, it will be a favor to a lonely missionary away in India if they will visit the dear boys and girls and their mother. (She is sound in her politics.) Prof. Fischer will be able to tell them where to find them. Or if any be interested to write my wife, her address is, Mrs. E M. Ward, care of Prof. Fischer, Wheaton, Ill. Our work in India goes on apace, but we have undertaken a mighty task. God is with us. I am glad secrecy does not trouble us out in backwoods fields in India. It is, however, an evil of growing dimensions in every city in the land. I met Masons in America who said a heathen, an infidel, Mohammedan or fireworshiping Parsee could not be a Freemason. I had to meet this lie often. They are all of them in regular, full, sweetest fellowship with their Christian brethren in lodges all over this land. I can cite scores that I know personally.

As in years gone by, so now, we have no other dependence but on the promises of our God. God helps us help ourselves; and moves whom he will to send us the rest.

My wife, while living at Wheaton, is open to any invitations for missionary meetings not too far away. Her nearly sixteen years here in India has given her somewhat to say, especially to women. She has also for sale, "Our Work," a history of our work in India up to 1894. Price $1 a copy. May the blessing of God be on the cause and all its friends. I love the N. C. A., though about all I know of it is through the Cynosure.

HOW THE CHURCH AND LODGE DIFFER.

NORTHWOOD, Ia., Sept. 7, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—A very striking difference between the church and lodge was seen in Minneapolis and St. Paul at the recent encampment of the G. A. R. and Knights of Pythias. Who ever saw the saloons decorated with flags and words of welcome when church bodies assemble in a city? The saloon-keepers know that this would be wasted time and money. But the saloon-keepers knew their business at the late encampment.

The saloons were decorated most beautifully. The words: "Welcome G. A. R.," "Welcome K. of P." could be seen in brilliant letters on all saloons. The saloon-keepers know their people. They know the character of the nightly gatherings of their people, and they know what they want. Nor were they mistaken. The "blue coats" could be seen in long strings parading into the saloons. Red eyes and loud talking told the story where they had been.

Some "brethren" must undoubtedly have felt that they were not in the best of company. We wonder how the reverend gentlemen of this class enjoy the brotherhood? There is beyond any doubt a difference between the church and the lodge as demonstrated above. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

OUR NATION'S GREATEST NEED.

FAYETTEVILLE, Pa., Aug. 20, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have been deeply impressed for some time that our greatest need as a nation is an acknowledgment of God's authority and law in our Constitution. We need to humble ourselves and confess our departure and forgetfulness of God, and implore his mercy and forgiveness, and ask his help, his counsel and guidance.

We have been prospered as a nation. We had a Centennial, then a World's Fair, and I do not remember that the advocates for these demonstrations once said, we will do it to God's glory; we will show to the world how much God blessed and helped us and made us a great nation. No, it was all done to show how great we have become ourselves. God was to have no part or lot in the matter. And when the opening prayer was offered, God's Son was ignored. Shame on the man that offered the prayer, and shame on us! But it was not strange that God should be so dishonored and insulted, for it was not intended to be to his honor; no, he was not to even share the honors.

We are taught in God's Word that whether we eat or drink we shall do it to his glory. And if so in these small things, how much more in the greater things? If in individual concerns, why not in national? We are to do all to his honor. If there could not be a Centennial or World's Fair in God's name and to his glory, then there should not have been any at all. One of the fruits of the World's Fair was the Congress of Religions, and it was just such fruit as we should have expected.

The Centennial and World's Fair were conceived by the worldly element, and fully controlled by the same. They were acquiesced in by the church, and patronized by church members. If the world controls a movement it will always try to please the world, and it knows that, as a rule, the church members will likely remonstrate, but, they will at least "gracefully yield," as an ex-eastern bishop put it some time ago when writing, that we should gracefully yield to majorities in church and state. Yes, gracefully yield to the control of worldly institutions and partake of their revels, and so become partakers of their sins.

We attribute the hard times to many causes, but I believe the great cause lying back of all causes is, our rejection of God in the fundamental law of our country. That what we look upon as the cause of our hard times and confusion in our politics, are but the effects of the main cause, a Godless Constitution. We may profess and acknowledge God in many ways as churches, families, institutions and individuals, but these will not atone for our continued rejection in our Constitution of King Jesus.

These may be considered as some of the material used in the building or structure. But we may build ever so finely, use the best material, but if the foundation is sand, what of all our solid material built upon it? When we build a house we first see that the foundation is solid and secure. The greater the building intended, the more secure is made the foundation.

Now we as a nation have left out the chief corner-stone. Not only so, but we have not gone down at all upon the rock. Our magnificent structure is founded upon the sand. Some day the flood will come; the sand will give way, and the nation will fall, and how great will be its fall. May Almighty God help us to excavate the sand and get the solid rock under before our building is demolished.

If we reject him he will also reject us. He has but to let us alone and we will see how we shall end. We are like the church in Revelation. In our own estimation we are rich, increased in goods, and in need of nothing, and do not know that apart from God we are poor and miserable and wretched.

See how prolific our soil to produce all kinds of obnoxious weeds, well adapted, without God's cultivating hand, to produce the deadly nightshades, secret societies by the legion that reject the Son, and therefore reject the Father also. They lead to covenant breaking, hatred of good men, drunkenness, murders and all evils known to man. Let us consider where we are drifting. Should we not call upon God to save us? for we cannot save ourselves. I believe every church in the land should call special meetings simultaneously for humiliation and prayer, and ask God's mercy and guidance in our national affairs, and make us willing as a nation to recognize him in our Constitution.

THE LODGE IN THE COURTS.

DE KALB, Ia., Sept. 6, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I was much pleased with the picture of Bro. Phillips in the last Cynosure. I love all the N. C. A. workers because of their loyalty to Christ. I trust none of us will ever be deceived by the enemy in ambush, or by "spiritual wickedness in high places." This gives prestige to the abominable Christless lodge in the church. But the Lord is raising up a standard against it.

We knew an Odd-fellow twenty years ago with whom we were on intimate terms. He cut some valuable oak trees and hauled them to a sawmill. The man who owned the timber did not belong to any secret society, as did the other, but he commenced a suit at law against him and won the case, making it very expensive for the one who took the timber unlawfully.

In talking with my Odd-fellow friend in regard to being beaten, I asked him why did not the other fellow's lawyer help you slyly. His answer was, "Oh, he has renounced the order."

It is claimed we "can't know anything about the lodge." But the Bible is true, and we know its teaching is right on this line, as well as on all other subjects, for it says: "By their fruits ye shall know them." And from the answer he gave it was not difficult to see what the fruit would be at maturity, and that for a lawyer to renounce the order blights the fruit in justice.

HOW TO CARE FOR BEDS.

The Washing of Blankets and Dusting of Mattresses.

Mattresses, blankets, pillows and other articles of bedding require much care to be kept odorless and clean.

The main enemies to mattresses are dust, damp and moth, and frequent brushing must be given them, for in an incredibly short time they will harbor dust all along the edges and where the button is fixed. A loose cotton cover over the mattress, made to button neatly at one end, also goes a long way toward keeping it clean. This can be washed and changed as often as need be without much trouble or expense. It is very important to air all the bedding thoroughly. Every article should be daily taken off and laid separately over a chair, and a strong current of air should be allowed to circulate through the room before the clothes are replaced. The mattress should be turned daily and from end to end, as this insures it being worn more evenly and not sinking in the middle.

Blankets are a difficulty to many people, mostly because they cannot make up their minds as to how often they should be washed. In many houses they are only washed once a year; but somehow that does seem rather too rare a proceeding. On the other hand, it is really not necessary to have them washed more than twice a year; but they must have proper care in the interval in the shape of airing, shaking, etc. A washing machine is very good for the purpose, especially as they should never be rubbed by the hand. The water should be only lukewarm, and a little soap well lathered in the water is all that will be required. Wring the blankets very dry through a wringer, shake them out, and wash again in the same way, wringing each time, until they are quite clean. Do not rinse them, but pull them into shape and hang them out in the sun, which is a great help to preserving a good color.

How the Letter "I" Came to Be Dotted.

The letter "i" has not always been dotted, for Dissraeli, in detecting a literary forgery, says, "Besides that there were dots on the letter 'i,' a custom not practiced until the eleventh century." At this time, however, the dot over the letter "i' took the form of an accent and was only used when the "i" was doubled or in juxtaposition with "u." In the twelfth century the accent was occasionally added when "i" was combined with other letters, but it only became universal when the invention of printing made it convenient to retain both forms. In the fourteenth century the accent begins to change into a dot, the earliest occurrence of "i" being in a manuscript dated 1327.

How the World's Goldfields Have Developed.

Victoria and California were both phenomenally rapid, the former having, however, an undoubted claim to the first position in this respect. Gold was first discovered in California in Colonel Sutter's mill race, 1848. The production for 1849 was $5,000,000; it jumped up the following year to $50,000,000, and reached its maximum in 1853 at $60,000,000. By July, 1849, there were 15,000 Mexicans and Chileans on the spot, and before the end of the year 45,000 Americans and 5,000 foreigners were working at the diggings. Gold was discovered at Ballarat, Victoria, in August, 1851—that is, two years later than in California—and the rush to Australia resulted in a yield of gold which quite eclipsed that furnished by the western state. The second year's mining, 1852, yielded no less than $168,000,000—that is, a larger sum than had been made during any one of the four years in which the California mines had climbed to their greatest annual production. It is estimated that the latter have yielded $700,000,000 and that no less than $1,150,000,000 has been obtained from Victoria.

How the Chinese Identify Criminals.

The method taken by the Chinese to identify their important criminals is to take an impression of the balls of their thumbs. This is done by pressing the thumb on a slab covered with a film of printer's ink, and then pressing it on a piece of white paper. Their idea is that all arts of the features may change, but the thumb never can, and they say that their method affords a much more easy and certain means of identification than our plan of taking the criminal's portrait.

How to Care For Lamp Burners.

Make a strong soapsuds with borax and good soap and let it come to a boil. Then put the burner in the boiling water and let it boil for some time. Then take an old toothbrush and brush all the little openings, lastly drying on a soft towel. Your brighter light will repay you for the pains.

How to Commit Suicide.

Contriving to keep in a continual worry about something or nothing. Giving way to fits of anger. Being irregular in all our habits of sleeping and eating, going to bed at midnight and getting up at noon. Eating too much, and that which is too highly seasoned. Neglecting to take proper care of ourselves and not applying early for medical advice when disease first appears.

The Christian Cynosure.

REV. M. A. GAULT, - - - EDITOR.
WM. I. PHILLIPS, - - - PUBLISHER.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1896.

MINISTERING AT BAAL'S ALTARS.

The Ram's Horn of Aug. 15 gives an illustration of a church converted into a temple of Baal with a prominent minister officiating as priest. It says:

"Rev. Dr. H. W. Bolton, pastor of Centenary Methodist church, Chicago, conducted a service for Odd-fellows at the Wicker Park Methodist church, North Robey street and Evergreen avenue, lately. Members from five lodges gathered in the rooms of Hall of Victory encampment No. 108, at North Robey and West Division streets, and after donning their regalia marched in procession to the church."

ANOTHER MAFIA MURDER.

The Boston Record of Sept. 4th publishes another murder by a secret order which the laws of our land seem powerless to suppress:

"A crime which looks like the work of the Mafia society was committed at the corner of Front and Flint streets, Brooklyn, at 1:45 A. M. An unknown Italian was shot down by a volley of gun and pistol shots from a window of a building near. The man was taken in an ambulance to the Brooklyn hospital by policemen, who heard the shooting.

"It was found that he had been shot over the heart and in the stomach and that the wounds would prove fatal. A squad of police from the Fulton street police station, sent to the scene of the crime, arrested seventeen Italians who were found in the building from which the shots were fired. One of the men arrested said the man was forty-nine, and a barber, but he did not know his name. He said the barber was a victim of the Mafia."

REMARKABLE RELICS.

The Christian Nation, in writing up the account of the recent Edinburgh convention, gives this incident that must have brought vividly before the audience the times of Scottish persecution:

"There was present Mr. A. B. Todd, author of 'Homes, Haunts and Battlefields of the Covenanters,' and when the 'Relics of the Martyrs of Grossgellioch' were presented, he told the story of them. The relics were a lock of hair and two bits of clothing. One point in the story is a remarkable quality in the bogland which strangely preserves the life-like appearance of bodies buried therein. Four young Covenanter lads who had been attending a Conventicle were returning a long distance to their homes, and lay down to rest on the bogs of Crossgellioch, where they were overtaken by the dragoons, and only one of them escaped. The other three suffered martyrdom because they persisted in their adherence to the Covenants. Their bodies were soon afterwards buried where they fell. One hundred and forty-two years thereafter, when excavations were being made for the erection of a monument, the bodies of the three lads were discovered as perfectly preserved as when first buried. The lock of hair was cut from one, and from each of the other two a piece of their clothing."

DR. JOHN A. WILSON ON COLLEGE FRATERNITIES.

The following are the closing words of the very excellent sermon on college secret societies by Dr. Wilson, an extract from which is given on our second page:

"The University of Lewisburg, Pa., used to be infested with fraternities. But in the fall of 1865 the college was blessed with a marked revival of religion. At once a strong opposition arose to the secret societies. Many of their best members withdrew and became leaders of the opposition to these societies whose evil influence they had experienced. At the suggestion of the faculty the trustees banished fraternities from the college, and the testimony is that subsequent experience has amply justified their action.

"Oh, that the spirit of God might come in power upon our college, that these young men and women, in whom are so many possibilities for good or ill, might be lifted up from the low, selfish, scheming, sinful, destructive societies that are warping the character and dwarfing the souls of so many who had else been generous, gifted, forceful members of society.

"Dear young men and women, 'Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.' However you may feel to day, the time is not distant when you will say that he who speaks to you to-day was your true friend, and that this message was words of truth and soberness.

"You profess to be in pursuit of science, and science always courts the light. You profess to be disciples of Christ, and Christ is light, and bids you let your light shine before men, not put it under a bushel or behind a bolt. Pray and labor to be like Him and worthy of Him, and then, I feel assured, you will 'have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them.' Be not minions but be men. Set your minds on something higher than childish secrets and selfish plots. Let your souls instead, as Milton puts it, be inflamed with the love of learning and the admiration of virtue, inspired with high hopes of living to be brave men and worthy patriots, dear to God, and famous to all ages.

"If you are afraid to stand alone, remember you are surrounded by a great cloud of earth's noblest characters as fellow-witnesses against this sinful, senseless, seductive system. In our harbor in New York a colossal statue of Liberty holds up a brilliant light to guide incoming millions to a haven of freedom and opportunity for all. May that beacon be an emblem of the generation to which you belong, yourselves uplifted by liberty, guiding men to the only true, grand freedom, the glorious liberty wherewith Jesus Christ makes men free."

FREEMASONRY.

It will interest the friends of the anti-secret cause to read the following estimate of the movement from the Sidney, Wash., Independent of Aug. 1. Such an editorial in a leading paper on the Pacific slope shows how much the people need light on this vital issue:

"It is a somewhat strange experience to hear one who pretends to be a Christian and is supposed to have charity for all things condemn such a time-honored friend of morality and purity as Masonry. We came in contact with a party of men recently who had a copy of the Christian Cynosure and were discussing Masonry pro and con. It was a little more than amusing to listen to some of the comments.

"Masonry has stood the test of ages and no words of ours would add particularly to its grandeur; neither would the empty words of one who knows nothing of its tenets take away one jot of its power for good. All societies and all papers that work against it amount to nothing, except the Roman Catholic church, as compared to those who are friendly towards it.

"The Christian Cynosure is a publication devoted to the overthrow of secret societies. It has been engaged in that work 30 years and has but 5,000 subscribers. There are in all 25 publications antagonistic to secret societies, with only 40,000 subscribers, while there are 300 publications which represent these societies with one and a half million subscribers.

"The anti-secret societies outside of the Roman Catholic church number 100,000 members, while the enrolled only of the United States of members of secret societies number 6,000,000. This is not counting those favorable towards it. Think of it! An army twice as large as the one which fought to save the Union. It means a host as large as the population of Canada, Washington, Oregon, Montana, Idaho, Utah, Colorado, Nevada and Wyoming. Let them pass a given point at the rate of four a minute and it would require eight years and three months for them all to pass.

"Is it true that a secret thing is of necessity an evil thing? Why we are surrounded by mysteries, by secrets. How is that one part of a blossom is red, the other white? It is a mystery. Is it evil? Botany has secrets. Nature is nearly all secret. True, you can find them out if you have the ability and are found worthy. So you can the secrets of Masonry. Secrecy is the safety of the home. The curtains are drawn, shutting out from its sacred precincts the curious world. Is the home an evil institution?

"Go to what place of the world you will, there you will find the staunch, God-fearing men—men who are willing to help an erring or fallen brother—members of secret societies. The brightest men who fill our pulpits, our chairs in colleges, and all the responsible positions of life, have not thought it beneath their dignity to learn the mysteries of Masonry. That they have felt repaid argues of itself when they remain loyal till death to their favored institution."

PARKHURST NOT A JEREMIAH.

The Church Militant of New York thus radically comments on the great municipal reformer of that city:

"Parkhurst's defense of human laws, while ignoring the law of God is bearing its natural fruit in the city administration, which he has helped into power. The reform mayor has invited a delegation of saloon keepers and suggested that they voluntarily close their saloons on Sabbath until one or two o'clock P. M., leaving them to infer that, in this way, they may escape trouble in their violation of the Sabbath law during the rest of the day. The State he thinks may modify its laws in their interest. But how about the law of God? Is Mayor Strong competent to rewrite the Decalogue, and silence the thunders of Sinai? Has God abandoned the throne of the universe?

"Which of the ancient prophets dared to sanction the violation of the divine law out of courtesy to wicked rulers or lawless subjects. Such men in ancient times were known as false prophets. Evil rulers in ancient Israel always found such prophets to support their evil policy as our rulers do to-day. The true Jeremiah said: 'Therefore, thus saith the Lord concerning the prophets that prophesy in my name and I send them not; by sword and famine shall those prophets be consumed; and the people to whom they prophesy shall be cast out in the streets of Jerusalem because of the famine and the sword; for I will pour their wickedness upon them.'

"Parkhurst is doubtless a prophet. In words he resembles Jeremiah, but in deeds he copies Balaam, the son of Beor, who made Israel to sin. Like him he has seduced our Israel and led them to fornication with aliens to our commonwealth."

THE SILVER KNIGHTS.

SQUANDERING THE PUBLIC MONEY.

A dispatch from Washington, D. C., dated Sept. 4th says:

"The Typographical Union is after Senator Stewart again for the wages he is paying the compositors and pressmen who are employed upon his weekly paper, the Silver Knight. There was considerable agitation on this subject in labor circles last winter, when the Senator promised a committee from the Typographical Union that as soon as he 'could make proper arrangements' he intended to remove his plant to Washington, hire union men and pay union wages.

"While they are at this subject the Typographical Union would do well to look into the organization known as 'The Silver Knights,' and report upon its usefulness to Senator Stewart and the rest of mankind. As I understand it, the Silver Knights are a semi-secret order, of which Senator Stewart is supreme commander. For two years or more a number of bright, shrewd young men have been travelling about the country establishing lodges, installing their officers and initiating their members under the Senator's direction. Candidates for admission go through a form of initiation, sign a constitution, take an oath pledging themselves to do everything in their power to promote the cause of free coinage, and pay $1 as initiation fee. Fifty cents of that dollar goes into the pocket of the organizer, and the remainder into the pocket of the supreme commander, Senator Stewart. The annual dues are 50 cents, of which one-half, I believe, is retained for lodge expenses, and the remainder is forwarded to the Senator.

"Last winter a friend of mine, who used to be a member of Congress, went out as an organizer, and told me that he was making about $2,000 a month; that is, he was initiating about 4,000 persons a month into the Silver Knights. As he turned over half of the fees he collected to Senator Stewart and the several other organizers did the same, the old gentleman must have had a large income from that source. At the headquarters of the treasurer of the national committee in New York it is said that St. John, the martyr, expected Mr. Stewart to bear a large share of the expenses of the Bryan campaign, but his subordinates are not so confident of his intention to do so. W. G. McLaughlin, Mr. St. John's assistant, says that when that estimable gentleman entered upon his duties as joint treasurer of the democratic and silver committees Senator Stewart said to him:

"'You go right ahead, St. John, and pay the bills for the St. Louis convention and the campaign, and I will stand behind you.' I am informed that Mr. St. John's disbursements up to Sept. 1 exceeded $40,000, and that his receipts have been less than $10,000. The balance has come from his own pocket. But the Democratic committee isn't alone in its poverty. The reason of Mr. Hanna's prolonged stay in New York is to secure funds and he is having a dismal time of it.

"He spends very little of his time at the rooms of the New York branch. He goes down town every morning with Mr. Bliss, the treasurer, and goes about asking for contributions and getting but a small per cent of what he expected. It is amusing to watch the expression upon Mr. Hanna's face when you show him a newspaper paragraph about the manner in which the trusts and monopolies, the bankers and the bond syndicates are shoveling money into the Republican treasury; and if you want to see the tears come into his eyes hand him a copy of the Chicago paper that contained the story about the $4,000,000 campaign fund. He has excellent self-control, like the Irishman's owl, and does not say anything."

RARELY PUBLISHED INCIDENTALS OF THE SECRET LODGE ROOM.

Our esteemed contributor, Josiah W. Leeds, of Philadelphia, sent the following letter to the Local News of West Chester, Pa. It was published in the issue of Sept. 4th of that paper:

"EDITOR NEWS:—In one of the several articles upon secret societies contributed to the News by the writer of this several years ago, there was a brief reference, I think, to the tragedy which occurred First month, 10th, 1890, in the Masonic lodge room at Huntington, West Virginia, when pastor J. W. Johnston, of the M. E. church South, was killed while undergoing initiation into the Royal Arch degree. A tall, heavily-built man, he was being lowered, blindfolded, into a vault thirteen feet deep, when the rope broke, injuring him so badly that he died two days later, after very great suffering.

"Not much publicity was given to a tragic incident occurring in 1883, and related by Col. Enoch T. Carson, of Cincinnati (who had himself taken the highest degree in the Masonic order), concerning a certain candidate who, when taking the Master Mason's degree, fell to the floor dead, his heart having been affected by a sudden nervous shock. A resident of Detroit, who is both an ex-Mason and an ex-Odd-fellow, gave an account to a person known to me of three tragedies occurring during the initiation of candidates into the lodge. Two of these were being initiated as Knights of Pythias, one in Indiana, near Evansville, and the other in this State. The second one referred to met a shocking death by jumping upon supposed rubber spikes, which proved to be real iron spikes that had not been removed.

"The third above case happened at Terra Haute, Ind., during the initiation of a candidate into a new secret order, some of the newly installed dignitaries from Indianapolis, the capital, being in attendance. The candidate, when being tobogganed rapidly down a plank, in order to escape the plunge into a tank of water at the bottom, threw himself suddenly to one side, with the result that his back was broken. A late account says: 'The poor victim still lingers, and will linger, a suffering invalid during life,'

"The latest instance of the foregoing character which has become public, occurred only about a month ago, at Waltham, Mass. The Associated Press sent out telegrams relative to the affair, but the following abstract from the Boston Evening Record may be accepted as correct:

"'Edward Arch and Frank Preble, candidates for iniation into an Orange lodge, were taken in accordance with the regular procedure into an ante-room, where all except their underclothing were removed and these were rolled up to the knees and elbows. White overalls were then put on and rolled likewise up to the knees. Arch was taken, blindfolded, into the main hall and dragged around the room, several members lashing him with rattan whips on the bare legs till he had long red lines on him. Then he climbed upon a ladder which, being pulled out from under him, he fell to the floor. Next he was told "the serpent will bite you," whereupon a highly-heated iron was put to his bare breast. Preble received about the same treatment, except that the initiation actors tied about his neck something that seemed to be a bag of stones, and, jumping on him made a very painful bruise on his back. About nine days elapsed before his wounds healed. The case was tried in the district court, before Judge Luce, and the above testimony, and more, concerning the outrages being fully substantiated, the defendant lodge members were fined thirty-five dollars each. Without controversy the offense was one of combined cruelty and vulgar tomfoolery.'

"I was interested to see the statement that Presidential candidate Bryan is a member of two secret orders, that McKinley belongs to seven or eight, while Levering affiliates with none. As upwards of a thousand millions of dollars, whether it be gold, silver, nickle or paper, is annually expended on liquors that intoxicate, the writer of this article feels that he would prefer to cast his ballot for one who is both clear of the sustentation of that business and of oath-bound lodges. Too much are our politics dominated by those who are equally at home in the liquor saloon and in the secret lodge room; yet it is hardly this kind of home protection that will make happy our firesides and save the country."

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Editor Gault preached at Medaryville, Ind., last Sabbath.

—Thomas G. Crooks, of Blanchard, Iowa, and his son, A. E. Crooks, who is a student of Allegheny Theological Seminary, were welcome visitors at our office last week.

—General Secretary Phillips made a trip to Detroit and Boston last week on business connected with the N. C. A. This week he visited Springfield, Ill., on a similar errand.

—Miss M. Louise Stoddard, daughter of Rev. J. P. Stoddard, and Rev. Henry Lochlind, both of Boston, are announced to be married Thursday, Sept. 24, at the home of the bride. The Cynosure invokes upon them the Divine blessing.

—Elder J. F. Browne, who in former years has done much faithful work for our Association, has recently joined the Christian Co-operative Company at Atlanta, Ga. During the summer he was engaged in work with Rev. H. L. Hastings, of Boston.

—Rev. T. M. Chalmers addressed the Ravenswood prayer meeting recently and received a handsome donation for his work in Messiah Mission. Every congregation should be interested in the conversion of the Jews, and send for Bro. Chalmers to lecture on this subject.

—The Labor Advocate of Washington, D. C., an exponent of the secret labor organizations, gives this advice to lodge members: "Keep sober on meeting nights or stay away. Give your union your first and best thought. Always ask for label goods. This creates a demand for union products and union men."

—Mrs. Margaret McFarland, of Medaryville, Ind., writes: "I can say truly the Cynosure is a welcome visitor to us all. I send each copy to my son George in Oklahoma. It is one of the best papers published, and I am thankful that so many faithful, fearless witnesses have courage and grace to speak out against all secret orders."

—Rev. W. A. Campbell, pastor of the U. P. church at Mount Auburn, Ia., writes: "I wish you or Mr. Stoddard would take a trip through Iowa this winter, and spend a Sabbath with me. I will take up a collection for the good cause if you preach for me showing the great sin of secret oath-bound societies. I will gladly entertain you and take you to and from the depot, and treat you the best we know how."

—Evangelist B. Loveless, of Wheaton, was wonderfully blessed in his two-weeks' meetings recently at Brandon, Buchanan Co., Ia. There were about sixty conversions and forty-one were baptized and united with the M. E. church. Some drove thirty miles to the meetings, and on Sabbath there were more than 3,000 in attendance. Bro. Loveless did not shun to declare the whole Gospel, even to warning against the Christless lodge. One brother, H. A. Mitze, of Keithsburg, who was a Knight of Pythias, renounced the lodge and was an excellent leader in the song service.

—John G. Wooley's exposition of the first Psalm at the Omaha Young People's Convention was decidedly the best thing at that meeting. He quoted a part of the declaration of their last U. P. General Assembly as follows: "To license the liquor traffic is a sin against God and a crime against humanity; being morally wrong, it can never be made legally right, and the time has fully come when Christians should unite their efforts, regardless of previous political affiliations, for its suppression. No political party has a right to expect, nor ought it to receive the vote of a Christian, so long as it stands committed to the license policy or refuses to put itself upon record in open hostility to the saloon."

—Resolutions of respect for the memory of the late George Wallace were read in the Sabbath-school of the college church at Wheaton, on Sabbath, Sept. 6. His death occurred at his father's in Sharpsburgh, Tuesday, Aug. 11th, and the sad news cast a gloom over the congregation, Sabbath-school and college in which he had so long been a devoted worker and student. The resolutions recorded "our high appreciation of him as an earnest, consistent Christian, who was always interested in the Lord's work, and whose ruling motive was to be spent in his Master's service. And that we will endeavor to let his example incite us to higher and nobler living, depending on his and our Saviour for the needed grace."

—The American Friend says: "We talk of hard times, and attribute the pressure to everything else but our own foolishness. We excuse ourselves from doing God's work because no money can be spared, and yet the great revivals of the Gospel never suffer from hard times and lack of money. Our annual bill for chewing gum would run all our foreign missions in the world for four years, and yet how few who are contributing to the great sum for chewing gum would feel that they had any money to bestow to help Christianize those who are living and dying in the darkness of superstition. With all our poverty we consume over $7,000,000 in tobacco smoke every day of the year, and more than twice that amount is spent on intoxicating liquors, and a large part of this enormous expenditure is made by men who would declare that they could not afford to give any money to widen the realm of light."

—The Catholic Review of Sept. 5th says: "The Knights of Pythias at the biennial session of their Supreme Lodge and the national encampment of the organization at Cleveland, Ohio, during this past week, Supreme Chancellor Walter B. Ritchie said in the course of his report: 'The Catholic question has in some of the domains materially affected us. We have lost some for another reason.....For a month or two after the propaganda to the effect that the sacrament should be refused by the Catholic church to all who retained membership in this and certain other orders, there was much agitation. It is a question that does not need discussion upon our part. Our position is well defined, and it is a matter to be disposed of entirely by the individual members who belong to the Catholic church.' That is a sensible way to look at the decision of the church, unless the order could see its way to wipe out the features—liturgy, oaths of absolute obedience, etc.—to which objection was made. If it, however, insists upon retaining them, then the Catholics who belong to it must take their choice of church or lodge. They cannot be Catholics and Knights of Pythias."

How the Roses Grow.

How do the roses grow?
If you would know,
Trust when days are dark and drear:
When hope faileth, do not fear;
Bear the wintry time of year,
For so
The roses grow.

How do the roses grow?
If you would know,
Believe the trial is not in vain
When the pruner's hand brings pain;
Loss oft means the blossoms' gain,
For so
The roses grow.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Sept. 20. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—The need of home missionary work. —Isa. lxii, 1-12.

The need of home missionary work lies principally in the fact that there are so many people in our country who are not Christians, who are not saved. We speak of our country as a Christian nation. As generally applied to nations, this is true, and yet in Christian America there are whole sections and entire peoples that are not Christians. Many of these have not the opportunity to hear the gospel, and these millions express our greatest missionary need. Twelve millions of children in America are not in our Sunday schools, and 40,000,000 of our inhabitants are not members of any church.

A glance at some of those who are not Christians will demonstrate how great is our need.

1. The American Indians. There are in America today 250,000 Indians, distributed in every state in the Union, but living principally in Indian Territory. The general impression is that the "Indians are rapidly dying out." This is a mistake. The birth rate is increasing. One tribe has doubled its numbers in the past 15 years. These native Americans need the gospel of Christ. They have special claims upon us because of the treatment that they have received in their own country.

2. The mountain whites of the south. We speak of America as a Christian nation, and yet within a 24 hours' ride of New York city there live almost 2,000,000 of native born Americans in the mountains of the south whose moral and spiritual condition should appeal to every American heart. These people also have special claims upon us. Their forefathers conquered the wilderness and the savage and were foremost in the Revolutionary war. They were a religious people, being Scotch-Irish Presbyterians. By losses in the Revolution and because they were opposed to slavery they were driven into the mountains and compelled to obtain a living by hunting, fishing and rude farming. Removed from civilization, they have sunk into a moral and spiritual degradation that is indescribable. What a great need for missionary work!

3. The freedmen of the south. In 1619 slavery was introduced into this country. It existed until the civil war, and the result was not only the physical bondage of several millions, but, in a large measure, mental and moral degradation, accompanied or followed as a result of physical degradation. The negro race is rapidly increasing in numbers, 500 of them being born every day. They are here to stay. They cannot be removed to any other part of the world. The United States government could not build ships fast enough to deport them. They need two things to make their presence a blessing—education and Christianization—another great need for missionary work.

4. The irreligious masses of our great cities. From the time that the descendants of Seth followed a pastoral life, while those of Cain built cities and dwelt in them, the one life has been conducive of morality and religion, while the other, to a large extent, has not. Our great cities have been and are today the centers of vice, immorality and irreligion. They are rapidly increasing in number and in population. Christianity has not kept pace with their rapid growth. There are millions in our cities who are not Christians. What a great need!

5. Our great west. The size of this country west of the Mississippi river is incomprehensible. It is rapidly filling up. The center of population is rapidly moving westward. The life in many parts of the west is not naturally conducive to religion. Yet this section of our country should be Christianized. It is rapidly becoming the controlling factor in the government of the country and will more and more become so. Schools and churches should keep pace with the rapidly growing west.

Rible Readings.—Gen. vii, 1; Ps. cxxii, 1-9; cxxxvii, 1-6; Isa. lii, 7; Nah. i, 15; Hag. ii, 1-9; Mal. iii, 1; Math. v, 13-16; Luke, xxiv, 45-48; John xv, 27; Acts i, 8; iv, 10-12; xvi, 8-12; Rom. ix, 1-5; x, 14, 15.

The Voice of Nature.

The voice of nature is none other than the voice of God. Our Lord Himself tried to teach us that God, of whom we speak as so far and so silent, is very near and is speaking to us all day long. We think ourselves very pious if with narrow literalism and stupid superstition we profess to worship the words of holy books, written hundreds of years ago, as though they were the only voice in which God ever had spoken or could speak to us, and all the while we lose the whole significance of our Saviour's lessons from that other book of God whose secret lies ever open to the eyes which will read it.—F. W. Farrar.

God's Mightiness.

To distrust science is to seek God blindfolded. That religion is most irreligious that is not consciously and lovingly in league with the forces that work from the glacier to the rhythmic pulsings of the human heart.—J. L. Jones.

To His Face.

We need more men not afraid to tell the devil to his face that he is a devil. —President Garfield.

"The Pilot Is on Board!"

Afar in surges rolled the main,
Anear the white reefs roared,
When on our ears a strong voice broke,
As though the vanquished stormcloud spoke,
"The pilot is on board!"

We knew that unseen pilot held
The secrets of the deep,
And so we left the cabin lights
To find, as in the placid nights,
The palmy isles of sleep.

I woke. Through morning's crimson skies
The rippling sea birds soared.
One port lay fair, but wider seas
Bring their uncharted mysteries—
The Pilot is on board!

—Hezekiah Butterworth in Golden Rule.

WHAT IS AN ANARCHIST?

The Question Answered by the President of Boston Central Labor Union.

Your question, I have no doubt, was inspired by the frequent use of the name "anarchist" as applied to the men who today have the courage to think and speak for themselves without having first obtained the consent of their old time masters, the manipulators of political conventions and the directors of a truculent and muzzled press. If this is your object in asking the question, I may be pardoned when I say that the amount of ignorance and criminality displayed by public speakers and writers when criticising men who differ with them upon questions of public policy is stupendous, and can only be accounted for by an evident desire upon their part to connect public spirited and progressive men and women with everything that is dishonest, bloodthirsty and destructive of good government.

What an absurdity and confusion of terms to designate a man as an anarchist, a criminal and a socialist, as many of the glib tongued phrase mongers have very recently been doing, when, as a matter of fact, each of those schools of thought occupies a realm separate and distinct in social philosophy and economic science and are as far removed in methods of procedure and idealities as it is possible for one to imagine!

Proudhon, the father of philosophic anarchy, very tersely describes anarchists as those who believe in "the dissolution of government in the economic organism." Josiah Warren, the first of great American anarchists and an author of wide repute and a relative of General Warren of revolutionary fame, says: "If the individual has a right to govern himself, all external government is tyranny." Benjamin R. Tucker, the scholarly American anarchist, says, "An anarchist is a person that prescribes to the doctrine that all the affairs of men should be managed by individuals or voluntary associations, and that the state should be abolished." And further he says, "Anarchism is a word derived from the Greek and meaning not necessarily absence of order, as is generally supposed, but absence of rule."

To your question, briefly put, "What is an anarchist?" I would say a person who primarily believes that by attending strictly to his or her own business has but little time to interfere or meddle with the business or affairs of his or her neighbors. To the anarchists' chaotic philosophy I may be permitted to take issue, but their honesty of purpose I have little reason to question. If your symposium will be the means of inducing some of our political jugglers to study the real aims of the men who are today branded as anarchists, a useful purpose will be well served.—H. Lloyd in Boston Globe.

Convict Labor Statistics.

Commissioner of Labor Carroll D. Wright has issued a bulletin which contains some interesting statistics and general information about convict labor in the United States. The total number of convicts in penal institutions in the various states in 1885 was 41,887. In 1895 the number rose to 54,244. Of the number imprisoned in 1885, 1,967 were females. The number of females imprisoned in 1895 was 1,988, an increase of only 21. In 1885 the number engaged in productive labor was 30,853, 73.7 per cent of the total number, while in 1895 the number engaged in productive labor was 38,415, or 70.8 per cent.

The total value of goods produced or work done in the United States for the various states and territories in all the state prisons and penitentiaries for 1895 was $19,042,472.

In 1885 the total wages paid by contractors and lessees for the labor of convicts, from which resulted a product of the value of $28,753,999, was only $3,512,970, or $1 of convict labor wages to $8.19 of finished product of convict labor. At the present time, in all probability, the total value of the labor expended by the convicts in the state penitentiaries and prisons of the country does not exceed $2,500,000.

The Eight Hour Law.

A Washington dispatch of recent date says: The first successful prosecution for violation of the eight hour law passed by congress in 1892 in the interest of the workingmen of the country occurred here when a verdict of guilty was returned against W. W. Winfree, a contractor, for remodeling a local school building.

Many contractors on government buildings and government work have been prosecuted under this law, but a clause giving them permission to overwork men "in case of emergency" has always been successfully invoked. The case was hotly contested in the local police court and the jury was out three hours. The maximum penalty is six months in jail and $1,000 fine. A motion was made for a new trial.

The Origin of Dress.

Mrs. Dr. Evans, wife of the president of Hedding college, Ills., who has made the subject of dress a careful study for 20 years, declares that women first invented trousers and that men subsequently adopted them.

This means that the women, having first adopted a costume which seemed best adapted to them, the men, envious of their better choice, appropriated it and then drove them out. This, at least, is what Mrs. Evans alleges that she has found after long investigation of the records.

The fact that among the Chinese and other nations of great antiquity the women still wear trousers and the men skirts gives strength to Mrs. Evans' assertions.

If these be true, the reproach of women for imitating male attire falls to the ground. It is the men who, having evicted women from her originaliy chosen attire, are the real copyists.

Of a truth, history is coming to the rescue of women and furnishing a warrant for such as are bent upon recovering their stolen possessions.—Boston Globe.

Miss Maud Ganne.

Miss Maud Ganne, who has earnestly espoused the Irish cause, grew up as the beauty of the Irish vice regal court at Dublin. Her interest in the cause of her people having been aroused she devoted herself heart and soul, to "nationalism," and she has lectured and spoken in public in behalf of the work she has undertaken.

Omaha Wants It.

It is understood that Boston is to make a strong bid for the biennial meeting of the Federation of Women's Clubs in 1898. This was brought to the knowledge of the Omaha Women's club, and the club determined immediately to offer extra inducements. Boston will not provide entertainment for the delegates, but will merely furnish meeting room, etc. The Omaha club voted unanimously to entertain all the delegates that might go there. The ladies were of the opinion that this was a practical thing to do for the city, as well as an opportunity to express its good will toward the federation and will instruct its delegates to invite the federation with the understanding that all delegates will be entertained. "Western popularity" must not be permitted to degenerate into an empty phrase.—St. Paul Globe.

Antidress Agitation.

Fashionable women in London are agitating a new league which has the worthy motive of preventing extravagance in dress and even limiting the number of dresses a woman shall buy in one year, providing, of course, she becomes a member. So many women dress beyond their means to keep pace with their more favored associates that this "antidress league" is proposed as a sort of mantle of charity to cover a small dress allowance with fashionable respect and bring about an average rule for dress which shall govern the richer as well as the poorer members of society. The success of this enterprise is yet to be seen, but the amusing side of it is that the women who are the most enthusiastic workers in the cause keep very clear of it themselves.—London Correspondence.

A Famous American.

Miss Enid Yandell, whose sculpturing is just now attracting a great deal of attention, is president of the American Art association of Paris. She has a studio in the Impasse du Main. She is a native of Louisville, went to Paris to study and has made a wonderful success. Two statuettes, one of her sister and the other of Miss McPherson of Washington, were accepted by the art exhibit now in progress. These statuettes are in platine and bronze and are about 12 inches in height. In a word, this work is the revival of a lost art. Some years ago some statuettes were unearthed at Tenegra which were portraits. These works of Miss Yandell are perfect reproductions of the models, even to colors and life tints.—Paris Correspondence.

By One of Them.

I would like to know how we are to help being office girls since a cruel fate has decreed that we be such?

I would also like to know why, being office girls, we differ in any way from those you call home girls? To be sure, you were kind enough to say we are not less pure or honest, but, small space for thanks, you cannot say otherwise.

Have we not the same right to earn our living, when compelled, as men have? And can we not be as honest and respectable in so doing as girls that can stay at home? This thing of blaming girls continually for low wages is becoming monotonous. We must live. What would become of our mothers, our brothers and sisters that depend on us for their daily bread if we were not office girls?—Pittsburg Commercial Gazette.

Wedding Changes.

Even the apparently cast iron traditional wedding customs are subject to slight ripples of change in these variety seeking days. At a London wedding not very long ago a younger sister of the bride gave her away in default of other relatives. It is also getting to be much in vogue to have no wedding reception immediately following the ceremony. The much more sensible plan of deferring it until the return of the young pair from their bridal trip has been observed in a number of instances. The reception then takes place at the bride's residence and is, in fact, merely the actual ceremony festivity postponed. —New York Times.

A Darning Club.

New Hampshire women have organized a darning club. On a certain day of each week the members wend their way to the home of the hostess for the occasion, and they take their darning with them. They work together around a large table, on which each has piled the articles she has brought with her. Stockings are most in evidence, but all sorts of garments modestly appear before the session is over. Some one reads aloud, conversation has an occasional inning, and at 5 o'clock the club members go proudly home, refreshed and with the week's darning thoroughly and pleasantly done.

One Day at a Time.

"Live one day at a time, my dear," said an elderly woman to a younger one recently. "Don't wrinkle your forehead today over tomorrow's cares. Nothing is so bad, or so good either, as we anticipate, and tomorrow's burden may not be one when tomorrow is today. I lived over two-thirds of my life before I discovered this secret, and I am growing younger every month in its use. There is always time and strength for today's duties and cares. It is the piling and borrowing, the crossing of bridges before they are reached that kills."—New York Times.

The Little New Woman's Version.

A little girl in the Fourth (Dr. Hall's) Chicago church has made a valuable contribution to the new woman literature. She told her mamma the story of Adam and Eve. "Dod, he made Adam, an he put him in a big garden, an Adam he was so, so lonesome, an then he putted him to sleep, he did, an then he took out his brains an made a woman of the brains, an then Adam he wasn't lonesome no more."—Chicago Interior.

The Duchess Ring.

The duchess ring is the latest novelty. It consists of a band of gold, with an opal, showing blue lights in a clear setting, surrounded by diamonds. Two tiny scrolls of gold project on either side, and a shield formed of many scrolls is studded with diamonds and reaches beyond the knuckle. It is to be worn only in the evening and cannot be purchased for less than $500.

A Famous Russian Woman.

Mme. Kerschbaumer, who has been appointed to the chair of opthalmology in a medical college for women at St. Petersburg, is the first woman professor in Russia. She is a Russian by birth, but she married an Austrian physician, with whom she founded an eye infirmary at Salzburg in 1875. Since then she has been engaged in conducting this institute. She studied chiefly in Switzerland.

DRANK NO MORE TEARS.

What Caused an Old Toper to Give Up His Favorite Beverage.

In several places in the Psalms the metaphor is used of the beverage of tears, but how often in real life is the custom of drinking the tears of their wives and children fulfilled in the lives of intemperate husbands and fathers? In 1885, in Arkansas, this scene was enacted:

Josh Speeler, an old toper of long standing and capacity, on being invited by some of his boon companions to "take a drink," replied, "Boys, I won't drink without you take what I do." The "boys" were surprised.

"The idea," said one of them, "that you should prescribe for us. Perhaps you want us to drink one of your mixtures. You are a boss mixer and I won't agree to it."

"Perhaps he wants to run some castor oil in on us," said another..

"No, I'm square—honor bright. Take my drink, boys, and I am with you."

They agreed, and ranged themselves along the bar. All looked at Speeler.

"Mr. Bartender," said he, "give me a glass of water."

"What? W-a-t-e-r?"

"Yes, water. It's a new drink to me, boys, I admit, and it's a scarce article around here, I expect. But let me tell you about it. A few days ago a party of us went fishin. We took a fine share of whisky along and had a jolly time. Along toward evenin I got powerful drunk and crawled off under a tree and went to sleep. The boys drank up all the whisky and came back to town. They thought it a good joke 'cause they left me out there drunk and told it around the town with a big laugh. My son got hold of the report and told it at home. I lay under that tree all night, and when I woke in the mornin my wife sot right there side of me. She said nothin when I woke up, but turned her head away, and I could see was a-cryin. 'I wish I had suthin to drink,' says I. Then she took a cup wot she had fetched with her and went to a spring that was near and fotched it full.

"Jest as she was handin it to me she leant over to hide her eyes, and I saw a tear drop inter the cup. I tuk and drank, and raisin my hands to heaven I vowed, God helpin me, I'd never drink my wife's tears again, as I had been doin for the last 20 years, and that I was goin to stop. You boys know who it was that left me. You all was in the gang. Give me another glass of water, Mr. Bartender."—Union Signal.

Put Herself on Record.

Vice President Stevenson's daughter has put herself on record as one of the practical temperance women of the country. At her wedding feast she prohibited the presence of wine and other intoxicants. The righteous example of Mrs. Lucy Webb Hayes is bearing fruit in the lives of other women of note.—Voice.

Bad For White or Red.

The bad Indian is, in nearly every instance, an Indian fond of whisky. Keep whisky away from him and he would give very little trouble to the white people. And what is true of the bad Indian holds good with the bad white man with very rare exceptions.—Exchange.

WORK OF FATHER MATHEW.

In Three Years He Reduced the Consumption of Spirits 5,200,000 Gallons.

The accounts of Father Mathew's mission from 1838 to 1842 read like a fable. He made teetotalers as the great powers make soldiers, by the million, only much faster, and if there had been any staying power in the business the liquor question would have been settled out of hand. Wherever he went a veritable fury of sacrifice appears to have seized the people of Ireland, though the estimated number of converts must be discounted by the equal fury of exaggeration which seized the choniclers of his progress. Thus, in 1839, he is said to have administered 30,000 pledges in one day at Clonmel and from 100,000 to 150,000 in two days at Limerick. Unless pledges were taken by acclamation it would be physically impossible to administer one-quarter the number stated.

In 1840 he is said to have added 748,000 to the ranks, or an average of over 2,000 per diem for every day in the year, and by 1841 the number of total abstainers in Ireland was reckoned at 4,647,000, or considerably more than the entire adult population. Any one may believe it who likes, but whatever the exact truth may be it is certain that the homely village priest did for a time meet with a success beside which the united efforts of all the other advocates of temperance, before and after him, fade into insignificance. In three years he actually reduced the consumption of spirits in Ireland from 10,815,000 gallons to 5,200,000 gallons and practically abolished drunkenness. An elderly lady described to me the other day how she traveled through Ireland about that time without seeing a single drunken man and how striking was the contrast between the perfect sobriety of Cork and the rolling intoxication of Bristol, which met her eyes on landing.—National Review.

The Only Drink Cure.

Dr. Norman Kerr, in his address before the British Medical Temperance association this spring, said that the two hundred and twentieth cure for inebriety had recently been put in his hands. He did not believe in one of them. The one absolute condition was the immediate and total withdrawal of the liquor.—Exchange.

Local Option In Minnesota.

In Minnesota the law making it illegal to sell, barter or give away intoxicating liquors at retail or wholesale, in any quantity whatever, where the people of a village or town have voted against the issuance of license, passed both houses almost by unanimous vote, and was signed by the governor.—Exchange.

British Drink Notes.

The Aberdeen (Scotland) representative temperance council has been formed to concentrate the efforts of all the local temperance forces.

Out of 91 new pastors who entered the Congregational ministry last year 74 were total abstainers.

British revenue from beer last year was $53,595,000, an increase of $3,085,000 over the previous year.

The British Temperance league has issued a call for a body of well equipped and enthusiastic crusaders to carry on the work of securing pledge signers during the closing years of the century.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON XIII, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, SEPT. 27.

A Comprehensive Review of the Quarter's Lessons—Golden Text, Prov. xviii, 10. Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

LESSON I.—David, King of Judah (II Sam. ii, 1-11). Golden Text, Ps. xcvii, 1, "The Lord reigneth; let the earth rejoice." The Golden Text points onward to the time when the kingdom shall come and the Lord shall reign, as stated more fully in Dan. vii, 13, 14, 27; Rev. xi, 15. The death of Saul and David's being anointed king over Judah were a foreshadowing of the beginning of the reign of Christ. The reign of Ish-bosheth, David's enemy, over Israel for a time is suggestive of the enemies who shall continue even after the beast, or antichrist, shall have gone to the lake of fire.

LESSON II.—David, King Over All Israel (II Sam. v, 1-12). Golden Text, II Sam. v, 10, "David went on and grew great, and the Lord God of Hosts was with him." The Son of David, the Lord Jesus Christ, will surely, in due time, reign over all Israel (Ezek. xxxvii, 21-24), and they will be a righteous nation (Isa. lx, 21). He will also be King of Kings and Lord of Lords (Rev. xix, 16) on the whole earth. He is patiently waiting His time. Let us meekly and cheerfully wait with Him and daily keep "Going and Growing" (verse 10, margin).

LESSON III.—The Ark Brought to Jerusalem (II Sam. vi, 1-12). Golden Text, Ps. lxxxiv, 12, "O Lord of Hosts, blessed is the man that trusteth in Thee!" It was David's way to inquire of the Lord in all matters, but he, like us, sometimes failed to do so and leaned upon his own understanding, or did as others. In this case he imitated the Philistines and got into serious trouble.

LESSON IV.—God's Promises to David (II Sam. vii, 4-16). Golden Text, Ps. lxxi, 1, "In Thee, O Lord, do I put my trust!" When David was quiet in his kingdom and dwelling peacefully in his own house of cedar, it troubled him that the ark of God should be in a tent, and he thought to build a house for the ark. God, however, had other thoughts, for He says, "My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord" (Isa. lv, 8). His are as far above ours as heaven above earth, and He surprised David by the plans He had for him.

LESSON V.—David's Kindness (II Sam. ix, 1-13). Golden Text, Rom. xii, 10, "Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love." David continued to prosper, reigning over all Israel, executing judgment and justice, and he was preserved wherever he went (chapter viii, 14, 15). He has nothing but forgiveness in his heart for his enemies, and, for Jonathan's sake, seeks to find any of the house of Saul that he may show them the kindness of God. May we, like Mephibosheth, dwell in Jerusalem (city of peace) and eat continually at the King's table.

LESSON VI.—David's Victories (II Sam. x, 8-19). Golden Text, Ps. xxvii, 1, "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear." This is the record of one of the Lord's victories for David, in which 40,700 Syrians were slain. When Israel walked with God, there was no king or people who could stand against them, for the Lord fought for them, but when they failed to walk with Him He allowed their enemies to prosper and overcome them. We would have more victories over our enemies, the world, the flesh and the devil, if we relied upon the Lord to fight for us, remembering "Thine is the power."

LESSON VII.—David's Confession and Forgiveness (Ps. xxxii, 1-11). Golden Text, Ps. li, 10, "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me!" There is nothing more dangerous than ease and idleness, for then the devil is very busy. David in time of war was at home at ease when he was led into this great sin, and there was no peace to him till it was confessed and forgiven. One has said that confession is the lance which relieves the festering wound. If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness, but whoso covereth his sins shall not prosper (I John i, 8-10; Prov. xxviii, 13).

LESSON VIII.—Absalom's Rebellion (II Sam. xv, 1-12). Golden Text, Ex. xx, 12, "Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." It does not seem possible that a son could treat his father as Absalom treated David, and yet it is but a sample of our treatment of God. He says, "I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against me" (Isa. i, 2). And long afterward he had to say, "If, then, I be a father, where is mine honor?" (Mal. i, 6). As to our Lord Jesus, we know that His own to whom He came, instead of receiving Him, they killed Him.

LESSON IX.—Absalom's Defeat and Death (II Sam. xviii, 9-17, 32, 33). Golden Text, Ps. i, 6, "The Lord knoweth the way of the righteous, but the way of the ungodly shall perish." Who can tell what it means to perish? It is not the death of the body, for we are told not to fear that, but it is the destruction of body and soul in hell, where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched. Math. x, 28; Mal. ix, 44. David would gladly have died for his son, for he was ready to meet God, but Absalom was not. See how in due time the transgressor is sure to come to his end.

LESSON X.—David's Love For God's House (I Chron. xxii, 6-16). Golden Text, Ps. lxxxiv, 4: "Blessed are they that dwell in Thy house. They will be still praising Thee." The Lord Jesus is the true Solomon, Prince of Peace, and Jedidiah, beloved of the Lord (verse 9 and II Sam. xii, 25), for where He reigns there shall be peace and quietness unto Israel. The prosperity of Solomon's reign is very suggestive of the glorious millennial days that are coming, while the time of David is rather suggestive of the beginning of those days.

LESSON XI.—David's Gratitude to God (II Sam. xxii, 40-51). Golden Text, II Sam. xxii, 2, "The Lord is my rock and my fortress and my deliverer." Whether it was the words that David wrote as the sweet psalmist of Israel (chapter xxiii, 1-2) or the victories he gained over his enemies (verse 41), he acknowledged that it was all of God, who girded him with strength.

LESSON XII.—Destructive Vices (Prov. xvi, 22-33). Golden Text, Prov. xvi, 25, "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." Man's way is to live unto himself (verse 26), and then he is of course at strife with all who come in his way or interfere with him. The godly man is humble, unselfish, seeks not his own and lives unto God if only he may honor Him. With him the work of righteousness is peace and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance forever (Isa. xxxii, 17). "He that hath the Son of God hath life; he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."

ILLINOIS MELANGE.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST TO OUR OWN PEOPLE.

Some of the Principal Happenings of the Week Reported by Telegraph and Placed for Convenience of Our Readers—Matters of Interest.

Chicago, Sept. 10.—John C. Black, the gold Democratic nominee for governor of Illinois, has written a brief letter declining the honor in which he gives his reasons for so going that he did not want the nomination and asked that it be withheld, in the first place. He then says he has investigated the situation and finds "that in this state the election for governor lies between Messrs. Tanner and Altgeld.

"I am further convinced, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the only effect in the election of my candidacy would be to diminish the chances of one or the other of these gentlemen for election. Men differ in opinions as to whose chances would be most seriously impaired, but in any event the whole effect of my candidacy, so far as the election is concerned, would be what I have stated above; namely, to diminish the chances of one or the other of the candidates. So believing, I feel constrained, highly as I prize the good opinion of the gentlemen who placed me in nomiination, to decline to be a candidate."

The state committee of the gold Democrats, therefore, put W. S. Forman, of St. Clair county, in Black's place. The vacancy caused by the shifting of Forman from the foot to the head of the ticket was filled by the nomination of D. V. Samuels, of Chicago, for the office of attorney general. William S. Forman made much reputation for himself recently by the authorship of a couple of letters to Governor Altgeld, in which he called attention to the management of the state treasnry during the incumbency of Rufus Ramsay. Forman is a native of Kentucky, is a lawyer of East St. Louis, and has represented the old Eighteenth district two terms in congress. Daniel V. Samuels is a Chicago lawyer. He has been prominent in Democratic politics for many years.

Terrible Accident to Child.

Wheaton, Ills., Sept. 8.—Mr. and Mrs. Arnd started with their 2-year-old daughter, Margaret, for church in their surrey Sunday morning and just as they were passing the grounds of the Chicago Golf club the child threw herself from her mother's lap and slid out of the vehicle. In so doing she caught her tiny leg in the wheel and before the team could be stopped the limb had almost been torn from its socket. It all happened so quickly that a crowd of golfers who were within twenty feet of the child could not lend them aid until it was too late.

Y. M. C. A. Building Dedicated.

Pana, Ills., Sept. 8.—The new Y. M. C. A. building which has been in course of construction in this city for the past year was dedicated with fitting ceremonies Sunday afternoon. Over two thousand people attended the dedication exercises, which were held in the main auditorium of the building at 5:30 p. m., and hundreds were turned away, being unable to find standing room in the building. Additional exercises were held in the evening at 7:30 o'clock, which were equally well attended.

Death of a Veteran of Note.

Quincy, Ills., Sept .14.—Major General James N. Morgan died Saturday. He was born in Boston eighty-six years ago, cast his first vote for Andrew Jackson, and had been an active Democrat ever since. He commanded a batallion in the Mexican war and was a division commander under Sherman in the civil war. He was acting president of the society of the Army of the Cumberland and treasurer of the Illinois Soldiers' home. He leaves a very large estate.

Forman on the Ticket.

Chicago, Sept. 11.—General Black having formally declined the nomination of the "sound money" Democrats for governor, W. S. Forman, of St. Clair county, was put on the ticket in his place.

State Notes.

The Populists and Democrats of Cook county, Illinois, have agreed to fuse on some candidates of the county ticket.

Charles Harrington, the 3-year-old son of Charles A. Harrington, a mail carrier in Peoria, met his death while playing with the flames of a gasoline stove.

Prosecutions will be instituted against several seniors in the Rockford, Ills., high school who ducked William Kraft, a freshman, while engaged in hazing him. Young Kraft is seriously ill as a result of his rough usage.

Slight earthquake shocks were felt at Cobden and Vienna, Ills., and Paducah, Ky.

Illinois Crop Report.

Illinois—Corn cutting general and well advanced, with late crop mostly safe. Broom corn and wild hay cutting completed. Potato digging, cane cutting, and field pea harvest general. Fall plowing progressing, wheat land being prepared, except in dry southern section, seeding to begin last of the week. Early sown rye is up with a good stand, and sowing continues.

Hill Declines To Be Instructed.

Albany, Sept. 11.—Senator Hill was elected a delegate from this city to the Democratic state convention under instructions to indorse the Chicago nominees. He has written a letter declining to accept the election under any instructions, and declaring that his freedom must not be restricted, if he goes as a delegate.

GENERAL BLACKLIST.

Scheme of the Traction Companies to Boycott Discharged Employees.

That aggregation of philanthropists, the street railway syndicate, is working on a plan that is going to cause trouble in the labor world.

The railroads call it a plan for mutual protection and improvement of the service. The employers say it is just an extension of the blacklist idea and that its aim is the crushing of the labor organizations. Director Thomas F. Ryan of the Metropolitan Traction company is credited with the authorship of the plan.

According to the traction employees, he is going around among the directors of the various corporations suggesting that they all agree not to employ men discharged by any corporation in the combine. The blacklist is supposed to be aimed at dishonest conductors or offensively vigorous strikers. If it is adopted the names of discharged employees will be issued in the form of a circular weekly or monthly and distributed among the corporations. To guard against the possibility of a discharged man getting a chance to earn a living for his wife and babies by giving an assumed name—which is now against the law—there will also be a regular Bertillon report of complexion, measurements, marks, etc. In this way the traction companies hope to keep their pay rolls uncontaminated.

Of course the agreement, when made, will be secret, but the companies credited with looking favorably on the scheme are the Consolidated Traction company of New Jersey, the Metropolitan of New York, the Brooklyn Heights, the Pittsburg road, Baltimore City railroad, Philadelphia Traction company, Albany City company, Union railway (the Huckleberry) of New York and the Yerkes roads of Chicago.

Among the philanthropists interested in these enterprises are Messrs. Elkins, Widener, Roswell P. Flower, Dolan, Ryan, Brady and Yerkes.

The blacklist in its extended capacity was first put into operation on the Brooklyn Heights road. Secretary Williams of that road sent lists of the leaders of the strike to all the street railroad companies. The companies say they paid no attention to the lists, but exstrikers are not very plentiful among their employees.

The only new point about the scheme attributed to Mr. Ryan is that the companies get up the blacklist instead of leaving that sort of work to the detective agencies. These agencies supply spotters for the roads. The spotter rides not more than ten nor less than five blocks during the trip and counts the passengers and the register. If the conductor's report does not agree with the spotter's, there is a conductor out of a job, with the accusation of being a thief. If the new plan is carried into effect, this conductor will not be able to get work on any other line in the east. The detective agencies are persistent in furnishing lists of men ready to go to work for the railroad companies. This is where they come in on the new scheme. They are ready to furnish men enough to operate any street railroad in the event of strike—temporary men, who would only work for the high wages corporations are ready to pay at such times and do not care for permanent positions.

Here are a couple of sample advertisements from The Journal devoted to affairs of street railroads:

DRUMMOND DETECTIVE AGENCY.
New York City.

Railroad work a specialty. Our original and improved system. Surface and steam railways manned and inspected. Secret investigations made and a general detective bureau carried on.

A. A. DRUMMOND,
Ex-Chief U. S. Secret Service,
General Manager.

Here is one still more suggestive:

"The mill will never grind
With the water that is past."

Nor can a dividend be declared from collections which do not reach the treasury. For advice and assistance call on ——.

Street railways checked or manned.

Skilled employees for any railroad position. Only the best service. Employed by 200 corporations. Etc., etc.

If the companies and the detective agencies together can't keep their men honest, there must be something wrong. To the credit of some of the corporations it should be recorded that they declined to go into the blacklist business, stating that if a man was serving them faithfully they were not concerned because he had lost some other position for any reason. Most of the companies approached, however, thought it was a good scheme and agreed to stand by the blacklist.—New York Journal.

Facing Starvation.

A desperate state of affairs exists on the Gogebic range in northern Michigan. Where 8,000 iron miners were once employed at an average of $1.75 a day now only 1,000 have employment at $1 a day, and the unemployed find themselves on the verge of starvation. All the mines except two have shut down, and some of them have withdrawn their pumps.

Merchants have refused credit to the unemployed, and before winter thousands will lack food to keep from starving. Few of the residents along the Gogebic range have recovered from the panic of 1893, and most of them are still in debt. Those who are still employed have their salaries drawn by the merchants with whom they deal, who, after deducting a share of the debt, turn the balance over. Under this system the people are almost penniless most of the time. To the idle ones the merchants have refused credit because they see no prospect of their securing employment. Unless outside assistance comes there will be starving families on the range.

Labor Insurance.

Insurance against nonemployment is an accomplished fact in Cologne. Workingmen who have resided two years in that city and who are over 18 years old can join the society. The dues are 6 cents per week. If no employment can be procured for a member during the dull season, 50 cents per day is paid to him if married, 38 cents if single.

This Is In America.

In the national convention of the Amalagmated Association of Iron and Steel Workers in Detroit, Mayor Pingree, in a welcoming address, referred to the poor pay of the miners. Vice President Carney, in his reply, said: "We can tell the mayor a story of misery. We can paint for him a verbal picture of suffering from scenes close to Pittsburg where children—hundreds of them—never smile. They have never learned that part of natural language, because their parents know it not. The miner comes from the hole in the pit, hungry and broken. His wife, in patching to get herself a little food and the few clothes they have, sees no sunshine in her life. The future is dark. They exist in despair."

CHIEF JUSTICE MARSHALL was the intimate friend and biographer of Washington, and was himself a Freemason in his youth. Marshall left the lodge in 1793. He had then for some sixteen years been acquainted with Washington, who died six years later. Marshall wrote to Hon. John Bailey from Richmond, Oct. 18, 1833, of Washington and Freemasonry: "I do not recollect ever to have heard him utter a syllable on the subject."

"I belonged to two secret societies, and have bumped against nearly all of them, and know what I am talking about. Their sociability and benevolence may be all well enough; but they belong to the world. . . . . I have about made up my mind that the whole thing is of the world, and the enemy of God and his church Brethren, why don't you say Amen? You know I am telling the truth; and I pray that you may have grace to receive it in love, as I have spoken it. As Christ's disciples we can make no compromise with the world The friendship of the world is enmity against God."—From Bible reading, by L. W. Munhall, evangelist, on Separation, given Feb. 25, 1890, at Somerville, Mass.

"The whole movement of Christianity, what is it? It is light against darkness. It is as the shining of the sun. That doesn't have lodges. That doesn't have little dark rooms into which it disburses its beams. The business of the sun is to scatter light, and the business of the church of Jesus Christ is to scatter the light of the Sun of Righteousness. He is to be the light of the world everywhere. He says, 'In secret have I said nothing.' Everything was open. There was never any little cabal, any little gathering with its secret passes and grips. The mere attempt to couple such a thing with the work of the Lord Jesus shows its folly."—From address of Rev. E. P. Goodwin, D. D., pastor First Congregational Church, Chicago, to Christian Conference, April, 1890.

"God's Word prohibits the believer from forming alliances with the ungodly in society. Whenever the Christian surrenders himself to the society of the unbelieving world, his heart will be led away from God. This is especially true of thousands of Christian men who have deliberately yoked themselves up with unbelievers in all manner of secret societies. This course of false alliance is doing more mischief to individual Christian men by turning their hearts away from God and his service, and to the church by depleting and robbing her of her male membership, THAN ANY OTHER ONE ENEMY OF CHRIST. There never was a time when the cry, 'Come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord,' was more needed than now."—From Dr. George F. Pentecost's Bible Studies, 1889, p. 389.

"We have, then, the implied testimony of Freemasons themselves, that the Christian church ought to have no fellowship with Freemasonry as thus revealed, and that those who adhere intelligently and determinedly to such an institution have no right to be in the Christian church. God demands, and the world has a right to expect, that the church will take due action and bear a truthful testimony in respect to this institution. She cannot now innocently hold her peace. The light has come. Fidelity to God and to the souls of men require that the church, which is the light of the world, should speak out, and should take such action as will plainly reveal her views of the compatibility or incompatibility of Freemasonry with the Christian religion."—From Pres. Finney's book, "Character, Claims and Practical Workings of Freemasonry," pp. 260, 263.

"I do not see how any Christian, most of all a Christian minister, can go into these secret lodges with unbelievers. They say they can have more influence for good, but I say they can have more influence for good by staying out of them, and then reproving their evil deeds. Abraham had more influence for good in Sodom than Lot had. If twenty-five Christians go into a secret lodge with fifty who are not Christians, the fifty can vote anything they please, and the twenty-five will be partakers of their sins. They are unequally yoked with unbelievers. 'But, Mr. Moody,' some say, 'if you talk that way you will drive all the members of secret societies out of your meetings and out of your churches.' But what if I do? Better men will take their places. Give them the truth anyway, and if they would rather leave their churches than their lodges the sooner they get out of the churches the better. I would rather have ten members who were separated from the world than a thousand such members. Come out from the lodge. Better one with God than a thousand without him. We must walk with God, and if only one or two go with us it is all right."—Address by Dwight L. Moody in Farwell Hall, Chicago, 1876.

DULY IN THE RACE.

PALMER AND BUCKNER NOTIFIED--CLEVELAND'S POSITION.

Declares in a Brief Telegram That the Nominees Are the Representatives of the "True Democracy"—The Programme of Exercises and Extracts from Palmer's Speech—Bourke Cockran's Address.

Louisville, Sept. 14.—Saturday was gold Democrat's day in this city. There were more prominent Democratic politicians here that day than any other for years. The object of such a gathering was the notification to General Palmer and his colleague on the gold Democratic ticket, General Buckner, of their nomination by the National gold Democratic convention at Indianapolis. An event of nearly equal importance and one that has been declared imminent for a month by various men who knew all about it, was the announcement of his position by President Cleveland, which he did in a brief telegram.

Cleveland's Telegram to Bynum.

The telegram was addressed to Bynum and dated Buzzard's Bay, Sept. 10, 1896, and was as follows: "I regret that I cannot accept your invitation to attend the notification meeting on Saturday evening. As a Democrat devoted to the principles and integrity of my party I should be delighted to be present on an occasion so significant, and to mingle with those who are determined that the voice of true Democracy shall not be smothered, and insist that its glorious standard shall be borne aloft as of old in faithful hands.

"GROVER CLEVELAND."

A longer telegram, similar in setiment, was from Carlisle, and both were tremendously applauded by the 5,000 people who were packed in the Auditorium to witness the notification excises.

Synopsis of the Programme.

These were simple enough and notable from the fact that it was the first time in history that the Democracy had held such a meeting—barring the Bryan meeting at New York, which all good gold Democrats do. The hall was elaborately decorated with the national colors and portraits of the two candidates and of Cleveland. After Bynum had been seated as presiding officer the audience sang "America;" then the Cleveland and Carlisle telegrams were read and Caffery spoke notifying Gen. Palmer of his nomination. Palmer replied and next Colonel Fellows, of New York, notified General Buckner, who replied briefly and the gathering adjourned.

Points from Palmer's Speech.

Palmer's speech went over each declaration of the Indianapolis platform and indorsed it. In the course thereof, however, he commented on his own and Buckner's nomination, saying: "General Buckner and I were once—in a modest sense—representatives of opposing opinions upon fundamental questions relating to the powers of the United States and of the respective states under the constitution. We met on the battlefield, where great public controversies that admit of no other method of solution are determined. I know he did his duty, and I trust the country believes I did mine. * * * It was known to the delegates of the convention before this honor was conferred upon me, and is well understood by the country that my public services commenced more than fifty years ago, and that since that time I have taken an active, earnest part in the discussion and settlement of every public question which had at the time sufficient importance to attract popular attention. * * *

Followed Jefferson and Jackson.

Taught by Jefferson I opposed slavery when it existed. Inspired by Jackson I defended the Union of the states to the extent of my ability, and influenced by his example, when my conduct as a military officer was challenged as violative of law, I voluntarily submitted myself to the jurisdiction of the civil courts. When governor of my adopted state, while I opposed and by peaceful means successfully resisted the interference of the United States by its military forces in the purely local concerns of the state I distinctly conceded the right and asserted the duty of that government to enforce within the state or elsewhere its own laws by its own agencies."

BOURKE COCKRAN AT CHICAGO.

Auditorium Packed to Hear Him and an Overflow in Battery D.

Chicago, Sept. 14.—Bourke Cockran, of New York, spoke at the Auditorium Saturday night under the auspices of the Honest Money League. The seating capacity of the hall is 5,500, and over 40,000 tickets of admission had been applied for. As it was out of the question for all these people to hear Cockran an overflow meeting was arranged at Battery D, and this place was jammed to the doors. Cockran was not expected to be able to reach the battery until late in the evening owing to the length of his Auditorium address, and local speakers entertained the crowd pending his arrival. No man who ever spoke in the Auditorium had a larger audience than Cockran. All the seats were taken fully thirty minutes before the time set for the commencement of his address. In the aisles men sat upon the floor, and every available foot of standing room was preempted.

Wiliam A. Vincent, of the league, was chairman of the meeting, and made a brief introductory address, which was well received, but which faded in comparison with the warm welcome extended to the orator of the evening. Cockran's address was received with great enthusiasm. In the early part of his speech he referred to the question asked of Bynum as to what way the free coinage of silver would help the working man, and the most of his speech thereafter was devoted to an argument against that policy similar to the one he made in his speech at New York.

The overflow meeting at Battery D was heralded by a brass band and rush of enthusiastic people who did not seem to care whether they heard Bourke Cochran or not, as long as they heard some good Republican doctrine. Rev. T. D. Phillips spoke very enthusiastically in introducing Judge Moran, so much so that he was rather pointedly rebuked by Judge Moran when the latter spoke. Phillips did not confine himself to subjects upon which the Democrats and Republicans agree, but branched off into a criticism of the Cleveland policy of tariff reform and a eulogy of McKinley and his bill. He also characterized Bryan as a "traitor" to his country. Consequently when Judge Moran arose to speak that gentleman expressed himself at once very forcibly against anything like the partisanship which had characterized the previous speaker's address. He said that the meeting was assembled at the invitation of the Honest Money League, which was non-partisan. The purpose of that organization, he said, was to invite intelligent discussion of the money question and not to talk claptrap. His allusion to Bourke Cochran was greeted with prolonged applause.

But the crowd was doomed not to hear the New York orator. When Moran concluded his speech he read a note from the chairman of the Honest Money League executive committee who said that Cochran felt unable to speak after the close of the meeting at the Auditorium, as he was very tired and his physician had directed that he speak but once. "We shall endeaver to have him speak again before the end of the campaign to a great mass-meeting where more can hear him."

THOUSANDS AT M'KINLEY'S HOME.

The Republican Leader Puts in a Day Speaking and Handshaking.

Canton, O., Sept. 14.—For the first time since the St. Louis convention Major McKinley, Saturday, spoke in Canton away from his home. After the great delegations from Chicago and Homestead had gone 1,800 people from McKeesport, Pa., and employes of the Pennslyvania lines west of Pittsburg gathered with thousands of other people about the house. Major McKinley mounted a chair to speak to the Pennsylvania delegation when a storm broke with terrific fury. The meeting adjourned to the tabernacle, where he spoke. A thousand people clustered in and about the house and under trees, and to them he spoke on his return home. After dinner Governor McKinley looked his best in health and spirits, although he had made a half dozen formal addresses and shaken hands with 5,000 people.

There were two train loads of the Commercial Democratic McKinley club of Chicago and the visitors were met at the station by the Canton commercial travelers' escort and the Canton troop. Heading the party were President G. Hoffsteadt, Chief Marshal Frank Higbee, First Vice President E. Dodd, Second Vice President John Devlin, Third Vice President W. F. Grafton, Secretary Harry H. Levy and Treasurer A. F. Olger, of Chicago. Brooks' Second Regiment band, of Chicago, accompanied the party. Marshall Field & Co., the J.V. Farwell company and Carson, Pirie, Scott & Co. were represented. Following these were the Pennsylvania people. It surpassed in size, noise and enthusiasm all of its predecessors. Every department of the Carnegie steel works was represented. The railroad company estimates from eastern Pennsylvania were that from 8,000 to 10,000 people were carried to Canton, and there were probably more.

Yesterday was a quiet one. McKinley attended church as usual. But the coming days and weeks promise tremendous crowds of pilgrims to the Canton Republican Mecca. All the dates for weeks are taken up with appointments for delegations.

BRYAN HAD A BIG DAY ALSO.

Speaks to Three Mass Meetings at St. Louis and Has an Accident.

St. Louis, Sept. 14.—At three great mass meetings held Saturday night W. J. Bryan, the Democratic and Populist party nominee for president, addressed between 30,000 and 35,000 people. At each of the three meetings he was greeted with prolonged cheers, and at frequent intervals during each of his speeches the enthusiastic populace gave vent to uproarious applause. The nominee was met at the train by an immense crowd. He was escorted to the Planters' hotel, where he had dinner, and then went to Concordia park, The Auditorium and Sportsman park, and at each place in turn he made a speech. So great were the crowds that hundreds were turned away at each place. When Bryan and his escort stepped upon the platform at Concordia park the great throng arose and for several minutes shouted and cheered.

It was 6:15 p. m. when the train rolled into the Union station in this city. The spacious midway accommodated a crowd of at least 15,000 people, who cheered wildly as Bryan stepped from the train. It was with much difficulty that he made his way to a carriage that was in waiting, accompanied by the reception committee. En route here Bryan spoke at about every station of any importance, and there were crowds all along the line.

While Bryan was addressing the meeting at Sportsman's park the platform upon which he stood gave way, and he, together with a dozen distinguished citizens who occupied seats thereon, were precipitated to the ground. Fortunately none of them were hurt, but the fall caused an uproar and for a time it looked as if a panic would result.

SONS OF VETERANS ADJOURN.

Rake, of Pennsylvania, Elected Commander-in-Chief as Predicted.

Louisville, Sept. 11.—The fifteenth national encampment of the Sons of Veterans adjourned sine die at 1:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon after electing Colonel James Rake commander-in-chief. This was sooner than expected, as is was thought that the work would not be finished until today. The last business was the installation of officers elected. Many delegates remaned in the city at night to enjoy the trolley party and reception at Fountain Ferry, but most of them left by this morning. After the adjournment Commander Rake held an informal reception in his rooms at the Galt House. A large number of comrades called to tender their congratulations. Commander-in-Chief Rake has announced the names of two members of his staff. They are H. A. Hamer, of Reading, Pa., to be adjutant general, and A. B. Spink, of Providence, to be inspector general. The remaining members of the staff will be appointed today. The offices yet to be filled are surgeon general, chaplain and chief mustering officer.

BANK ROBBED OF HALF A MILLION.

Two of the Bookkeepers Under Arrest to Hold Them.

New Orleans, Sept. 12.—Frank B. Leefe and Louis Colombe, book-keepers in the Union National bank, have been arrested by the United States deputy marshal. The specific charges against them have not yet developed. Leefe was arraigned and held in $10,000 bonds for a hearing. His bond was immediately signed. Colombe is ill at his home. The defalcation is purported to be in the neighborhood of $500,000. The arrests were made in order to hold the men pending a further investigation. The total defalcation so far discovered amounts to over $470,000, and the falsification of the books, if not done to cover up the actual losses of the bank by the failure of a prominent commercial firm which occurred eight or ten days ago, show that the stealing has been going on for some years.

Cyclone in Paris.

Paris, Sept. 11.—This city yesterday had a taste of a style of weather quite prevalent in the western United States, but which in Paris is very rare—a cyclonic wind storm. A good deal of damage was done in the city, the greatest loss being at the Palais de Justice. All the windows on the Rue de Harley side were smashed, part of the roof was blown away and the corridors were filled with clouds of dust and branches of trees. The court yard of St. Chappelle was filled with every sort of debris. Paris is much stirred up and excited over the cyclone, which was really a disaster of considerable proportions. The number of minor casualties and injuries to persons is large, and further reports are constantly being received. Over fifty injured have thus far been reported to one fire station alone and five seriously injured were brought in.

Clara Barton Returns.

New York, Sept. 14.—Among the passengers arriving Saturday morning per steamer Umbria, of the Cunard line, from Liverpool, was Miss Clara Barton, the representative of the Red Cross society, who has returned from the scene of the Armenian troubles. At quarantine it was said that Miss Barton was well, had enjoyed the voyage and was intensely enthusiastic about her work.

New Indiana Democratic Chairman.

Indianapolis, Sept. 12.—After spending a day in trying to induce Mayor Taggart to accept the chairmanship of the Democratic state committee, and failing, the committee has elected Parks M. Martin, of Owen county, chairman. Martin is a free silver man in thorough sympathy with the Chicago ticket and platform.

Silver Men Control in Jersey.

Trenton, Sept. 10.—The silver men controlled the state Democratic convention yesterday and indorsed Bryan and Sewall.

Bryan's Letter of Acceptance.

Lincoln, Neb., Sept. 10.—W. J. Bryan has, in additon to his speech of acceptance in Madison Square garden, New York city, sent to the chairman of the Democratic notification committee of the national convention at Chicago, a letter formally accepting the nomination offered him The letter is a brief discussion of the issues from the free silver standpoint.

Fusion Complete in Colorado.

Pueblo, Sept. 12.—Bryan and Sewall electors and fusion with the National Silver party with a Populist for governor is the result of a three days' session of the People's party convention.

It would be interesting to know what proportion of those who, from time to time, have become Masons, do not now detest or at least despise Masonry.

Dwight L. Moody addressed a full house in the Y. M. C. A. Hall at the noon hour last Monday. His earnest appeal was in behalf of the 40,000 convicts in our prisons and the millions of non-church goers. He urged Christians everywhere to visit prisons and contribute for literature to be put into the hands of prisoners. He claimed that the Sabbath evening service should be with special reference to reach the unchurched masses.

A declaration was read at the Monday meeting in the Y. M. C. A. Hall, that in view of the impending crisis in our American politics a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer be observed in October, and that union meeting be held in the churches to entreat God's blessing and to confess our national transgressions. No mention in the call was made of these transgressions, which was a serious omission.

When Stephen interceded for those who slew him, he prayed that they might not be charged with what he called this sin. Jesus himself had already been slain as Peter testified with hands that were wicked. A sinful heart made those who stoned Stephen stop their uncircumcised ears. Death was an extreme to which persecution did not always come, but by punishing or driving away the preacher, or by turning away their ears those ancient rejecters shared the same sin. Wickedly they secured silence. Followers of those Jews and pagans silence and drive out preachers now. Some are in the church like Jews, some in the lodge like pagans, and both are sunk in sin.

The same sins that brought judgments upon ancient Israel, characterize our nation to-day. They were the rum curse, Sabbath breaking, licentiousness, pride, the oppression of the poor and the secret lodge curse. The latter, like the idolatrous worship of Baal, is that which especially provokes God's anger. Unless the terrible ravages of these evils are staid, our nation must perish as did the nation of Israel.

REV. GIRGIS ANSHALIAN.

This martyred United Presbyterian missionary gave up his life Nov. 2, 1895, in the terrible Armenian massacre at Kutturbul, Turkey. The story of his martyrdom exceeds in horror anything we have read in the annals of religious persecution. The fiendish Kurds after plundering the town returned to butcher the defensless Armenians, who for forty hours without food and drink had found refuge in a stone church. The incarnate devils after making an opening in the roof poured in gunpowder and petroleum and other combustibles which they ignited, burning many of their victims alive and shooting and stabbing most of the others as they rushed from the building.

Rev. Girgis Anshalian and his wife had arrived from Egypt only a few days before. Against the advice of their friends, they had decided after many misgivings and after an absence of ten years to visit again their native land. By a mysterious providence they were with relatives in Kutturbul at this awful time and with the rest sought refuge in the church. Bro. Anshalian and an Armenian minister who was also in the company kept up religious service all the time in order to comfort and calm the terror-stricken people. At last, while they were writhing amid flame and smoke the church door was forced open and there was a rush for the open air. Mrs. Anshalian was shot and left for dead, but he being recognized as a religious teacher was taken before the leader of the Kurdish band, who used every persuasion to induce him to become a Mohammedan. And on his persistent refusal the chief was the first to raise his gun and shoot him near the heart. As he lay in the agonies of death he was repeatedly struck with swords and clubs.

Mr. Anshalian was the son of Elia Anshalian, and was born in 1839, in Diarbekir, Armenia. When a young man he became a Christian through the teaching of missionaries and the influence of his wife. He graduated at Mardin, in 1864, and studied theology there and at Beyrut. He was ordained about 1865, and labored for some years under the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. He was settled at Mardin, and afterwards at Saerd. In 1881 he came to America, and united with the Second church, Jersey City, N. J., Dr. Robert Armstrong, pastor. At the suggestion of his pastor he spent a year at the Xenia Theological Seminary, and in 1885 was received by the presbytery of New York. The same year he was sent as a missionary to Egypt. He was installed pastor of the congregation of Koos, Upper Egypt, in 1886, and he continued in this relation till his death.

The Christian Instructor says that Rev. Chauncey Murch writes them from Tanta, Egypt: "Since forwarding you the long article relating to the Rev. Girgis Anshalian, I received from his widow a registered letter in which she writes to enquire why it is she has not for some time been hearing from her brother who is here in Egypt. He has been writing to her regularly. It must be that his letters fail to reach their destination. After mentioning her heavy burdens and saying that she did not know what to do or where to go, she asks me to pray God to relieve her of the heavy burden she bears in the affliction of her brother who is insane. He is the wounded brother who with herself was left for dead in the massacre of Kutturbul."

Rev. W. H. Chandler, of the Wheaton College church, preached a sermon recently on Christian Citizenship in which he said: "None deny that the church is a divine institution, founded by God, established by God, upheld by God; that it has had a glorious mission, and that a still more glorious mission awaits it. But the state is also God's institution, as really and as certainly founded by him, established by him. They both belong to God and no man has any right to do what will tend to destroy the one any more than the other. 'He has no more right to lay aside the principles of the Gospel in his acts as a citizen than as a churchman.' Too many regard the one as secular and the other as sacred. This accounts for the condition of our country. Voters have failed to conscientiously regard the sacredness of the state. Hence the devil and bad men have had pretty much their own way with politics, and Christian men have been so enslaved to party as to be too weak to protest by voice and vote against the reign of unrighteousness. The affairs of the state should be as sacred as the church, and should be ruled as absolutely by God's truth and spirit. By my influence, voice and vote I should put everything under his will. Not to do so is to deny God's authority and right to rule in the state."

THAT FUNNY LITTLE APRON.

BY REV. J. L. BARLOW.

Of all the funny gentlemen who walk the crowded street,
And in regalia march in grand procession,
The oddest, queerest of them all that any one can meet,
Are the "wiley" craft who ape a true profession.
But the truth is they are shamming,
And with legends false are cramming
All the silly ninnies who will take and choose 'em,
Each one thinking he grows wise
As he drinks in all their lies,
And doth wear a little patch of white beneath his bosom.

In bright and sunny weather, in the leafy month of June,
These speculative gentlemen outcoming
From dark and tylered lodges, with slow or lively tune,
On St. John's day for recruits they go out drumming.
This is sure the meaning of it,
And they make it of great profit,
These grown up boys to catch, and with flags amuse 'em,
While their cash they meanly take,
And each victim they will make
Wear a little funny patch of white beneath his bosom.

If a cornerstone is to be laid in city or in town,
This crafty craft will somehow come to square it.
Tho' knowing naught of tools, the world believes they've "done it brown."
All the honor they'll be claiming—none may share it.
Oh, is it not amazin'!
That the creature called Freemason
Should so church and state control—none dare refuse 'em;
For each craftsman, like a lord,
Soars above the common herd
'Cause he wears a little sheep-skin white beneath his bosom.

Of all Republicans they're the strangest I am sure;
With knights, grand puissants, generals and other lofty titles,
Priests clad in Aaron's robes—attention to secure—
While they're striking blows at freedom's very vitals.
And they boast they're growing stronger,
While we tolerate them longer;
And are loudly claiming we do much abuse 'em,
From the efforts we do make
All the people to awake,
To that funny little patch beneath each Mason's bosom.

A LICENSE VOTE INTERPRETED.

BY REV. W. A. CAMPBELL.

I am entirely confident that a similar prayer to that offered by Christ on the cross should be offered for every Christian man who votes a liquor-license ticket—"Father, forgive them, they know not what they do."

It is the universal testimony of the true church of Jesus Christ, that the licensed liquor traffic is the curse of the ages, and the greatest of all crimes, in that it is the mother of most crimes as well as of pauperism and insanity, and the greatest of all robbers. It robs its victim of all that is noble in him as man, and of all he possesses. It robs him of every noble trait as a father, as a son, as a husband and as a brother. It robs him of his time, his talents, his property, of his body and of his soul. It wrecks his home, degrades his family, breaks the heart of his wife, shatters the nerves and ruins the health of his children, corrupts politics, disturbs the peace and welfare of society and of the church, and is a curse and not a blessing to all who are brought under its influence.

It sends 100,000 to a drunkard's grave and a drunkard's hell every year—400,000 during one Presidential term. Do Christian men realize that in voting a license Presidential ticket, they are voting to send 400,000 men and women to the misery of eternal death during the next four years, through the legalized saloon, at the rate of 100,000 a year? If this is not so, I will be glad to be corrected, for the thought fills me with great sorrow.

Let us illustrate and see if it is not so. Suppose I was in Utah, and there was a license party there that is in favor of licensing polygamy, and ever since Utah has been a Territory or State when this party was in power it has licensed polygamy; it has licensed it for the last ten or twenty years and has never repented or said it was sorry for its past course; it has never declared against polygamy, and all polygamists are in favor of this party and vote its ticket.

But there is another party there that is opposed to polygamy, and takes the Bible ground on this subject, and declares against this sin, and every polygamist hates this anti-polygamist party. What would be my duty as a Christian and a voting citizen of Utah? And what would be the duty of the church in regard to these two parties? Should not the church courts interfere in politics enough to tell her members not to vote the polygamist party ticket? and should not ministers interfere in politics enough to tell their people from the pulpit not to vote the polygamist party ticket? Would not the church sin and the minister sin were they to keep quiet on this important subject? And, would not a church member, knowing this polygamist party by its fruits for the last ten or twenty years, in voting its ticket say to God and to men, here goes my vote to perpetuate the work of this polygamist party for the next four years? Is there any evading this legitimate conclusion if you vote this polygamist party ticket?

Now apply this course of reasoning to a party that licenses the liquor traffic. It has licensed the liquor traffic for the last ten or twenty years. It has never repented. It has never said it was sorry. It has never declared against the liquor traffic and said it was a bad thing and must go. The liquor men have nothing against this party. They do not denounce it in their papers. They are really in favor of it. They know if it comes into power their saloons will be licensed as in the past, and their business will enjoy prosperity. They can and will vote this license party ticket heartily, and they know by their votes it must come into power, for they hold the balance of political power. Christian men also know when this political party was elected to power, four years ago, or eight years ago, it licensed 240,000 saloons, which destroyed 100,000 men and women, body and soul, every year, making 400,000 during each Presidential term. By their fruits you know them.

Now, how can a Christian man vote such a license party ticket without by his vote saying in the sight of God and all good men, here goes my ticket to destroy 400,000 of my fellow-beings for time and for eternity during the next four years? This is the kind of fruit the tree has borne the last four years, and the last eight years, and the last twelve or sixteen years, and we all expect it to bear the same kind of fruit unless we cut it down politically or change its nature.

If this reasoning is not correct, and if licensing the saloon is not a greater sin than licensing polygamy, will some minister or doctor of divinity who votes a party ticket that licenses the saloon, be kind enough to show us its fallacy?

THE CHILDREN OF CHINA.

BY REV. G. S. MINER.

Many friends who have been sending picture-cards and money to help me in the day-school work have asked for an article telling all about the children of China. Time prevents my writing to each one individually, so I shall impose upon the kindness of the editor of the Christian Cynosure, as many of his readers are interested in the little people of this flowery kingdom. Let us first speak of the boys.

At least one-fourth of the children of the world are born to China parents. The goddess "Mother" is most diligently worshiped so that they all may be boys; however, she sees fit to send many girls. When the news of a child's birth is announced the sex is of the greatest importance. If it is a boy, there is great rejoicing and all the friends call upon the family with presents and congratulations. But if the baby is a girl, the parents are considered to be more in the need of sympathy than congratulations. The kindest remark is, "Well, a girl is worth something." Not unfrequently when a baby girl is born it is drowned, put upon a missionary's door-step, thrown into the street or tossed into the baby tower. A baby tower is built just outside nearly every city which acts as a burying place for infants, and many a girl has been thrown into its vault, even before it stopped breathing. Terrible, but alas too true.

Send me two dollars to aid in educating the children here, and I will send you a photograph of the baby tower that stands a few minutes' walk from where I live.

A peep at a Chinese baby lying in his huge bamboo cradle will reveal a pair of black eyes peering curiously out of a small, round sallow face. In the summer baby is not troubled with much clothing, but in the winter time he is muffled in so many wadded garments that one might easily take him to be a large football. His clothes are not white, but of some bright color, often scarlet. White is the color for mourning. To make the little fellow more docile and obedient in future life, a red cord is tied around his wrists. To guard him from the attacks of evil spirits and ward off numerous childish ailments, another red cord is fastened about his neck from which numerous small ornaments and cash are suspended.

An ear-ring is often put into one ear to fool the devils and make them think it is a girl. The devils care no more for the girls than the parents do. When baby is fourteen days old special thanksgiving is made, and offerings are laid before the family shrine of the goddess "Mother." When he is one month old a grand feast is prepared and relatives from far and near are invited. All are expected to bring a present, and during the day baby's riches in the way of silver rings, charms, lucky cash, painted duck's eggs, sweetmeats and cakes have wonderfully accumulated.

The great event is the shaving of the baby's head, which is done before the ancestral tablets or the shrine of "Mother." The grandmother is the principal guest of the day, and if wealthy, her presents are numerous and costly. The most important one is a gay little cap, ornamented with embroidery, and eighteen figures of the disciples of Buddha, which are believed to attract all the good influences towards the little wearer.

On this day baby receives his "milk" or "baby name," which serves until he goes to school, when the teacher selects another for him. Later on in life, when he is married he is generally given another name; when he enters into business, another; and if he succeeds in getting a degree, still another. The "milk" name is often Little, Stupid, Vagabond, Flea, Dirt, Spring Dog, Potato and the like, so when the spirits hear them called by such uncomplimentary names, they will think the parents care very little for their children and will not molest them. The parents of an only son often dress their child and shave his head similar to a Buddhist priest until he is eight or nine years old, and thereby make the spirits believe they care so little for their son that they are willing to make him a priest. If strong and robust at that age they dress him as other boys and congratulate themselves on having successfully deceived the old devils.

After the shaving festival, baby pays his first visit to his maternal grandmother, who presents him with numerous small gifts, each having some good signification expressing the old lady's desire that baby may quickly grow strong and sturdy, become a proficient scholar and famous man. When baby reaches the age of four months he is taught to sit in a chair, and thus relieve his mother or attendants of the care of nursing him. Soft sugar candy is placed on the little chair, and it is thought that henceforth he will be very fond of sitting in it. When the child goes out-of-doors he is frequently tied upon the back of his attendant. The women of the poorer classes do much of their domestic work carrying their baby in this manner. I have seen little girls almost stagger under the weight of a fat baby brother.

The day that is kept with greater rejoicings than any other in the baby's life is the anniversary of his birth. A great feast is spread, to which even the most distant relatives are invited, and every dainty known decks the festal board. Presents, as usual, came pouring in; the principal ones being pairs of embroidered shoes, worked by the skillful fingers of all the female relatives. Beautiful and mystic are the designs worked upon these little shoes, each signifying some wish of the giver. After the feast baby is placed in the middle of a table surrounded with articles significant of the various professions and trades, and the one he grasps in his tiny hand indicates his future career in life. Should he select the glittering mandarin's button, the excitement is intense, and congratulatory phrases are profuse.

Very numerous are the thanksgiving and propitiatory services performed at some idol temple, or before the family shrine, during the early years of baby's life. All of them are attended with the burning of incense and paper money, shooting of fire-crackers, and pounding of gongs and cymbals to frighten the evil spirits away from the little darling. At the age of six the Chinese boy should start to school.

The fortune-teller is consulted, and on a lucky day, fixed by the wise man, the little fellow makes his first appearance at school. If it is summer time he wears nothing but a loose jacket and a pair of baggy trousers made of cotton or grass cloth. But if it is cold he will have a round silk cap, a number of jackets and trousers and a pair of shoes with paper soles an inch thick. His forehead has been neatly shaved and cue carefully braided, and in all he makes a very fresh and tidy appearance.

Upon reaching the school-house, he gives the teacher a small present, and bows his head to the floor, thereby showing his willingness to submit to the teacher's authority.

A MEMENTO OF THE PAST.

Occasionally we discover a memento of the past, when people understood Freemasonry better than at present, and detested it accordingly. We met an elderly person who was a witness or participant in the agitation that followed the murder of Morgan from 1826 to 1835, when men and deeds were closely scanned. Masons were then ashamed or frightened, according as their acts had been disgrrceful or criminal, or conscience stricken at their complicity in a murder which had been planned and perpetrated by the order, sanctioned and justified by a part of the ministry, and furthered and protected by the officers of the law. We found a pamphlet which records these events or revives an incident that was discussed and believed to be a Masonic interference or perversion of justice. One of the most interesting and important pages of history could be composed from the reminiscences, correspondence and literature of the period. It would resemble such passages of the Bible as Numbers 25, 1 Kings 18, Ezekiel 8 and Ephesians 5.

By the way, the above quoted passages of the Bible fully describe and explain both sun-worship and Masonry. Baal in most cases was but another name for the sun, and Masonry is but another name for sun-worship, according to Mackey, the highest Masonic authority, who says that it is a philosophical development of it. (See Manual, p. 100) It began as Baal worship and was refined into Eleusinian mysteries, and is now developed into Masonry. It is the same thing in slightly changed garbs. Elijah was the greatest Anti-mason of antiquity, and the Bible is the greatest Anti masonic book. Masons use it as a decoy to allure Christians, but Anti-masons use it as a key to expose Mssonic institutions. No lodge can be opened without repeating a part of the ritual or initiation dialogue because it is its worship, but it is also sun-worship, as Ronayne proves step by step in "The Master's Carpet."

The excitement ran high in Otsego county, N. Y., and the Tocsin, now a Republican paper, was founded to advocate the Anti-masonic cause. Old inhabitants relate that Masons put their heads together in secret confabs or moved about with gloomy regrets or forebodings depicted in the countenances as if they had lost their dearest treasure or feared a reckoning with the law, as now when they repress adverse criticism of the order.

The past was reviewed, and among events discussed and deemed evidence of Masonic interference with justice, was a murder committed on the confines of the towns of Burlington and Exeter. These suspicions might or might not have been well founded, but the fine hand and earmark of Masonry was discernible in the careful collection and destruction of every memento of the deed, and especially of a poem by Elder Roland, which memorialized the incident and perpetuated the infamy of their lodge brother.

To appease the public, punishment or change of law was promised, but neither eventuated. The incident was partly forgotten through lapse of time, but was revived by the Anti-masonic agitation. The narrative is given in the subjoined verses, but the details of cruelty and moralizing are omitted. The child, five or six years of age, had been tied to a stake before the school building, her clothes fastened above her head and seven whips worn out upon her, because of her inability to spell correctly a certain word. She soon died of her injuries and the trial supervened. The nature of the crime and the issue of the affair are plainly indicated. The following are the verses:

ARNOLD'S TRAGEDY.

See a hapless orphan trying
How to spell a simple word;
Her uncle whipping, blood aflying;
None to her could help afford.
Betsey Amberg, oh, how shocking,
See her writhing on her post;
Was her tutor her protector?
Cruel man; what could be worse.

Arnold, sentenced after trial
For to die a dreadful death;
He confessed without denial
The law was just to take his breath.
When his sentence was pronounced,
Informing him that he must die,
The judge most solemnly denounced,
By telling him the reason why.

For seven years he had instructed
Lovely youth in public schools;
Now by passion he had acted
Worse than any common fool.
On the solemn day appointed,
A deep procession moved along;
Cruel Arnold now is mounted;
A warning to a numerous throng.

Near ten thousand were assembled,
All to view the culprit swing;
Cruel Arnold, how he trembled;
Methinks I see him while I sing.
When the signal just was given,
He was ready for to die,
A respite had, though not forgiven;
Who can tell the reason why?

Arnold swooned, was soon removed
Back to prison, where he lies;
Thousands see his fate suspended,
They were filled with great surprise.
If in wisdom legislation,
When they view this horrid crime,
Guard against new perpetration,
He'll not die before his time.

A STAR.

BLEEDING KANSAS.

BY S. C. HART.

LANE AND HARVEY AT HICKORY POINT—BATTLE AND FLIGHT.

Lane remained in Lawrence, after Harvey and Hill had started with their force to carry the war across the river north of Lawrence, till the 10th of September, when, hearing of Gov. Geary's arrival at Ft. Leavenworth, he determined to quit the Territory, going to Topeka that evening. The morning of the 11th he left Topeka by the "Lane road" on which his "Army of the North" had come into the Territory.

About fifteen miles north of Topeka a messenger met him and stated that on the 8th an armed band of men had entered Grasshopper Falls, now Vallay Falls, shooting in every direction, putting to flight the few men in town, burning Crosby's store and robbing the citizens; and that they were still depredating about there, and he was on his way to Topeka for help. Lane sent him on to Topeka for reinforcements to meet him at Osawkie. Then Lane and his thirty men turned into the Pro-slavery town of Osawkie and retaliated on it for the burning of Crosby's store at the Falls, robbing Dyer's store and taking mules and horses, etc., to the amount of thousands of dollars.

Mayor Whipple, of Topeka, joined him here with fifty men; and on the 13th hearing that there was a Pro-slavery force fortified at "Hickory Point," eighteen miles east, they started for that point, where Capt. Lowe was stationed with a company of eighty Pro-slavery men who had been furnished with United States arms to protect the settlement, but rather to protect himself, as he owned the town, consisting of a hotel or stage station, store and blacksmith shop, and to advance the Pro-slavery interests.

Capt. Robertson with forty men, who had been depredating the Free State settlers, stopped at Hickory Point, and owing to the news of Harvey's forces on the north side of the river, was prevailed on to stay a few days. Robertson was on his way to Lecompton with his company of South Carolinians for the purpose, perhaps, of assisting against Lane and Harvey. Newell's Mill, or Slough Creek, was only four miles from "Hickory Point," and they soon heard of the capture of Capt. Palmer's force, which threw them into consternation. Before their fears had subsided here came Lane and Whipple on the 13th and at once opened fire on them.

After a three hours' fight Lane withdrew and sent a messenger to Lawrence after Harvey's force and Capt. Bickerton with his cannon, and with orders to come around by Topeka. Hearing that Gov. Geary was at Lecompton, Lane left for Nebraska, and sent Whipple to intercept Harvey. But Harvey, instead of going around by that long, tedious route of sixty miles, crossed at Lawrence and proceeded direct, some twenty-five miles only. His principal reason no doubt for disregarding orders was, that his men had been on the march almost day and night for some time, and were not able to make the circuit and then fight.

Starting the evening of the 13th they traveled all night. On the morning of Sabbath, Sept. 14th, they halted at Newell's Mill, four miles from Hickory Point, for breakfast and a little needed rest. Harvey's force consisted of 110 foot and forty horse that could hardly be called infantry and cavalry, also the cannon, "Old Sacramento," and eight wagons. They made their appearance about ten o'clock, and men began to run from the place, but were mostly driven back by the horsemen who quickly surrounded it. Not finding Lane as he expected, Harvey was nonplussed, but concluded to open fire, and if Lane was in hearing it would bring him.

A flag was floating from each of the three buildings that constituted the town: store, hotel and blacksmith shop. From the blacksmith shop or fort floated a black flag, upon which Capt. Bickerton opened fire with the cannon, the first shot going clear through the shop and killing C. G. Newell, whose horse was shot under him in Lane's attack the day before. About twenty shots were fired at this log structure with little effect, the men falling flat as they saw the smoke belch from the cannon and the balls passed over them. A constant firing, meanwhile, of small arms was kept up by both sides with but little effect.

Harvey ordered a wagon load of hay backed up to the shop to smoke or burn them out. Forgetting their exposed feet below the load as they backed it up, the men in the shop, punching out the chinking, peppered their legs as soon as near enough, till they had to climb on the wagon-tongue and load till they could set fire to it and run away under cover of the smoke.

Seeing that Harvey was determined to kill or capture them, the Pro-slavery commander run up a white flag, and after much parleying, terms of capitulation were arranged. Each party agreed that the non-residents should quit the Territory. The Pro-slavery force on this, as all other occasions, had plenty of whisky, and they drank, shook hands and parted apparently friendly.

The Pro-slavery commander requested Harvey to camp right there with them that night as it was late, but Harvey thought best not to do so, and withdrew to Newell's Mill. Harvey was the guest of Mr. Newell that night. His men disagreed as to the need of a guard, and about forty of them withdrew into the bush a short distance from the main camp.

The casualties of the battle were: Pro-slavery, one killed and four wounded; Free State, five wounded, one seriously. That very night United States troops were on the way from Lecompton in search of Lane and Whipple of the Hickory Point battle.

A REMARKABLE BOOK.

Jonathan Blanchard, in his great Lincoln Hall speech in Washington, in 1884, said: "Eighty-six years ago the book which I hold in my hand (Rob'son's Conspiracy), written by an Edinburgh professor and dedicated to a member of the British Cabinet, was published in the city of New York. The burden of the book is to prove, not that all Freemasons are conspirators, but that 'Freemasonry is a conspiracy against all true religion and just government." The writer, Professor Robison, while in Paris, received at midnight from a Masonic friend, who was fleeing the country to escape imprisonment, a box containing the higher degrees of Masonry carefully written out. He was himself a Mason and did not reveal the ritual, so as to let outsiders into lodges. But being under no oath of secrecy as to the degrees in that box, he entered the higher lodges of Europe, and this book is the result."

OPEN LETTERS.

To Cardinal Gibbons and Mr. Echols, president of the American Protective Association:

LETTER I.

SIRS:—A large part of the American people think that Romanism and Masonry are natural enemies, and therefore I address to you jointly this series of open letters; one being the most prominent Catholic prelate on the continent, the other at the head of the famous A. P. A. organization which has done more than any other agency, unless it be Rome herself, to foster the idea.

A study of both systems in the light of their past and present history has convinced me that there was never a more mistaken notion; that Rome and Masonry were actually born of one mother, and the quarrel between them is only a Romulus and Remus fight for supremacy. I need not call your attention to the fact that a while ago the Pope pronounced a special ban against the Freemasons, Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias and Sons of Temperance, commanding all Catholics who were in those orders to come out at once on pain of excommunication. Instantly all the A. P. A. organs in the land flamed out in such a perfect blue blaze of wrath that their columns were fairly sulphurous. They abused the poor old gentleman of the Vatican in the roundest terms, made frantic appeals to the Romanist members to assert their independence of such tyranny, and behaved generally as if Leo XIII. had done them some unexpected and grievous wrong. It looked very much on the face of it as if they wanted the papal blessing.

About the same time Miss Willard invited Roman Catholic and Jewish women to join the W. C. T. U. Many white ribboners, the writer among them, were doubtful as to the wisdom of this step. The W. C. T. U. being a Christian, but not a sectarian organization, we did not see the propriety of extending a special invitation to any particular religious class. At the same time we stood ready to welcome to our organization any Roman Catholic woman who joined with a sincere desire to help in the great work of overthrowing the rum traffic.

Now if the Pope at that time had issued a bull forbidding all Roman Catholic women from joining the W. C. T. U. and excommunicating those already in unless they came out at once, think you we should have poured out a single vial of wrath on his mitred head? or even taken the trouble to draw the cork? We should have smiled sweetly and gone with undisturbed serenity about our business. I think, however, that if he had blessed us we should have had something to say, for the very last thing we want is the papal benediction. Masonry is a near relation to Rome and the A. P. A. is a child of Masonry. The W. C. T. U. is no relation at all and expects no family favors. Hence this remarkable difference.

The strong likeness between the two is continually cropping out. Let me mention one instance. A Masonic minister recently told his congregation that "Jesus Christ was the Grand Worshipful Master of the greatest secret society that was ever known." He who "ever spake openly!" He who uttered no word of divine truth that his disciples were not to speak in the light, and proclaim upon the housetops. But the same lying device, only varied to suit their savage audience, was used by the Jesuit missionaries in their zeal to convert the Indians. They told them that Christ was a great chief who had slain vast numbers of his enemies and wore their scalps at his belt. He, the Prince of Peace. He, meek and lowly; one who prayed for his murderers on the cross. Isn't the parallel exact? The only difference being that the Jesuit missionaries wanted to make converts to Romanism and the Masonic minister wanted to make converts to Masonry.

Allow me to instance another parallel. Loyola at first thought favorably of admitting women into the newly-formed Society of Jesus, but finally changed his mind and barred them out. Nuns may be Jesuits so far as imbibing the Jesuitical spirit and being tools of the order is concerned. And in the same way, while a woman can never take the Masonic vows, she can become what somebody has felicitously termed a Gill Mason; defending Masonry by all kinds of silly arguments, and it must be confessed when it comes to the drudgery of getting up lodge suppers and entertainments, a great deal more useful than her brother, the Jack Mason. Even the A. P. A., whose sole ostensible object is to fight Rome, will not admit her, however patriotic her record, but graciously gives her the privilege of going off by herself in a corner and forming a woman's A. P. A. of her own.

Loyola said the women annoyed him; they were in the way; they bothered him with scruples and questions of conscience and quarrels with each other. The Jesuits said that it was because he distrusted their ability to keep a secret, but undoubtedly the real reason was that he feared they would make bad material to work into his new society. The brave refusal of the nuns of Port Royal to bow to the Black Pope, though threatened with banishment and death, proved that he was right; and I am inclined to think that Masonry has saved itself from some embarrassing predicaments by adopting a similar procedure. I know at least one woman who would make a very uncomfortable member to admit into either society.

Rome and Masonry may call names and say a great deal of unpleasant truth about each other, but it is on the same principle that the pot called the kettle black. We should not mind their quarreling, however; in fact, the harder they pitched into each other the better we should like it, were it not that both sides are trying to win over good, patriotic men and women who are neither Catholics or Masons, and make them take at least a neutral position while the fight is going on.

Rome says to the good anti-secret brother or sister, "The church has always been opposed to Masonry. How foolish to fight your best ally against the lodge. Let us strike hands and cooperate." And some are beginning to hesitate and say, "Why not?" forgetting that Rome's idea of co-operation is always on the lamb and tiger order, with the lamb inside. Masonry on the other hand comes and says, "Rome has always persecuted us. She is our bitterest enemy, as we are her's. Then what folly to oppose Masonry! If you don't want Rome to capture our country drop your opposition to the lodge, at least so far as to join the A. P. A." And thousands have listened to the wily plea and gone into the A. P. A., to find their standard of spirituality lowered, to be shoved aside as mere underlings while unscrupulous men are pushed to the front and shame the holy name of patriotism with their open impiety and low machine methods. But one similar result is sure to follow "co-operation" on either line.

When man or woman in their zeal to advance a holy cause stands on the same platform with Rome and grasps her extended hand, they must forget the fires of Smithfield; they must forget the Waldenses and the Hussites and the Lollards; they must forget the fifty million martyred dead whose blood has been drunk by this hoary sorceress of the ages; they must forget that in her hand is a golden cup, and at their peril they breath its poisonous fumes—peril of the hypnotized brain and the sealed lips. So when an antisecretist in principle joins the A. P. A., he too must forget; forget that as the Apocalyptic beast Masonry united with Jesuitism to overthrow the Protestant cause in England and bring back the Catholic Stuarts, and two hundred years later was the dark, controlling power that stood behind and prolonged our Civil War; forget that Masonry has ever been the troubler of nations, the fountain-head of conspiracy, the fomenter of rebellion, the protector of every vile and evil thing. Let him forget all this if he can, but one thing he must remember—that henceforth there will be a padlock on his lips. This is the curse of the compromiser—that he must never dare utter his convictions. Yet it is only the beginning; there is a worse woe and a heavier judgment to come, that by and by he will have no convictions to utter.

This is no time to fling out the flag of truce; no time to make an unholy alliance with either of these foes of God and human liberty, simply because for the time being they happen to be foes to each other. When it suits their purpose, like Pilate and Herod they will be made friends.

I have no reason to suppose that either of you gentlemen will be satisfied with my conclusions, but every reason to suppose you will not. If, however, one loyal heart, which has been hesitating over this question, shall find through the blessing of God new strength and new light from this and succeeding letters, in which I hope to bring out the bottom facts in relation to this supposed inherent antagonism between Rome and Masonry, they will not have been written in vain.

Sincerely yours, ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

A REVIEW OF FREEMASONRY.

PART OF AN ADDRESS BEFORE THE OREGON STATE CONVENTION AT PORTLAND, AUG. 27, BY SECRETARY P. B. WILLIAMS.

Heretofore we have spoken mainly of the pagan and Polytheistic orgin of the order. Whether it has entirely divested itself of all these features would seem to be doubtful from certain forms of expression in the Masonic vocabulary. It has its "certain mystic forms of no recent date." The lodges are "opened in due and acient form." Besides, there are many other expressions of similar import. But leaving this question we now direct the reader's attention to another proposition.

The Freemasonry of this age is a system of deism. This proposition will be sustained by Masonic evidence. There is no Christ in what is known as "universal Masonry." And if they make quotations from the New Testament, or select some of their readings from that sacred volume, they are "Americanisms," and are so declared by Mr. Cross himself. (See page 81.) All the prayers are offered directly to God and not in the name of Jesus Christ at all. See the form of "prayer used at the initiation of a candidate." (Page 26, Cross's Masonic Chart.) Also the prayer at raising a brother to the sublime degree of Master Mason (page 67). Also, the "consecration prayer" (page 95). Also, pages 109, 118, 130 and many others.

Now, since the fall by transgression, no living man can approach unto or call upon God acceptably except through Jesus Christ our Lord. It follows, therefore, that all these Masonic prayers are purely deistic, and, being offered directly to the Father, are not acceptable to him. Nor will they ever be answered. Since the first promise after the fall the Lord Jesus is the only medium of approach to God. Everything, all acts of obedience and worship must be done "in the name of Christ," our Great High Priest. The simple statement of this fact is surely enough to satisfy any intelligent hearer who is familiar with the New Testament without quoting a single passage of Scripture, though the proofs are very abundant. These Masonic prayers, therefore, are not such as Christians are taught to offer up to God through the Great High Priest of their profession. Masonry is, therefore, deistic and not Christian.

Additional proof of this fact may be drawn from the following statement: "Freemasonry is an ancient and honorable institution, embracing individuals of every nation, of every religion, and of every condition of life." (Page 213) Jews, as well as Gentiles, who regard our Lord as an imposter, are freely admitted to the lodge and become members of this "ancient and honorable fraternity."

Again: "All fictitions of rank are laid aside, and all differences in religious and political sentiments are forgotten." (Page 214) It is said by Masons that no atheist can become a Mason. Nine-tenths of the atheists of the Pacific Coast are Freemasons. In France and other countries many atheists belong to the order. There was, a few years ago, a move, both in Belgium and France, to leave out of the Masonic formula the phraseology, "to the Great Architect of the universe." The debate was warm and resulted in the retention of the formula by a vote of one hundred against sixty-seven. So there must have been "sixty-seven" atheistic Masons against "one hundred" deistic. At the same time it was the opinion of the "one hundred" that there is nothing in the phrase to exclude or embarrass an atheist. And why so? Because an atheist might contend that the "Great Architect of the universe" was chance; and hence in the mouth of an atheist it might be used to mean something different from that sense in which his deistic brother used it. "From east to west, and between north and south, Freemasonry extends, and in every clime are Masons to be found." (Page 27, Cross's Chart.)

This being the case, it is no wonder that Turks, Arabs, Jews and all the rest are found within the Masonic fold. Let it be distinctly noted then, that no one is required to believe in Jesus Christ in order to become a Mason. Christianity is founded on the divinity and Messiahship of Christ. Freemasonry is not. Its "mysteries," "rites" and "ceremonies," as well as its "prayers," to say nothing of many other things, are all outside of the religion of Jesus Christ. And whether Christians can become or continue members of the "order" and participate in all its "mysteries," "rites," "ceremonies," "prayers," etc., without incurring guilt, remains to be considered.

REFORM NEWS.

MASONIC CORNER-STONE LAYING.

BOSTON, Mass., Sept. 16, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The day was fair; the music fine; the procession long, and the crowd immense at the City Hall corner-stone laying in Worcester, on the 12th inst. The military led the procession and after them the secret orders were very much in evidence.

By a Providence I was kindly given a seat with the Grand Lodge on the stage, where I could witness the ceremonies and hear the remarks of the Grand Master, Grand Secretary and Grand Chaplain of Masons in Massachusetts, who laid the corner-stone agreeable to the custom of Free and Accepted Masons, from time immemorial.

The personal of these savants was prepossessing and the decorations of some rivaled, if they did not exceed, those of Oriental princes or the aborigines of America. I will send you something more of the prayers, proclamations and religious services of the occasion soon, and simply write this note to apprise you that the matter is under serious consideration.

One daily paper noticed the presence of an anti-secrecy representative on the grounds, and although the comments were not complementary, they were probably as fair as prudence and a proper regard for lodge vengeance would permit.

Dr. John Robinson, wife and son called to-day and spent some time studying the lodge system by the aid of charts and books. They are from Glasgow, Scotland, and the doctor has been supplying the pulpit of Tremont Temple Baptist church during the absence of the pastor in Europe, besides preaching extensively at camp meetings and various large gatherings. The entire family are becoming thoroughly enlisted, and Mrs. Robinson has already begun aggressive work in New York City and at other points where she has been stopping.

Their attention was first called to our movement by reading "Danger Signals Nos. 1 and 2," handed to the doctor at Old Orchard, where I heard him preach five sermons during my visit. Like many who for the first time look into this "mystery of iniquity," he could scarcely credit the revelations and charges made, but resolved to investigate further. He expressed his gratification at having an opportunity to learn something of the organic structure, religious character, and the so-called secrets of the order of Masonry.

I shall improve an early opportunity to accept his cordial invitation to renew our study of "the mysteries," at the Bellevue hotel in this city, and meantime he will read Finney and other works treating on the subject. At present the doctor has charge of a noon and evening service daily, in Tremont Temple, but expects to start homeward in about two weeks.

JAMES P. STODDARD.

TOO MANY SOCIETIES.

1424 BRISTOL ST., PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 11, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The signs of the times prompts me to write you at this most important time. As a Cynosure subscriber for a number of years, I read carefully every number to see the drift your noble paper takes. We are now surrounded by a disturbing element in our politics. There is much danger of drifting with a dangerous current. While you claim to be based on strict Gospel principles, you should ever remember the words of Christ. "My kingdom is not of this world."

Every Christian, in taking a view of the political world, should prayerfully sympathize with the plainest and most peaceful way possible to solve the great problems of our times. New and untried ways are always dangerous, and more especially where lawlessness has any power. We gather from the prophecies of the Bible that near the close of this dispensation the beast under the control of the dragon, being the lawless element of the earth, will grow very powerful, and will defy the powers of nations and kingdoms. Hence Christians must move carefully, lest they receive the mark of the beast, and be condemned with anti-Christ. We are living in a dangerous time, and it concerns Christians more than ever to be on their guard, when lawlessness and anarchy begin to show their strength. Therefore Christian publishers as well as ministers should cry aloud from the walls of Zion, and give warning of the dangers arising on every side.

The noble work of your paper against secret orders should take another step forward, and in connection with the condemnation of secret orders, should condemn the reckless system of general organization of incorporated bodies. There is too much organization. It is destroying the peace and prosperity of the country. When men can act on their own judgment, they are always benefited, but when organizations have become the ruling power; men are hindered from using the noble traits of character which God has placed in the heart and mind of every rational man.

This excessive system of organization is one of the causes of our hard times. It is the foundation-stone of financial distress. Excessive corporation is the ruination of business. It causes trouble between the manufacturer and his workmen. Excessive organization has also entered the church, and has robbed it of its spiritual power, and has made the church a combination of worldly societies.

True Christianity is not a mere corporate society; it is a communion of saints with regulations founded upon the Word of God. Whenever a man-made order or society is instituted and governed by officers and laws within the church, then it has become a carnal body. God's order is often set aside and worldly orders have taken its place, and the Holy Spirit is no longer the ruling power. This is damaging to true Christianity. If Christians would but know their own dignity, their liberty, their adoption and their individual spiritual power, this corporate society work would soon come to an end. (Rev.) D. M. PFAUTZ.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LOOKING OUT FOR WASPS' NESTS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 16, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Washington preachers, to their credit be it said, do not often talk partisan politics from their pulpits nowadays, but Rev. F. D. Power, in his twenty-first annual sermon to the congregation of the Vermont avenue ("Garfield Memorial") Christian church, used politics, in its broad sense, to illustrate his sermon. He said in part: "This pastorate has reached its majority. Such a time is usually an occasion of rejoicing. The thousands of young men who, in November, will for the first time vote for a President will count it a distinguished honor. We are inspired by something of the same feeling of satisfaction. The voter is concerned with the present crisis.

"The citizen who loves his country and rightly estimates his high prerogative in the direction of its policy, thinks only of the best way to meet the ends of the hour. So it is with the responsibilities that belong to the position we have reached as a church that we are chiefly interested. An old English picture represents a king with the motto: 'I rule for all;' a bishop with the sentence, 'I pray for all;' a soldier with the inscription, 'I fight for all,' and a farmer drawing his purse reluctantly with the exclamation, 'I pay for all!' The American unites in himself the functions of all four. He governs, prays, fights for himself and pays all expenses, yet by the very reason of his exalted privileges is under highest obligations to exercise his rights in harmony with the principles and institutions of the republic. So we find ourselves now and always under the rule of faith and practice given by Christ.

"Never was there greater need of Bible knowledge. Bible-reading Christians will make praying Christians, and five hundred praying Christians can carry Washington for Christ. Politicians are often bitten. The young voter finds he has supported the wrong man and the wrong measures. Hannibal Hamlin tells how, when a boy, he and another boy discovered a bee-tree, but on examination found it contained only a wasp's nest. They knew a very niggardly old bee-hunter, and Hamlin said, 'Let's play a trick on the old miser?' So they offered to sell him the tree for $10; he offering fifty cents. After much palaver they sold out their rights to him for $2 and then took to their heels. The old man cut down the tree and then took to his heels, followed by the avenging wasps. Thousands of people are buying wasps' nests, and many in this campaign are coming out like the bee-hunter.

"Not so in religion. A man has everything to gain and nothing to lose in becoming a Christian. Believing in the Gospel of Christ, we should never be content unless we are bringing others to accept it. Let every man, woman and child be as anxious and diligent to convert sinners to Christ as the young politician is to get votes for his party, and we should work wonders. Once more: Your young voter puts his money into his cause. Thousands and hundreds of thousands are being used to-day to determine the election of next November, most of it unrighteously. And as men cannot carry an election without money, no more can the enterprises of religion be conducted without money." C. A. S.

HELP THE CHILDREN.

LARWILL, Ind., Sept. 14, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Jesus Christ, when upon earth, said suffer the children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven. The same spirit of forbidding them to come is in existence to-day, by denying them the place they should occupy in the church, and the work that should be done by them, and nine out of ten would do, were they granted the privilege by the aid and help of older ones. I do not mean to say that children must be put to work by themselves. They should be in the care and training of one or more of the best members of the church to which they belong; those who have a good experience in spiritual things and who govern well their own households, and they should have the co-operation, aid and help of the entire membership of the church.

In this enlightened day children reach the years of accountability, mentally, from three to eight years younger than when we were children. On account of being in possession of more knowledge than we older ones enjoyed at the same age, they feel that there ought to be something for them to do, and they generally find it, right or wrong. The young people with all these advanced ideas of education still lack some of the most essential elements which constitute their being.

1. They lack courage to do what is right.
2. They lack physical strength.
3. They lack judgment and experience, which are the most essential things.

Instead of parents getting children ready on Sabbath morning and giving them a penny, and then say, "Go to Sabbath-school," they should get ready themselves and say, "Come, children, let us go to Sabbath-school and church;" and when you do go and are appointed to teach them do not say, "I can't," or make some other excuse equally as unreasonable. Instead of allowing the children to act as their own teachers, older ones of riper years, judgment and experience should go to work at once. Do the best you can is all that can or will be expected from any one. Commence studying the Bible and practice it too, and your duty will be brought plainly to view. In conclusion I think I am safe in saying beyond successful contradiction, that if these suggestions were put into practice, the churches and Sabbath-schools would in one year's time present a different phase both spiritually, numerically and financially.

JOHN HELFRICH.

CHEERING NOTE FROM CALIFORNIA.

ROHNERVILLE, Cal., Sept. 8, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Let me give a few words of encouragement to those who are engaged in distributing the Cynosure as a messenger of light. Last fall Rev. P. B. Williams labored a month with us here in Humboldt. While here he sent in my name to the Cynosure office and we became readers of your valuable paper. We soon learned to love the Cynosure and its work. We passed our paper around and some copies fell into the hands of one of our respected citizens, Mr. Groten. He is opposed to all secret societies and became very much interested.

He is in business with a prominent man of Eureka, Cal., who was on the very verge of being initiated into the Masonic lodge. Mr. Groten having on hand several copies of the Cynosure, asked his friend to read them, which he did. The result was he became alarmed and subscribed for the Cynosure himself, and also sent for an exposition of Freemasonry. He burned up the application papers which he had already signed, and began to warn his friends by handing them the Cynosure.

Several of those who were trying to get him into the lodge have said that they will never go into the lodge room again. So you see, dear fellow workers, God is blessing the seed we sow. It is springing up and bearing much fruit. To our God be all the glory, who is working through his poor, weak instruments to overthrow the powers of darkness. Yours for Christ and the salvation of precious souls, E. P. GUNDLACK.

NO UNION WITH CATHOLICS.

MADISON, Wis., Sept. 14, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I will give you some reasons why we should never join with the Romish church to fight secrecy.

The first reason is, it is not the church of God, not even the smallest branch. History proves this and so does their doings in all lands. The Bible forbids us to side in with the ungodly for any purpose whatever, in all moral conflicts, because God wants the glory, and by him all such conflicts are won, "for without me ye can do nothing." In 2 Chron. 19: 2, Jehu said to Jehoshaphat, "Shouldest thou help the ungodly, and love them that hate the Lord?" And because he did, wrath came upon him. Dr. A. Clark says, "Who can doubt this who knows that he did help the ungodly and did love them that hated Jehovah?" And is not the wrath of God upon all those alliances which his people form with the ungodly, whether they be social, matrimonial, commercial or political?

If there is one truth in the Bible that seems to be more prominent than all others it is that all who will have the favor of God must acknowledge his Son as the pre-eminent one or they cannot have any help from God. "He that denieth the Son hath not the Father." We are warned not to be partakers of other men's sins or bid them Godspeed. If we as advocates on the Bible line join with them it shows that we acknowledge that they are a part of the Christian church, which they are not; but are the most degraded idolatrous organization on earth, which every man will say, that take the time to investigate. St. Paul said of them, "Their mouth speaketh great swelling words, having men's persons in adoration because of advantage, shewing himself that he is God" (the pope). King David also said of them, "The words of his mouth were smoother than butter, but war was in his heart; his words were softer than oil, yet were they drawn swords." "They only lie in wait to deceive." "They bless with their mouth, but they curse inwardly." She is rightly named in Rev. 17: 5: "Upon her forehead was a name written, Mystery, Babylon the Great, the mother of harlots, and abominations of the earth." She was drunk with the blood of the saints. That we know to be a fact, for history informs us that over sixty million have died by her dictation.

Think of St. Bartholomew's Day. This horrid deed was, however, applauded in Spain. At Rome, solemn thanksgiving were offered to God for its success, and medals were struck at Paris in honor of it. Who has ever heard that she has repented of any of her wrongdoing? No one; she is infallible. Shall I as an American citizen that loves my country turn in with those that hate our institutions; that are doing all they can to put the Bible out of our schools, which they have accomplished in Wisconsin and some other States? Then they call them godless sclools. "The public schools have produced nothing but a godless generation of thieves and blackguards," says Priest Schaner.

Prisons and reformatories, however, prove that the above is untrue. The report of Inspector Ries, of the Milwaukee House of Correction, in 1885 shows that 1,617 persons were sent to that penal institution; of these 877 were Catholics, The report shows this for five years at about the same ratio. They run over 70 per cent of the saloons. In the city of Madison out of 80 saloons they run 78 of them. I am constrained to believe, had we no Roman Catholics in our country we would have had prohibition before this. About 70 per cent of murders committed are done by them and 70 per cent die on the gallows; and so it is on every line of evil they take the prize.

During our late war a little more than 144,000 deserted, and of that number 72 per cent were Roman Catholics. Worse still, who was it that assassinated Abraham Lincoln? It was a Roman Catholic. The wretch who did it said, "I can never repent, though we hate to kill. Our country owed all our troubles to him. God simply made me the instrument of his punishment."

Then we have Patrick E. Prendergast of your city, who assassinated the late Mayor and who was a Roman Catholic, and used the following language: "I have done my duty, and I could not live in comfort and happiness had I not done so. I have paid the debt I owed to humanity."

Lastly, I wish to refer to that cruel tyrant, Henry Wirz, who commanded at Andersonville prison, who was the means of murdering so many, mostly by starvation. When he was hung at 10: 30 A. M. Friday, Nov. 10, 1865, two priests, Boyle and Wiggett, attended him on the scaffold.

Thus I might go on, but enough on that line. Though they take the oath of allegiance to be loyal soldiers or citizens, it proves to be of no avail, since they teach that we are bound not to keep our oaths with heretics, though bound by the most sacred ties. I here give you a partial list of Romish secret societies received from the editor of the Primitive Catholic of Brooklyn, N. Y.:

The Order of Catholic Knighthood; Knights of St. Michael; Knights of St. George; Knights of St. Paul; Knights of St. Francis; Knights of St. James; Knights of St. Wencesians; Knights of St. Vladishlaus; Knights of St. Albert; Knights of St. Alogoins; Knights of St. Joseph; Knights of St. Vincent; Knights of St. Francis; Knights of Latin Cross; Knights of St. Patrick. Then of course there are the Clan-na-Gaels and Hibernians and several new orders recently created to counteract the A. P. A. H. P. MARKS.

LETTER FROM A JEREMIAH.

RICHMOND, Va., Sept. 12, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have read the letter of Rev. Chas. P. Luce published in the Cynosure of Aug. 27th. I am not surprised to hear a member of the craft come to the rescue of the order. But when a minister writes such a letter it shows how strong a hold this Christless institution of Masonry has on the church in our land.

The writer not long since was discussing secrecy with a deacon in the old Covenanter church, and the good brother used some of Rev. Luce's arguments. He said there are good men in the lodge, and it can't be so bad as you picture it.

It is an open secret that in many places our United Presbyterian brethren can't enforce the discipline of their church against secret society members. To my personal knowledge, in some congregations Masons, Odd-fellows and other lodgemen hold communion in the church. In conversation with an elder on the subject he said, "I know it is wrong, and our pastor is much opposed to the lodge, but we will ruin our congregation if we attempt to enforce our discipline." I said, stand by the truth. Your written law is founded upon God's Word.

More than this, the Covenanter church is going to have serious trouble on the lodge question if the ministers do not wake up and warn the people. In many congregations, especially in the cities, the subject of secret societies is not mentioned. I am credibly informed that during the past year anti-secret lecturers have been refused the use of some Covenanter churches to lecture in. Only once before in my time has this been the case.

Now what does it all mean? It means that the anti-secret churches are drifting. We need more ministers who have the backbone to stand up and warn the people. The lodge has become so popular that if it were possible it would deceive the very elect. Our only hope is to educate the young and keep them out of the lodge. The church is the organization Jesus Christ set up to carry on his work among men, and if the church fails in her testimony where will the end be?

I have faith that the Samuels are not all dead, and they will arise and demand of Saul to hew Agag in pieces. As the Amalekites were to be blotted out, so shall the Christless lodges. This will never be done until the church of Christ cleanses herself and refuses to fellowship members of secret societies. "Therefore, cry aloud, spare not; lift up thy voice like a trumpet and show my people their transgressions, and the house of Jacob their sins." R. A. M.

THE LODGE AND THE SALOON.

BLANCHARD, Ia., Sept. 14, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Some of your readers will remember that on the morning of Aug. 24, 1895, this town was visited by a fire that consumed one-half of the business houses. We have time and again, since the fire, publicly laid the blame of it at the door of the lodge, and have yet to hear from a single individual that we were wrong. By request we now undertake, in a series of letters, to give a history of the fire and the events connected with it which have cost the good people of our community many thousands of dollars.

Blanchard is situated in the southwestern part of Iowa, on the State line between Missouri and Iowa, at the point where the Omaha and St. Louis R. R. crosses that line. It has between seven and eight hundred inhabitants, and is surrounded by a very fertile country and draws its trade from an area fifteen miles long by ten miles wide. It has three churches, the M. E , United Presbyterian and Covenanter, with an aggregate membership of six hundred, who with their families number about 1,500.

It has six lodges; the A. O. U. W., I. O. O. F. No. 429, I. O. O. F. No. 67, A. F. & A. M., M. W. of A. and the G. A. R., with an aggregate membership, as near as we can find out, of less than 200. The churches in the past have been reasonably free from lodge influence, but the lodge has had a growing influence in the M. E. church. The pastor at the time of the fire had joined the I. O. O. F. elsewhere, but tried to be indifferent here, and told me that he was opposed to secret societies, but the lodgemen counted him as one of their number.

The present pastor is a Freemason, and accompanies the worst men in the community to the Masonic lodge at Elmo, Mo., so that the lodge has a strong grip on that church to-day. The other two churches, which together have some 250 members, are noted for their opposition to the lodge. As to politics, we have all shades like other towns. The Republicans have a very small majority over all others; the Democrats and Prohibitionists coming next in order of numbers.

From the founding of the town the struggle between the factions has centered around the temperance cause. Early in the '80s an attempt was made to establish a saloon in Blanchard, but it was soon driven across the line into Missouri and harassed to death. Lodge doctors tried selling liquor out of their drug stores, but the W. C. T. U. and its supporters were on the watch, and when one doctor had to pay a heavy fine, the others were more careful. Thus Blanchard was a temperance town except that, being on the line between Missouri and Iowa, a good deal of whisky was smuggled in by the lodgemen through the livery stable and in other ways.

Some time in 1892 a lodge doctor of unscrupulous character moved into the town, and intoxicants began to flow out of the drug stores on his prescriptions. Other doctors were emboldened to do the same thing. The temperance people were soon aroused. It did not take them long to strike the trail, and the lodge doctor fled to Missouri. He lived there in great fear for two years, and soon after the fire, left his wife and fled the country and was not heard of until last week.

HOW INSANE ANIMALS ACT.

Horses, Cats and Dogs That Have Lost Their Wits.

Insanity in the human subject, it is supposed by some, has no analogue in the lower animals. Yet many causes will lead to the permanent loss of all self control. Cattle driven from the country through the crowded thoroughfares of a town will, under the influence of this sudden change of condition, work themselves into a state of excitement and fury which must at least be closely allied to madness. Horses have been known to go mad in the midst of the bewildering scenes of a battlefield. At Balaklava an Arabian horse turned upon its attendant, who happened to be drawing water, seized him in its mouth, threw him to the ground and then kneeling on him attacked him like an infuriated dog. Before the terror could be subdued it had bitten off another soldier's finger and seriously wounded the army "vet."

Another instance is related of a docile horse which one hot summer suddenly went mad. Everything that came within its reach it seized in its teeth and shook like a terrier would a rat. It raided the pigsties and threw the inmates one after the other into the air, trampling on the bodies as they fell. Afterward it almost killed its own master after maiming for life the farrier who was called in. This, at least, must have been a case of insanity. The cause of such insanity is often to be found in congenital malformation of the bones of the head. A scientist of authority even goes so far as to prove by what appears to be incontestible evidence that animals—cats, dogs and monkeys—have been observed to have delusions very similar to those of insane people.

How Anchovies Are Caught.

The anchovy is a small fish about three inches long belonging to the herring family. It comes into the Mediterranean from the Atlantic in vast shoals for spawning, and is caught mostly in the months of May, June and July. It is taken at nighttime, when the small boats engaged in the fishery put out in numbers from the Italian shores, furnished at the stern with lights. The fish are attracted by these lights in immense numbers, and are literally ladled out of the water, for by no courtesy can the operation be called fishing. The best ground is at Gorgona, a small island off Leghorn. This fish was in former times tolerably common off the English coast.

How the House Bound May Get Air.

Elderly people and others who may be temporarily house bound and prevented from enjoying a regular daily stroll outdoors can devise a fair substitute as follows: Bundle up as if for the usual constitutional, select a large sunny room, preferably at the top of the house, open wide the windows, shut off the heat and move aroundd briskly, going to the window and inhaling the fresh air deeply through the nostrils. We have often called attention to the fact that house air, with its many impurities, overheated condition and general lifelessness, is one of the principal predisposing causes to colds and catarrhal affections.

Where a patient or invalid is confined to bed, if the shoulders are kept well covered and the head lightly protected, the windows may be opened and the room flushed with fresh air without any special risk, provided the current does not strike them too directly. The danger from want of proper ventilation is decidedly greater. Deep inhalations of air at the open window, taken gently through the nose, impart an enlivening and tonic influence to the whole nervous system, which can soon be demonstrated by a personal experiment.

How to Make a Baked Rhubarb Pudding.

Five sticks of rhubarb, one-quarter pound of pounded sugar, one-quarter pound of butter, some stale bread. Line a pie dish with slices of bread and butter, cover with cut up rhubarb strewed with sugar and thin slices of bread and butter, and so on alternately until the dish is full, having the rhubarb and sugar on the top; cover with a plate and bake one-half hour. Serve hot.

How to Use Old Linen.

Tablecloths that are much worn in the center will often have edges that are really stout and strong enough to make napkins that will prove amply good to find their way next fall into the children's school lunch baskets. The school lunch basket, it is well known, is a fatal spot to place a napkin that is the least valuable.

The towels with much worn centers make excellent wash cloths, and, if doubled and bound with tape, admirable eating bibs for the small boys and girls of the family. The old towel wash cloths are much better minus hems, deep overcasting and linen floss being a more comfortable finish for the edges.

Hemstitching on linen is such a dainty mode of finishing table linen that the neat housewife is ever proud to have her very best tablecloths and napkins thus finished. A dozen damask napkins to be hemstitched will furnish the nicest kind of "pick up" work when one is away on one's summer vacation.

FREEMASONRY'S REAL CRIME.

There is an impression among certain persons, that if any one betrays the claimed secrets of Freemasonry, that some fearful penalty will be visited upon the betrayers by Freemasons. If a man speaks in the presence of his wife of the utter wickedness of Freemasonry, she will hold her breath and counsel silence for fear of some dreadful injury being inflicted upon her husband and his family, if any Freemason should hear of his having made any such utterance. Professed ministers of the Gospel teach that it is a great crime for any one to take the oaths, and then expose the claimed secrets of the order. The great crime associated with the matter is, that any man should claim that an oath should be kept, binding the person taking the oath to commit such a crime, as cutting one's throat, as pulling out one's tongue by the roots and committing murder in other horrible and fiendish ways. Who can account for any one professing to be a minister of the Gospel, consenting to adhere to Freemasonry?

HOW TO STOP SUCH IMPUDENCE.

The Worcester Evening Gazette, Sept. 12th, is a special issue, giving a report of the laying of the corner-stone with Masonic ceremonies of the new City Hall of that town. Several pages are devoted to the ceremonies and glowing descriptions of the outpouring of civic and military organizations, with their marshals, bands, horsemen and marching bodies in uniform. Thus we have this secret order with its murderous cut-throat oaths, advertising itself at the expense of the public, a very large majority of whom would rise in indignation against it, were they informed of its selfish aud criminal character.

And yet we find this organization flaunting itself before the public on every occasion, and its members by its assistance stealing into places of official power, and then using that official influence to strengthen and parade the order. How impudent for such an institution as Freemasonry to require tax-payers who are members of churches that exclude Masons from their membership to pay for such advertisement of the order, and to require even women to do the same, whom they swear never to initiate.

It does seem that such impudence could be prevented if a citizens' meeting could be called before such Masonic interference with public buildings takes place. At this meeting let petitions be circulated and public sentiment aroused. Again and again this has been done and the Masonic order has been compelled to chisel their inscriptions from corner stones, even Masons themselves uniting in the protest.

SECRET BUT NOT PRIVATE.

"Secret societies are a man's own private affairs." In the sense in which a man's whole conduct is so, this is true. Every act of life is one for which a man is individually responsible. His acts in becoming a member of secret orders, and in maintaining his connection with them, are not an exception. In this sense "secret societies are a man's own private affairs."

There is another sense in which it is far from true. The boundaries within which a man can act exclusively by himself are limited. Alexander Selkirk seemed an exception to the rule, but the pen of Defoe picked the lock of his exclusion. No one can separate his life from the web into which even its slenderest threads are woven. The world outside is affected in many ways by the life inside. Even thoughts and moods express themselves in looks, tones and manners, influencing even those who pass on the street. A life that is watchful and prayerful is something to the world that a careless, irreverent life is not. Yet conscientiousness and prayerfulness are peculiarly "a man's own private affairs."

In order to urge this plea successfully the member must show that membership has no influence on him. If his society is a colorless thing that does not affect him at all, then it leaves him just what he was before, exerting the same personal influence. If it is a powerful agency, affecting him no matter how, then it is more than his own private affair, for whatever influences a man modifies his influence in turn.

Again, if his membership helps to augment the influence of the local lodge, it ceases to be a private matter, unless the lodge is a private and uninfluential thing. Also, it ceases to be a private affair and merely his own, as soon as it comes to be anything whatever to the other members. In so far as it is their affair it is not his own private affair.

Prospective members fall into the same line. If in the slightest degree his membership promotes the joining of anyone else, or prevents his joining, it loses the exclusiveness claimed. The plea is specious but ill-founded. In this respect it is of the same complexion as many other pleas put forth on behalf of the lodge. Like others, it can be assumed in the dark but cannot be substantiated in the light.

MASONRY AND THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

Prof. John Robison, so long professor of Natural Philosophy in the universities of Glasgow and Edinburgh, and author of "Robison's Conspiracy," proves in this remarkable book, which ought to be read by every American citizen, that the French Revolution was the undoubted result of Masonic intrigue. He quotes extensively from a popular French work written by Prof. Lesranc, president of a seminary at Caen in Normandy. The author was butchered in the massacre of September, 1793.

He says that "on the death of a friend, who had been a very zealous Mason, and many years a Master of a respectable lodge, he found among his papers a collection of Masonic writings, containing the rituals, catechisms and symbols of every kind, belonging to a long train of degrees of Freemasonry, together with many discourses delivered in different lodges, and minutes of their proceedings. The perusal filled him with astonishment and anxiety. For he found that doctrines were taught, and maxims of conduct were inculcated, which were subversive of religion and of all good order in the state; and which not only countenanced disloyalty and sedition, but even invited to it. He thought them so dangerous to the state that he sent an account of them to the Archbishop of Paris long before the Revolution, and always hoped that that reverend prelate would represent the matter to His Majesty's ministers, and that they would put an end to the meetings of this dangerous society, or would at least restrain them from such excesses. But he wss disappointed, and therefore thought it his duty to lay them before the public."

Prof. Robison adds in a footnote:

"Had the good man been spared but a few months, his surprise at this neglect would have ceased. For, on the 19th of November, 1793, the Archbishop of Paris came to the Bar of the Assembly, accompanied by his Vicar and eleven other clergyman, who there renounced their Christianity and their clerical vows: acknowledging that they had played the villain for many years against their consciences, teaching what they knew to be a lie, and were now resolved to be honest men. The Vicar indeed had behaved like a true Illuminatus some time before, by running off with another man's wife and his strong box. None of them, however, seem to have attained the higher mysteries, for they were all guillotined not long after."

COLORED AND WHITE FREEMASONS.

The Planet of Richmond, Va., in its issue of Aug. 29, gives some interesting news in reference to white Masons recognizing colored Masons for the first time in the history of Masonry in the United States. It says:

"The Supreme Council of the Accepted Scottish Rite Masons of the 33d degree for the State of Louisiana, and Jurisdiction, which is a white body of Masons, and is composed of some of the leading white Scottish Rite Masons in the country. The Supreme Council of the State of Louisiana has a membership of over 5,000 members. They have officially recognized the colored United Supreme Council of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite Masons of the 33d degree for the Southern and Western Masonic Jurisdiction United States of America. Grand Orient at Washington, D. C.

"This Supreme Council is presided over by the Illustrious John G. Jones, 33d degree, of Chicago, Illinois, who is the Sovereign Grand Commander. These two Supreme Councils of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite have exchanged representatives. The Illustrious O. B. Druer, 33d degree, of Louisiana, who is one of the most prominent white Masons in the State of Louisiana, has been appointed and commissioned as the representative of the United Supreme Council of Washington, D. C., near the Supreme Council for the State of Louisiana. The Illustrious Dorcey F. Sequile, 33d degree, of Washington, D. C., who is the Grand Secretary General of United Supreme Council, and who is a very eminent and learned Mason, has been appointed and commissioned as the representative of the Supreme Council of Louisiana, near the United Supreme Council of Louisiana, for the Southern and Western Masonic Jurisdiction.

"This is the first time in the history of Masonry in the United States of America where the white Masons have officially recognized the colored Masons, and exchanged representatives. This success of this laudable work was brought about and accomplished through the efforts of the Illustrious John G. Jones, of Chicago, in bringing the white and colored Masons in the United States together in one bond of fraternal brotherhood. We shall now have reasons to rejoice that the march of progress is onward and upward and the universal brotherhood of man in the United States fully and fairly established, and the world will be made better by their noble example.

"This goes to show and prove that prejudice in the Masonic order is dying out among the white Masons, for Masonry knows and recognizes no man on the account of the color of his skin or the texture of his hair, for Freemasonry is established upon the broad principle believing in the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man."

THE POLITICAL SITUATION IN EUROPE.

The following excellent statement of the present European situation and the influences leading to it, we take the liberty of condensing from an article in the Times of Restitution:

"Can we understand the present political condition of Europe without an inquiry into the history of the past, and that from a religious standpoint? Are not the various nations mere fragments of the one universal Roman empire ruled by the Cæsars? Then prevailed everywhere a temporary peace; but then also Christ was born, and ever since there have been a sword and consequent disunion.

"The preaching of the apostles in the course of two and a half centuries threw down the altars of pagan Rome, and, as Gibbon confesses, the Roman anti-christ was divided into Eastern and Western. When Constantine declared for Christianity he moved his court to Constantinople. Two centuries later the German barbarians, professedly Arian, deposed Augustulus, the last of the Cæsars.

"In the eighth century we see the reaction under Charlemagne. He vainly strove to revive the Western anti-christ; and under his successors Italy was broken up into several states. France became the kingdom of the middle classes, while Germany grew into an empire. Then in the seventh century the bishops of Rome claimed to be the representatives of Christ, and in the eleventh century Gregory VII. could depose Henry, emperor of Germany; while in the East appeared the false prophet Mahomet, calling himself the intercessor that Christ had promised—inciting to conquest the Arabs of the deserts, whose powerful successors extended from Tartary in the distant east to the Atlantic on the west,—yielding in turn subsequently to the Ottoman Turks, who closed the Middle Ages by the capture of Constantinople.

"The popes, from the eleventh to the thirteenth centuries, poured hosts of Crusaders into Mahometan Asia; though again, in the sixteenth century, Western Europe was broken up by the contentions of Catholic and Protestant states, papal bulls and interdicts being now of no account.

"The age of Cromwell witnessed an outburst of Puritanism, breaking the spell of kings and founding a great republic beyond the Atlantic. Subsequently also William III. and Marlborough humbled the Catholic Louis XIV.

"A century ago the atheistic revolution of Robespierre shook all Europe to its foundations, sending forth the armies of Napoleon to raise up a vast democratic empire, which speedily collapsed before the navies of England and the military strength of the Czar, the head of the Greek church.

"What now is the aspect of affairs? Every European country and colony is infested with the secret societies of atheism, plotting the overthrow of kings and governments; and amid increased commercial activity and new mechanical inventions, every country is burdened with expensive navies, vast standing armies and superabundance of war materials.

"Spain, once so formidable in the days of Queen Bess; Sweden too, under Charles XII.; Holland also, under Stadtholders,—are hardly now important factors in the solution of political problems. France remains exhausted because of Napoleonic wars and frequent revolutions. Catholic Austria has virtually become the vassal of Protestant Prussia, whose king has assumed the title of German Emperor. England, yet the greatest colonial empire, watches with jealousy the advance of Russia toward the Bosphorus. And is not the Turkish Mahometanism aught else than a fetid carcass fit to be cast out upon the fields of Asia?

"Then if the outlook is towards utter disintegration, are not the prophecies of the Bible near their fulfillment?—that at the end of the six thousand years from the creation, the Sabbath of a thousand years would dawn upon the one universal kingdom owning Christ as king? The stone breaks the image in pieces and becomes a great mountain (rock) filling the earth."

WHERE DO THE BENEFITS COME IN?

Freemasonry claims great benefits for its members. The benefits or advantages to be admissible must be just and lawful. If they be just and lawful why should they be bound in secrecy by the most cruel and savage death penalties? This binding in secrecy is a positive demonstration that the advantages claimed are both unjust and unlawful. Ignorance of the true inwardness of Freemasonry upon the part of intelligent, conscientious people allows it to live a day. If it could but stand before them in its true light they would smite it with the sword of justice, and blot it from the face of the earth as a monstrosity of shame and dishonor. To think that such a vampire can live under the shadow of churches and schoolhouses is the wonder of all who honor truth and love righteousness.

One exhibition of the preparation for initiation in the presence of refined persons would be so shocking that they would turn away with the greatest pity for both those preparing for the initiation and those aiding in the preparing. What man could feel proud of stripping off another's clothes for the purpose of preparing for initiation in Freemasonry, which is effected in the most shameful manner?

Yet we have heard ministers of the Gospel, so-called, attempting to make much of such outrages against all common decency. It is a foul blot upon civilization. It is an insult to education, a menace to well-regulated homes. It is a trifler with the Bible and a disgrace to Christianity. It is absolutely repulsive to all common sense and refined decency. To think of ministers, professing to be called of God to preach the pure Gospel of Jesus Christ, decoying young men from home, to be initiated into Freemasonry. What a shame! What a disgrace! What an injury to every interest of society! How God is dishonored and all truth shamed by such conduct.

WHAT INSPIRED THE REIGN OF TERROR?

The president of a seminary in Normandy, Prof. Lesranc, in 1870, is Prof. Robison's reliable witness that the French Revolution, like our late slaveholders' rebellion, was plotted in Masonic lodge rooms. Dr. Robison says:

"Mr. Lesranc then turns our attention to many peculiar rites in the Revolution, which have a resemblance to the practices in Freemasonry. Not only was the arch rebel, the Duke of Orleans, the Grand Master, but the chief actors in the Revolution: Mirabeau, Condorcet, Rochefoucault and others were distinguished office-bearers in the great lodges. He says that the distribution of France into departments, districts, circles, cantons, etc., is perfectly similar with the same denominations, to a distribution which he had remarked in the correspondence of the Grand Orient. The President's hat in the National Assembly is copied from that of a Tres Venerable Grand Maitre.—The scarf of a municipal officer is the same with that of a brother Apprentice.—When the Assembly celebrated the Revolution in the cathadral, they accepted of the highest honors of Masonry by passing under the Arch of Steel, formed by the drawn swords of two ranks of brethren. Also it is worthy of remark, that the National Assembly protected the meetings of Freemasons, while it peremptorily prohibited every other private meeting.

"The obligation of laying aside all stars, ribbands, crosses and other honorable distinctions under the pretext of fraternal equality, was not merely a prelude, but was intended as a preparation for the destruction of all civil distinctions, which took place almost at the beginning of the Revolution. And the first proposal of a surrender, says Mr. Lesranc, was made by a zealous Mason. He farther observes that the horrible and sanguinary oaths, the daggers, death-heads, cross-bones, the imaginary combats with the murderers of Hiram, and many other gloomy ceremonies, have a natural tendency to harden the heart, to remove its natural disgust at deeds of horror, and have paved the way for those shocking barbarities which have made the name of Frenchman abhorred over all Europe. These deeds were indeed perpetrated by a mob of fanatics, but the principles were promulgated and fostered by persons who style themselves philosophers."

—A daily paper says, "At a recent gathering in California a special train was chartered which was strictly Masonic, the entire crew of trainmen and every passenger being members of the order."

—A meeting was announced at 2 P. M. last Monday in T. H. Gault's law office, Stock Exchange building, for the purpose of organizing a ministerial association of the United Presbyterian ministers of Chicago Presbytery.

—Prof. W. W. White sails, Sept. 30th, for a two years' visit to Calcutta, India, where he will labor among the 500 students of that city. He gave a brief farewell address to the Moody Institute in this city on Sabbath, Sept. 13th.

—A dispatch from Omaha, Neb., dated Aug. 3, says that Governor Holcomb was to-night initiated into the mysteries surrounding the order of the Knights of Ak-Sar-Ben. About sixty candidates from that and other cities took the degree.

—The annual session of the National Haymakers' Association of the United States was held at Paterson, N. J., Aug. 9. The organization has hitherto been composed of Red Men, who have held office in that order, but at to-day's session a resolution was introduced: That the words "Improved Order of Red Men" shall be stricken from the constitution, thereby admitting anybody to the order. This resolution will be acted upon at the next annual session.

—The writer while pastor in an Iowa town was earnestly solicited to join the Freemasons by the Worshipful Master of their lodge. There are few ministers who could not testify to a similar experience, and yet in the face of this we often find in the columns of the Masonic press such statements as this: "There is no proselyting in Masonry. Those who desire to obtain its rights and privileges must conform to ancient usages and customs. It solicits no man."

—A dispatch from Madrid, Spain, dated Aug. 22, says that the government has instructed the Governor of the Philippine Islands, Captain-General R. Blanco, to act energetically in the matter of the intrigues and to watch the secret societies. If necessary, the Premier added, the garrisons of the island will be re-enforced.

—The old organization known as the Knights of Labor has suffered a severe blow from the retirement of the Window Glass Worker's Association from affiliation, and it is believed that the Knights will soon go to pieces. The American Federation of Labor is now the largest and strongest general organization of trade unions in this country.

—Rev. W. B. Stoddard in writing from Boston, Sept. 18, says: "My time during the past week has been chiefly occupied in the usual routine work. I have spoken in some of the missions and prayer meetings, and distributed several thousand pages of tracts at the laying of the corner-stone of the new city hall in Worcester. I expect to return to Washington early next week and prepare for the fall meetings."

—Rev. Henry Loehlin and Miss M. Louise Stoddard were married at the home of Secretary Rev. J. P. Stoddard, on Thursday, September 17, 1896. This interesting occasion was the anniversary of the marriage of Miss Stoddard's mother and also of her grandmother, the wife of the late President J. Blanchard. An older daughter of Secretary Stoddard is the wife of Rev. J. W. Fifield, one of the best as well as best-known pastors in his denomination in Chicago.

—Rev. F. J. Davidson, of New Orleans, La., whose church, parsonage and library were burned July 20th, is well entitled to the aid any of our anti-secret friends can render him. Bro. Davidson was our agent in the South for several years, and did much self-sacrificing work for the cause, and as he has twice been burned out since, it is most likely he suffers as a witness for Christ. Any contributions for him sent to this office will be acknowledged and forwarded to Bro. Davidson.

—Miss Flagg, editor of the Woman's Voice of Boston, writes: "The A. P. A.'s have always strongly advocated Masonry on the ground that Rome can never be successfully opposed without their help. Masonry, when she organized the A. P. A., showed her cunning. She is keeping multitudes out of the anti-secret ranks in this way. Both Rome and Masonry are bidding for the land of the Puritans, and if either of them get it, it will be because the people are ignorant of their close relationship."

—Albert Lynch, the famous French artist, is said to have given us a new and distinctive type of "American girl" in a picture completed after his return from a recent extended visit to this country. His characterization of young American womanhood is exceedingly interesting and attractive—the conception of a critical student, and the creation of a skilled painter. Mr. Lynch was commissioned by the Ladies' Home Journal to portray the "American girl" as he saw her, and his picture will be reproduced in the October number of that magazine.

—As an illustration of the friendly feeling existing between Freemasons in this country and England, we have an illustration in this dispatch dated Rochester, England, Aug. 3, 1896: "The Freemasons of Rochester and Chatham held a meeting last evening to welcome the Rev. W. S. Hubbard, of Rochester, N. Y. He was greeted with an address of welcome and a most cordial reception was extended to him by the mayor of Rochester and Dean Hole. The latter spoke of the kind reception accorded him everywhere in the United States, and said that the processional cross which Dr. Hubbard brought as a gift from the Rochester (N. Y.) Freemasons to Rochester cathedral would always be treasured. Dr. Hubbard in replying, assured his hearers of the undying friendliness of the United States toward Great Britain, adding that if they had heard anything to the contrary they must remember that not all living in America are Americans. Prior to the meeting Dr. Hubbard preached in the cathedral here."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Sept. 27. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—Lessons from David's life and words. —II Sam. xxii, 1-22.

David (well beloved) was the son of Jesse. He was the youngest son of a family of two children and was born in Bethlehem. His life has been divided into three portions: (1) His youth. (2) His relations with Saul. (3) His reign. David was short in stature, had red hair and blue eyes. He was well made and possessed great strength and agility. The first time David appears in history is when, at the annual sacrificial feast, he is anointed by Samuel to succeed Saul. After his anointing David resumes his usual duties. Next he is summoned before Saul to chase away the king's madness by music. One incident only of his shepherd life is recorded, his conflict with a lion and a bear in defending his flocks.

David's relations with Saul began a few years afterward, at the time of his victory over Goliath. Saul then became interested in David and took him to his court. He was (1) an armor bearer, (2) a captive over 1,000, (3) son-in-law by his marriage with Michal, Saul's daughter, and (4) captain of the king's bodyguard. The friendship of Jonathan during this time and the treachery and jealousy of Saul are well known.

At Saul's death David was crowned king over Judah at Hebron. Seven and one-half years later he also became the king of Israel. He conquered Jerusalem and made his capital there and raised the kingdom to a high standard and a commanding position in the world. David was a born poet and his psalms as religious lyrics stand unsurpassed. His life and words teach us many important lessons.

1. A lesson on prayer. David was a man of prayer. He "inquired of the Lord" what he should do and followed the directions of God. His trust in God was sublime. His psalms breathe a wonderful spirit of prayer and communion with God.

2. A lesson on thanksgiving. David was never an ingrate. He was thankful to God and thankful to man. "I will give thanks unto the Lord" was the keynote of his life. He expressed his thanksgiving to God in words and acted it in his life. He was also grateful to Jonathan for his kindness, and manifested it by caring for his son.

3. A lesson on repentance and confession. David sinned grievously. Yet he repented of his sin. He confessed it to God in great anguish and sorrow. The Fifty-first Psalm is a repentance and confession of sin that has rarely ever been felt or expressed by men. This is the right attitude to take toward sin. We should repent of it, confess it to God and give it up.

Bible Readings.—I Sam. xvi, 11-13; xvii, 19-54; xviii, 1-4; II Sam. vi, 11-17; vii, 1-16; ix, 1-13; xii, 1-14; xviii, 32, 33; I Chron. xvi, 1-12; Ps. xxiii, 1-6; li, 1-19; ciii, 1-10; John vii, 42; Acts ii, 25-31.

Religions of the World.

According to the latest estimates the world contains 1,450,000,000 people, of whom 400,000,000 are Christians, 400,000,000 are Buddhists, 250,000,000 are Brahmins, 180,000,000 are Mohammedans, 8,000,000 are Jews, 150,000,000 are idolators and 62,000,000 are classed as "various." Of the Christians 175,000,000 are set down as belonging to the several branches of Roman Catholicism, 110,000,000 are classed as Protestants, 90,000,000 are Greek Catholics and 25,000,000 are "various."—Chicago Chronicle.

Illustrating God's Promise.

Have you ever seen, or perhaps made one of, a party who are going to explore a dark, deep cavern? They all stand out in the sunlight, and the attendants, who know the journey they are going to make, pass round among them and put into the hands of each a lighted candle. How useless it seems! How pale and colorless the little flame appears in the gorgeous flood of sunlight! But the procession moves along. One after another enters the dark cavern's mouth. One after another loses the splendor of daylight. In the hands of one after another the feeble candlelight comes out bright in the darkness, and by and by they are all walking in the dark, holding fast their candles as if they were their very life—totally dependent upon what seemed so useless half an hour ago. That seems to me to be a picture of the way in which God's promises of consolation, which we attach very little meaning to at first, come out into beauty and value as we pass on into our lives.—Bishop Brooks.

Practical Endeavor Work.

Particularly effective citizenship work is done by the Endeavorers of Alleghany county, Pa. A characteristic undertaking is now afoot—the publication of a handbook for the Christian citizen, which will be substantially a digest of the laws of the state on intemperance, gambling, profanity, Sabbath breaking, etc.—Exchange.

The Key and the Bolt.

Let prayer be the key of the morning and the bolt of the evening.—Episcopal Recorder.

Christian Endeavor Briefs.

Christian Endeavor is now a spiritual fire for icy Labrador.

"More 'grit,' less 'quit,'" is the advice given to secretaries by Miss Martha E. Race.

Miss Jennie T. Masson urges a study of the three "R's" for Christian Endeavor corresponding secretaries—report, reply, reap rich rewards.

"Make a rut deep enough and it becomes a grave," comments Rev. E. T. Jeffers, D. D., in discussing the old problem of Christian Endeavor ruts.

The general assembly of the Free Church of Scotland has given hearty and unanimous official indorsement of Christian Endeavor. We peculiarly value the sanction of this historic and conservative body.

A GIRL DRUMMER WHO REPRESENTS A BIG CONCERN.

A Talented Young Woman—Study National Politics—A Fair Field and No Favor For Women—She Will Succeed—Mrs. Zerelda Wallace—Pockets and Buttons.

A girl drummer has come to town, and the most interesting sample inside or outside her baggage is herself.

Miss Byrne is stopping at the Palace hotel, en route for the southern part of the state, where she will doubtless astonish the natives quite as effectively as she has amazed the merchants of San Francisco. Birds of passage in the way of male drummers are as common as swallows, but a girl in the business is a rare bird indeed.

"Come in," said a still, small voice in response to a knock on the door of the girl drummer's room. Dry goods to the right of her, dry goods to the left of her, dry goods all around her, and, in the midst of the display, Miss Byrne herself—a slim little girl in modest gown of black who might be somewhere in the early twenties, but just exactly where, you would not venture to guess. And she is everything that one would imagine a woman drummer not to be.

"How did I happen to go into the business?" repeated Miss Byrne in the softest of voices, shaking out the folds of a sample tea gown and arranging it where it would catch the eye to the best advantage. "That is easily answered. I took it up because I saw that there was a future in it for me. I knew I should never amount to anything nor make any money if I stayed behind a counter or held any other of the ordinary positions opened to girls on a few paltry dollars a week. So I determined to strike out for myself.

"Have I succeeded? Well, if selling goods means success, then I have succeeded, and better than anybody thought I would. You see it is one of the few professions that are not overcrowded with women. Yes, I have seen one other in the business, but only one in all my travels. I love the life I am leading. The very uncertainty of it keeps me constantly in a state of pleasurable excitement. There is nothing like it to give zest to one's existence.

"It is delightful to wake up in the morning not knowing what the day may bring forth or where you will sleep that night. Why, it seems to be the only life worth living.

"Yes, I do have some amusing experiences. One is bound to encounter such things when constantly traveling, and especially in my line of business. Do I find my sex a disadvantage? On the contrary. The dealers often tell me that they will give me an order whether they need the goods or not simply for the novelty of dealing with a girl drummer. Everybody is nice to me, but of course one has to be on one's dignity.

"The most amusing incidents of all are the endeavors of my coworkers to give me sage advice," and Miss Byrne's blue eyes twinkled in a way that hinted of her ability to give the rest of the fraternity a few pointers if she chose.

"You have a splendid country out here—a fine field for trade," she continued. "I represent a New York house that deals in women's ready made gowns, and I have had just the best of luck here. My friends were horrified when I started out as a drummer, but it is the coming business for women, and I'm going to stay with it. No, I don't call myself a new woman at all. I fail to see why a girl cannot be just as feminine in my business as though she knitted tidies for a living. Of course she will not be quite as much of a clinging vine, but she will make a whole lot more money. Oh, you need not go for five minutes yet! I have a customer coming at half past the hour."

But at that moment there was a knock at the door, and a well known San Francisco merchant entered with a quizzical but very respectful air. Any commercial traveler will tell you that customers keep drummers waiting, and that sometimes wild horses cannot drag them his way when times are hard. The only exceptions to this rule are made in favor of the drummer who happens to be a girl.—San Francisco Examiner.

Mrs. Louise Agassiz.

Mrs. Louise Agassiz, wife of Professor Agassiz, is sometimes called the godmother of Radcliffe college, which is the woman's department of Harvard. It was Mrs. Agassiz who first thought of naming the college for Anne Radcliffe, the first woman who ever made a bequest to the institution.

A Talented Young Woman.

The award of the bronze medal of the Royal Drawing society of London this year is a matter of enthusiastic interest to young art students all over the world, inasmuch as it was won by a young woman only 16 years of age, Miss Nellie Kuck.

Since the earliest inauguration of offering prizes for the best work among any given artistic line artists of undoubted genius from Canova and Thorwaldsen have entered into eager competition for the advantages which such badges of distinction carry in their train, for where they do not include years of study under most favoring conditions, as they so often do, they bring to an artist instant and widespread recognition, and it ought to serve as a stimulus to the youngest art student in Philadelphia, Boston, New York or Denver that youth is no bar sinister to such honors.

The drawing which obtained for Miss Kuck so distinguished a success is entitled "The Young St. Cecelia," a charmingly composed decorative panel, chiefly interesting by reason of its original and novel manner of treatment.

Perhaps it was her own sweet youth in the blood that led her imagination away from the traditionally mature Cecilia and made it dwell rather upon the heavenly maid when inspiration first dawned upon her youthful consciousness. With a few clever, effective strokes she has achieved the sweetly serious face and pose of the young saint, the well grouped, raptly listening angels above, topped by the conventionalized figures of Music and Poetry. The whole gives evidence of fine poetic fancy, excellent art, and is particularly strong in the decorative harmony of its lines.

Two years ago Miss Kuck was awarded Lord Leighton's prize for her drawing, "The Mermaid," and he then, always so ready to encourage youthful talent, recommended her to adopt the artist's profession.

In fact "The Young St. Cecelia" represents her third success, as last year she obtained the George Kekwich's prize for an illustration of "Undine."—Detroit Free Press.

Study National Politics.

Every woman who feels her duties and responsibilities as a citizen and who claims a right to a voice in public affairs ought to study the great public questions now under discussion, and especially the question of finance. Every woman who loves her country ought first to make up her own mind on the merits of free coinage of silver at a ratio of 16 to 1 or upon those of maintaining the existing gold standard and then should try to convince and convert women and men of the opposite opinion. Both parties agree on the vital importance of the issue. Both declare that the honor and happiness and prosperity of the country are at stake. It is criminal for any citizen, woman or man, to stand neutral in so grave a crisis.

In order to form an intelligent judgment I advise every woman to read carefully the Republican and Democratic platforms, adopted respectively at St. Louis and Chicago. Then let her read Mr. Bryan's New York speech and those of George Fred Williams. On the other side, let her read Senator Sherman's Columbus speech and those of Mr. Perry Belmont and Bourke Cockran in reply to Mr. Bryan. After carefully weighing these and other arguments, let her study the history of the country for the past eight years and try to ascertain the causes of the growing business depression.

It is not the province of The Woman's Journal to discuss political questions upon which suffragists are divided. But it is our duty to remind women that the indifference of so many women to such questions of currency, tariff, income tax and federal intervention is the main objection now urged against extending suffrage to women. Let women take an interest in politics, and politicians will soon take an interest in women. Voting is the most important of all political activities, but not the only one. Even without votes women can influence the votes of others and help decide the fate of the nation.—H. B. B. in Boston Woman's Journal.

A Fair Field and No Favor For Women.

No legislative obstacle should be placed in the way of women to bar them out from employments for which they show themselves fitted, and no social prejudice should be allowed to tyrannize where there should be a fair field and no favor.

But what will follow? A rush of women into all the professions, berths and offices hitherto belonging to men? By no means. The strongest forces of nature will still remain to draw women generally in the old directions. A select few, with eminent gifts, will share important positions with the other sex, but the rank and file will find their place in the old spheres. It is well for women to know that marriage is not the only outlet for their lives, but marriage will ever continue to be the outlet for the great majority. "Love's young dream" will not be extinguished. The management of the household will ever be woman's peculiar care. Instincts not to be overcome will continue to draw them to occupations that are peculiarly suited to their strength and their tastes. The functions of maternity will be surrounded with a charm of their own. It may be true that even in physical strength the woman may by training and exercise become the equal of the man. But physiologists all tell us that this can only be achieved apart from the functions of maternity. So long as she exercises these functions her frame as a rule will be more delicate, her strength weaker, her features more refined, her manners more gentle. And these qualities will in some degree be imparted to her daughters. Nature will thus place her barrier against most of the occupations of the other sex. The female character will retain its refinement, its gentleness and its grace. The divine rule, which has given to man the first place in the human family, will suffer no infraction. It will be true that "the head of the woman is the man."—Rev. Professor W. G. Blaikie, D. D., in North American Review.

PLAYED BALL IN COURT.

A Little New York Boy Who Was Unconscious of His Condition.

The policemen in Jefferson Market court could not maintain strict order, for, while Magistrate Deuel signed commitments for a large assortment of disorderly characters, they allowed one youngster to do just as he pleased. He was 4-year-old Willie Phelan, and he was in court with his grandmother, who asked to have him committed to a charitable institution. Willie's mother is dead, and his father is a helpless cripple.

Willie had a little rubber ball, and, with a merry laugh, he threw it when and where he pleased. First it was a policeman that caught it and returned it to him, then it was a prisoner. Again and again he pitched it here and there.

Just as the boy threw his ball at a burly prisoner, arrested for writing policy, and the latter kicked it back with a smile, Magistrate Deuel signed the papers which sent the child to St. Joseph's asylum.—New York World.

A Pretty Experiment.

Take a poker in the hand and point it to the north, dipping it to the horizon at an angle of about 30 degrees. Give the poker several sharp raps upon its higher end with a hammer. This will cause vibration in the molecules of iron and the poker will become faintly magnetic. The best test for a weak magnet is a needle floating on water. Perhaps you do not know that a needle may be made to float, but it is very simple. The needle must be dry and the water still. Then, if the needle be laid upon the surface flat, it will float readily. Now take the poker and hold it close to the needle and you may draw it all over the saucer, but the poker must not touch the water. If it should, it would raise by adhesion a little hill of water all about it, down which the needle would slide, thus producing a deceptive effect of repulsion. Real repulsion instead of attraction may be secured by rubbing one end of the needle on one end of the poker.—Philadelphia Times.

Linoleum is a good substitute where tiling is not to be had. Floors covered with it are easily brushed up or wiped off. A strip of linoleum 36 inches deep put above the baseboard in a kitchen and finished at the top with a narrow molding is better than wood wainscoting.

In relaying carpets after the fall cleaning it is well to sprinkle something under the edges to destroy any carpet bugs that may be lurking around. As good a thing as can be used is a powder made of equal parts of camphor gum and tobacco.

EFFECT OF ALCOHOL.

ITS USE CAUSES DEGENERATION OF THE BODY.

It Produces Neither Strength Nor Heat and Changes Muscle Into Fat—It Never Digests Food, but Retards the Action of the Stomach.

Alcoholic drink is not a source of strength. Trainers of men for feats of strength invariably forbid all kinds of ale, beer, porter, wine, rum, brandy. They cast out the whole legion of devils at once. Dr. Brinton says, "A moderate dose of beer or wine would, in most cases, at once diminish the weight which a healthy man could lift below his teetotal standard." Milo, the Samson of Italy, and his forerunner, the Samson of Judæa, were both total abstainers. This is small comfort for weak backs and weak heads that try to strengthen themselves with bitters, cordials and wine. The only use for them is when one has too much strength and can find no possible use for it. Then alcohol may be safely recommended to reduce it with rapidity truly astonishing.

Neither is alcohol a producer of heat. I might quote volumes of testimony from experience in Canada and Russian winters, from travelers on arctic and antarctic ice, to show that alcohol is death to men exposed to a temperature ranging toward 100 degrees below zero. But that would be experience, and we are not willing to take anything that has a shade of uncertainty about it just yet. What is fact? Here comes science, thermometer in hand, and she shows that alcohol actually reduces the temperature of a body receiving it. That is what we wanted to know. And now we know it. If we were receiving testimony and not mathematical certainties, we would produce the testimony of Sir Charles Napier and hosts of surgeons in the East Indian army that alcohol is equally death for men who have to face the heat of a tropical sun. But since we are not willing to introduce anything that any man can gainsay or pretend, we will return to our certainties.

Let any constant abstainer draw off a little of his blood and microscopically compare it with the blood of the recent drinker, and he will be confirmed in his abstinence. The one is full of bright, round, electric disks of life; the other has bedraggled fibers, pale in color, shapeless in form, deprived of power to absorb oxygen and eliminate carbon—a devitalized condition of the life giving fluid that must result in a devitalized condition of the tissues it feeds. The pipes that supply the city with water are no longer filled with bright sparkling water from the sky kissing hills, but a turbid stream from the dyehouses, distilleries, slaughteries and the sewers of the cities above is offered to our lips.

Another certainty—Lallemand and Perrin proved that a small dose of alcohol would cause globules of fat, clearly distinguishable by the naked eye, to float in the blood. The result is another clear change in the constitution of this vital fluid. This fat is deposited instead of real muscle, producing what is called fatty degeneration. Take your microscope again and examine a very fine section of a temperate man's muscle. It is firm, elastic, of bright red color, is parallel fiber, with beautiful crossings. That muscle means business and is able to do it. Now take a similar section of a man who indulges in intoxicating drinks, and you see at once a pale, inelastic flabby, oily aspect. Fat has displaced fiber.

This especally takes place in the involuntary muscles, such as the heart and those concerned in breathing. After such degeneration it is not strange that the heart should stop its work mid beat and never act again. It requires no excitement, no sudden shock, for that mass of fat that ought to be muscle to cease responding to nervous influence, and so cease working. It may be in the street, in quiet conversation, and especially in sleep, this man, a picture of health, suddenly dies, and men say, "What a mysterious dispensation of Providence!" We had better say, "What a dispensation of—the other one!" Or, better still, "What an inevitable result of taking intoxicating drinks!"

I here close my certainties about alcohol. I allow no man to dispute one of them. They are all sure as a two foot rule, ponderable as pig iron, inevitable as the tax collector. We make no allowance for varieties of constitutions, peculiarities of temperament, diversity of habit, differences of alcoholic concomitants. These conclusions are sure as fate—viz, alcohol never digests food or helps digest it, never assists the body to permanently resist cold, brings no increase of strength, vitiates the blood, emasculates the muscles, indurates the brain, harms the nerves, never acts as food either alimentary or respiratory, but is always and everywhere a poison, in sickness and in health, and the vital powers try their utmost to throw it off, even to the extent of perishing in the attempt. Now, these are facts, not opinions; certainties, not deductions. No man can gainsay them. Neither are there any counter facts.—Bishop Warren.

Becoming Civilized.

How fast the Japanese are learning the tricks of civilization may be judged from the fact that, in spite of an edict forbidding the importation of opium into the island of Formosa, the Japanese parliament has passed an additional budget including an item of revenue from opium amounting to $20,000,000.—Exchange.

Won His Wager.

The Connecticut man who bet that he could drink three pints of beer and three glasses of whisky within five min utes won his wager, but in 15 minutes he was dead from alcoholism.—Exchange.

Why Sterne Didn't Drink.

I never drink. I cannot do it on equal terms with others. It costs them only one day, but me three—the first in sinning, the second in suffering and the third in repenting.—Sterne.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON I, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, OCT. 4.

Text of the Lesson, I Kings i, 28-39. Memory Verses, 28-30—Golden Text, I Kings ii, 3—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

28. "Then King David answered and said, Call me Bathsheba. And she came into the king's presence and stood before the king." Bathsheba (daughter of an oath) was the mother of Solomon or Jedidiah (II Sam. xii, 24, 25). The occasion of her being sent for at this time was a matter concerning the throne and the kingdom, as fully described in the first part of this chapter. The troubler of Israel was now Adonijah, the fourth son of David (II Sam. iii, 4). His name signifies "Jehovah, my Lord," but his actions said, I am my own master, and I'll master others too. Like Absalom, he is against the king and the kingdom and suggestive of antichrist.

29. "And the king swore and said, As the Lord liveth, that hath redeemed my soul out of all distress." Although on his deathbed, he had no fear, for he could say, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, who forgiveth all thine iniquities, who redeemeth thy life from destruction!" (Ps ciii, 4, 5.) His comfort in his dying hour was not that he had been faithful, or lived a perfect life, but it was in the living God and His faithfulness, of whom he said, "Although my house be not so with God, yet hath He made with me an everlasting covenant ordered in all things and sure" (II Sam. xxiii, 5).

30. "Assuredly Solomon thy son shall reign after me, and he shall sit upon my throne in my stead." This was the Lord's appointment, as fully stated in I Chron. xxii, 9, 10, and in chapter xxviii, 5, David says, "Of all my sons—for the Lord hath given me many sons—He hath chosen Solomon, my son, to sit upon the throne of the kingdom of the Lord over Israel." When the queen of Sheba came to see Solomon, she said, "Blessed be the Lord thy God, which delighted in thee to set thee on His throne, to be king for the Lord thy God!" (II Chron. ix, 8.) No earthly throne was ever called the throne of the Lord, except that at Jerusalem, and Jerusalem shall yet be the throne of the Lord for the benefit of all nations, notwithstanding all anti-Christian hatred (Jer. iii, 17, 18).

31. "Let my Lord King David live forever." Thus said Bathsheba. Compare I Sam. x, 24, and margin, and also Neh. ii, 3; Dan. ii, 4, etc. David still lives with Christ in glory, awaiting the resurrection of his body, unless he rose from the dead in the company of Math. xxvii, 52, 53, which does not seem probable from Acts ii, 29, 34. Our great comfort as believers is that He who once died for us on Calvary is alive forevermore, having all power in heaven and on earth, and because He lives we live also (Rev. i, 18; John xiv, 19).

32. "And King David said: Call me Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada. And they came before the king." All are at his bidding, whether wife or officers or servants, for any manner of service wholly at his commandment (I Chron. xxviii, 21). The kingdom was well represented by those now assembled, the king, priest and prophet and one of the leading mighty men (II Sam. xxiii, 20). Our Lord Jesus Christ is all in one.

33. "Cause Solomon, my son, to ride upon mine own mule and bring him down to Gihon." It was foretold of David's greater Son that He should ride upon a colt, the foal of an ass (Zech. ix, 9), and this He actually did. It is foretold of Him that He will come upon a white horse, accompanied by all the armies in heaven, to overthrow His enemies and establish His kingdom upon the throne of David, and this He will surely do (Rev. xix, 11-15; Isa. ix, 6, 7; Luke i, 32, 33).

34. "And let Zadok the priest and Nathan the prophet anoint him their king over Israel and blow ye with the trumpet and say, God save King Solomon!" The anointed of the Lord from the first use of the phrase in I Sam. ii, 10, 35, points to Him who is truly the Lord's anointed, and of whom all anointed priests and kings are but foreshadowings.

35. "He shall be king in my stead." These words "in my stead," found also in verse 30, along with the words in verse 33, "ride upon mine own mule," emphasize very strongly that David's place was to be taken by Solomon. The words in Gen. xxii, 13, "in the stead of his son," show how truly the ram took Isaac's place as a sacrifice, and just as truly the Lord Jesus Christ took our place to suffer in our stead. He took our place that we might take His (II Cor. v. 21).

36. "And Benaiah the son of Jehoiada answered the king and said, Amen; the Lord God of my lord the king say so too." This is a proper attitude of a servant to a king, saying amen to what the king says, heartily one with him in all he says and does. What happy people Christians would be if as in the days of David "whatsoever the king did pleased all the people" (II Sam. iii, 36). As believers it is our privilege to think God's thoughts, eat His words and be heartily one with Him in everything. Otherwise we cannot walk with Him (Amos iii, 3).

37. "As the Lord hath been with my lord the king, even so he be with Solomon." The secret of any success of David was that, "the Lord was with him" (II Sam. v, 10; vii, 3; viii, 6, 14). It was even so of Moses and Joshua and Gideon and Jeremiah (Ex. iii, 12; Joshua i, 5; Judg. vi, 16; Jer. i, 8), and as if it included all else, it was one of our Lord's parting words before He ascended, "Lo, I am with you all the days" (Math. xxviii, 20, R. V., margin). I often think that it is the greatest of all the promises for this present life.

38. "So they caused Solomon to ride upon King David's mule and brought him to Gihon." They did as they were commanded. Thus did Noah and Moses and Joshua, and thus do all the faithful. If we are only willing and obedient, we shall eat the good of the land (Isa. i, 19), but if we refuse and rebel it will be ill for us. When we have done as we are told, that is our part and results are with Him of whom it is written, "The Lord of Hosts hath sworn, saying, Surely as I have thought so shall it come to pass, and as I have purposed so shall it stand" (Isa. xiv, 24, 27).

39. "And Zadok the priest took an horn of oil out of the tabernacle and anointed Solomon, and they blew the trumpet, and all the people said, God save King Solomon." Thus the kingdom was established in the man whom God appointed, and the purpose of the Lord was thus far performed. The people rejoiced with great joy, and the city rang again (verses 40, 45). Adonijah begged for his life, and it was given him on conditions (verses 50-53). Every believer is an anointed priest king. Let us walk worthy of such a high calling, bringing glory to Him who hath called us.

ILLINOIS MELANGE.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST TO OUR OWN PEOPLE.

Some of the Principal Happenings of the Week Reported by Telegraph and Placed for Convenience of Our Readers—Matters of Interest.

Chicago, Sept. 17.—The last obstacle to the comtemplated fusion on presidential electors in Illinois between the silver Democrats and the Populists has been removed, and fusion finally effected. At a meeting of the Democratic state central committee yesterday Chairman Hinrichsen announced that he had received the resignations of three of the Democratic electoral candidates—Thomas Carey elector-at-large; George P. Foster, elector in the Third district, and George W. LeCrone, elector in the Nineteenth district.

Lieutenant Governor Gill's resignation from the electoral ticket was also received, but this was referred to the executive committee. The resignations of Carey, Foster and LeCrone were accepted, and their places will be given to Dr. H. S. Taylor, Herman Alschuler and H. E. Taubeneck, Populists. On the state ticket W. F. Beck's resignation as nomineee for auditor was accepted, and A. L. Maxwell, Populist, named in his place.

Fifteenth to Leave Fort Sheridan.

Chicago, Sept. 21.—The long-expected orders for the transfer of the Fifteenth infantry, stationed at Fort Sheridan, were received Friday evening by General Merritt from Secretary of War Lamont. The Fifteenth is ordered to be divided among the posts at Fort Bayard, N. M., and Forts Grant and Huachuca, A. T. The Fourth infantry, commanded by Colonel Robert Hall, known as Grant's regiment, which has been stationed at Forts Sherman, Boise and Spokane for years, will replace the Fifteenth at Fort Sheridan.

Illinois Town Fire Swept.

Belvidere, Ills., Sept. 19.—The little town of Poplar Grove, north of Belvidere, was nearly swept away by fire at an early hour Thursday morning. The fire started in the icehouse of Renne & Dimond, meat dealers, and soon spread to adjoining buildings. The volunteer fire department did good work. The loss will reach several thousand dollars, with but very little insurance. Renne & Dimond are the principal losers. There is good reason to believe that the fire was of incendiary origin.

Illinois Crop Report.

Illinois—Favorable week throughout north and west counties, elsewhere dryness retarded plowing and seeding. Serious drought conditions in many southern counties, with growing dryness and many chinch bugs in south central counties. Corn cutting mostly done and drying out rapidly, husking and cribbing will generally be safe within two weeks.

"Independent Democratic" Goes.

Springfield, Ills., Sept. 21.—Secretary of State Hinrichsen denies that he will discriminate against the gold Democrats in making up the state ticket, but says that the board of review will act strictly according to law. From this it is evident that the name "Independent Democratic" will be permitted to go on the ticket.

Failure of a Chicago Foundry.

THE EXPRESS STRIKE.

The Grievances of the Men as Stated by One of Their Officials.

For the information of readers throughout the country the following facts concerning the strike of Adams Express company employees in New York and Jersey City is given:

Michael Kelly, secretary of D. A. 49, Knights of Labor, said that the strikers were members of the Oriental association, which is affiliated with Knights of Labor, and that the indirect cause of the strike was a war which the company has of late waged on the association.

"The men have been in hot water," continued Secretary Kelly, "ever since L. C. Weir became president of the company. I do not think, however, that the trouble is due nearly so much to him as to the acts of his subordinates. Some of these officials have driven the men to desperation. One of them is Peter Miller, who was recently made general transportation agent, and who boasts of being able to break up any labor organization. He has held his place only two weeks, and was appointed because the company saw that trouble was coming and wished him to take charge of it. He was in the Sixth and Third avenue car strikes some years ago. He was a car starter on the Sixth avenue line.

"When the men had trouble with the Adams Express company last May, they drew up a petition and presented it to President Weir. Their wages had been reduced and they were overworked. The company then agreed to give them better hours, and it was ordered that none of the day force should be kept later than 9:30 at night, no matter how much work there was to do. This agreement was kept just one month, and after that the men were kept at work as long as the yard bosses saw fit. Of late they have been working 16 hours out of 18 in which they have been kept on duty. They were also informed that if they did not resign from the Oriental association they would have to leave the company's employ. About 20 men in this city and the same number in Jersey City were lately discharged because they were prominent in the affairs of the association. Among them was William Prescott, who had worked for the company 22 years. He is one of the best express drivers in the city, and, as proof of it, he drove the same team of horses for seven years. He received $70 a month. The company now asserts that he was discharged for breaking a pump fully three months ago. The pump matter, however, was settled before Mr. Miller was put in charge and Prescott was fully exonerated. Several committees waited on President Weir within the last few days, but he refused to see them. The men then concluded to strike. We have not called out the stablemen, although many of them want to join us. We want the horses taken care of."

It is said that at a recent dinner of express companies' officials President Weir proposed that wages of employees should be cut. "Well," it is said the president of the Wells-Fargo company replied, "let them begin with you and me." The subject, it is said, was then dropped.

Failure of Profit Sharing.

Between 1887 and 1894 a panacea for labor troubles was discovered and exploited. The device called profit sharing was hailed by enthusiasts—men richly endowed with good intentions, if with little else—as a deliverance of employers and employed from all causes of disagreement. It was billed to banish industrial infelicities and by so doing to promote the prosperity of capitalists and wageworkers. But this pleasing programme has failed of fulfillment. It has decidedly and conspicuously failed. Of 50 different establishments that have tried the experiment of profit sharing only 12 are continuing it in any form. Five have abandoned the system indefinitely and 33 permanently.

The Chicago News, in an article noting the failure of the scheme, says that the main trouble is that the system is so complicated that no form of it that has been tried has worked successfully to both the parties to it. The News goes on to explain that the feature which is objected to is that, while it proposes to share with the workmen the profits that are made in times of prosperity, it does not impose on the workmen any risk in the entire loss of profits in times when the business is carried on at a loss. This has reduced profit sharing to "a species of paternalistic coddling" to which those workmen who want justice and not special favors most seriously object.

The British Congress.

The agenda of the British trades union congress which meets Sept. 5 to 12 has been issued. The parliamentary committee of the congress has decided to appoint a subcommittee of three members to receive the American delegates on their arrival in England and to see to their entertainment during their sojourn here. Whatever may be the views of the American delegates, they will find that their British confreres do not intend to waste the time of the congress on general or idealist proposals. Socialism or quasi socialistic resolutions hardly get a mention in the agenda. Of state socialism, however, there is enough. British trades unions are not free from the belief that the state can do much that individual effort fails to accomplish, and every year these trades congresses enlarge their borders by asking the state to interfere on behalf of their class. Still, this year's agenda, amended, it is understood, by the light of the ridiculous international socialist congress, contains less of the collectivist platform than has been seen in the programmes of the last two or three years. Distinctively there is only one resolution of a purely socialist type, that from the Scottish typos, in favor of the nationalization of land, means of production, distribution and exchange.

Co-operation In England.

From the inaugural address delivered at the recent annual congress of the British Co-operative union it appears that the membership has increased to over 1,000,000 and the capital to £50,000,000. It was pointed out that agriculture has so far remained untouched by the co-operative movement, although it needed organization more than any other trade. A plan was submitted for the establishment of a great co-operative society for the growth, collection and distribution of agricultural produce. Producers and consumers would be asked equally to take shares in it, and after paying 4 or 5 per cent for the capital the profits would be divided between producers in proportion to their consumption, giving a certain proportion to the employees of the association.

"The Blue Degrees are but the outer court of the Temple. Part of the symbols are displayed there to the initiate, but he is intentionally misled by false interpretations. It is not intended that he shall understand them, but it is intended that he shall imagine that he does understand them. Their true explanation is reserved for the Princes of Masonry."—Albert Pike, Grand Commander of the Supreme Council, Sovereign Grand Inspectors-General, in "Morals and Dogma," page 819.

JOHN MARSHALL, Chief Justice, in a Letter to Edward Everett, July 22, 1833, said of Freemasonry: "That the institution ought to be abandoned, as one capable of producing much evil, and incapable of producing any good which might not be effected by safe and open means."

CHARLES P. SUMNER, father of the Senator, and a renouncing Mason: "Masonic engagements, whether they are called oaths, obligations, or promises, ought never to be made. They are not sanctioned by law and are not obligatory. They make it a Masonic crime to divulge that which the good of the community requires should not be concealed."

HON. SAMUEL DEXTER, in an Open Letter to the Grand Master of Mass., 1798: "If there be no very important reason for upholding Masonry at a moment like the present, there is a reason against it. The system of the destroyers of human virtue and happiness is to undermine in the dark the castle that cannot be carried by storm. Secret agency has overthrown all the republics of Europe, and an extended, secret, leveling, self-created society, without any valuable object of pursuit, and embracing bad characters as well as good, cannot be the subject of approbation of an anxious patriot."

GEORGE WASHINGTON. Rev. Ezra Styles, D.D., in the "Philadelphian," July 23, 1830: "Hitherto I have neither advocated nor opposed Masonry, unless it be in the relation of a conversation between General Washington and Governor Jonathan Trumbull the second, which the latter more than once repeated to my father. The latter, when aid de camp to the former, asked him if he would advise him to become a Mason. General Washington replied, 'that Masonry was a benevolent institution, which might be employed for the best or worst of purposes; but that for the most part it was merely child's play, and that he could not give him any advice on the subject.'"

GOVERNOR RITNER, in response to a communication from the Legislature of Pennsylvania, prepared a vindication of General Washington from the stigma of adherence to secret societies, in which he proves from authentic documents:

1. That in 1768 Washington had ceased regular attendance on the lodge.

2. That in 1798, shortly before his death, his opinions were the same as thirty years before when thirty-six years old.

3. That he was never "Grand Master" or "Master" of any particular lodge.

4. That in 1781, as appears by the record of King David's lodge, Newport, Rhode Island, it was not agreeable to Washington to be addressed even as a private Mason.

5. That all the letters said to be written by Washington to lodges are spurious.

THANKS TO WASHINGTON.—Edward Livingston was the General Grand High Priest of the General Grand Royal Arch Chapter of the United States and the great Masonic champion of his day, and Andrew Jackson was also a high Mason. In view of Washington's non-affiliation and his farewell address there can be little doubt that General Jackson and Edward Livingston considered Washington a seceded Mason. The following is an article published in 1830 in the Pennsylvania Intelligencer, which is an evidence of striking import:

"Who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington?—When General Washington retired to private life, Congress passed resolutions giving thanks to this great man. Only three men were found in Congress at that day, that voted against these resolutions. One of these three is now dead, and we do not wish to disturb his ashes. The grave should cover the foibles of all men. But there are two men now alive, whose names are on the journals of Congress, denying the poor pittance of a vote of thanks to Gen. Washington. We ask who these two men are.

"We have asked this question without expecting an answer from those to whom it is addressed. But there is no reason why our readers should not be gratified with the fact. Let the journals of Congress reply—'They are Andrew Jackson and Edward Livingston!!'"

RIOT AND TORCH.

Turn Leadville into a Scene of Blood and Terror.

STRIKING MINERS BREAK LOOSE.

Whole Town Under Arms and a Reign of Mob Law Existing—Fireman Ordered to Desist When They Went to Work—City Company of Militia Called Out but the Rioters Don't Seem to Have Been Interfered with, and Proceed to Attack Another Working Mine.

Leadville, Colo., Sept. 21.—The sheriff and Judge Owens have called on the governor for troops to suppress the riots here and the order has been issued for the entire military force of the state to come here.

Leadville, Colo., Sept. 21.—At 1 sions aroused sleepers in the eastern sions arouse dsleepers in the eastern part of the city for blocks around the Coronado mine, which is the one which first resumed operations and which was heavily barricaded and well stocked with provisions and arms. The explosions were followed by a fusilade of rifle shots, apparently from within the barricade, and rapid but irregular shots from outside, apparently from a widely scattered attacking force who were on hand to protect the retreat of the dynamiters. The shooting lasted for ten minutes, when desultory firing was renewed and has been kept up ever since.

Another Explosion of Dynamite.

At 1:50 a. m. another explosion was heard, sounding like dynamite. Ten minutes after the first explosion a telephone meesage from the Coronado stater that nobody inside the barricade had been hurt. Since then it has been impossible to reach the Coronado by telephone. The Herald-Democrat is now being watched by several bands of men, grouped in dark corners and alleys, and this may mean that they propose to prevent any communication with the telegraph offices, the watchers not knowing that The Herald-Democrat has the Associated Press leased wire and a long distance telephone.

City in a State of Terror.

The city is in a panic of fear. County and city officials are out looking after the work of the police and sheriff. Bullets frequently wiz over the Herald-Democrat office, and altogether the situation is warlike. At 1:55 a. m. a bright blaze broke out at the Coronado mine in the immediate vicinity, and shots were still being exchanged. The local militia companies have been called out and went to their armories getting ready for instant action. All the whistles in town were blowing.

All the Whistles in the City Blowing.

2 a. m.—The fire is believed to be the oil tanks inside the barricade at the Coronado shaft house. A telephone message just received from the mine says that none of the defenders have been hurt as yet.

2:15 a. m.—The sights and sounds beggar description. All the whistles in the city are blowing and two or three steam sirens add discord to the night's alarming chorus. The sharp cracks of rifles punctuate the tooting at irregular intervals.

Citizense Mustering with Arms.

Citizens have gone to the scene with whatever arms they can gather, and a miliatia company quartered across the street has just marched toward the Coronado under arms. The whistle which calls out all citizens in a case of emergency has just sounded and the streets are full of rushing men, crying women and children.

Another Heavy Explosion.

2:18 a. m.—Another heavy explosion has just occurred. Five minutes ago the Coronado telephone bore the message that the defenders were too busy to answer questions.

2:20 a. m.—As soon as the fire broke out the fire department went to the scene and the flames are now dying down, indicating effective work by the firemen.

The shots are growing less frequent and it seems probable that some thing definite from the battlefield may be soon be obtained.

2:30 a. m.—Everything is on fire at the Coronado and the fire department is now working to save the houses which are thickly clustered about the fated shaft house. Women and children anr rushing to the spot looking for relatives and mingling with those who are being driven from their houses by flames, creating a scene the pathos of which is beyond description. The firemen hope to save the houses and are helped beyond by a heavy rain which began falling a few minutes ago. When the firemen went to turn on the water they were ordered to desist, which they did from one hydrant, but got others to working.

2:55 a.m.—Another heavy explosion has just occurred. Forty or fifty shots have just been heard in the direction of the Emmett and Marian mines, located about a mile and a half from the city. These mines were recently fenced and work resumed by a small force of men, which was being argumented every day. It would seem from this that having finished their work at the Coronado, where the buildings are now a mass of smoking embers, the merciless gang has gone to wipe out the Emmett and Marian.

3 p. m.—The first Herald-Democrat reporter to return from the fire states that Fireman O'Keefe and two unknown men are dead. He cannot tell as yet how many have been injured, and is not sure that this covers the list of dead.

GALLANT NAVAL OFFICER DEAD.

Lieut. Norton, Who Enlisted as a Drummer When but 14 Years Old.

Chicago, Sept. 19.—Lieutenant Charles F. Norton, U. S. N., died in this city at an early hour yesterday morning at the house of his brother-in-law, E. C. Webster, 4738 Evans avenue. Although retired about a year ago for ill-health Lieutenant Norton was a comparatively young man, not quite 49 years old. He had a long career of thirty-two years in the service. As a boy of 14 years he enlisted as a drummer boy in his father's company of volunteers in the Second Colorado regiment. Six months later he was discharged to accept an appointment in the Naval academy at Annaplis. His long tramp across Colorado's sands to the nearest railway station made him a hero of the public press at the time.

After his graduation at Annapolis he saw eighteen years of almost continuous sea service. He was made lieutenant in 1875. His first cruise as an officer was to South America in 1868. Later he spent much time in the Mediterranean and Chinese ports.. His great-grandfather, Jonathan Norton, was an officer in the revolution; another grandfather, Captain Augustus Ford, U. S. N., was in command at Sackett's Harbor, in 1812. He leaves a widow and a little daughter 5 years old.

DEAD BY HIS OWN HAND.

Political Chairman and Prominent Business Man of a Massachusetts Town.

Wellesley, Sept. 17.—Herbert F. Plympton, chairman of the executive committee of the Republican state central committee, committed suicide about 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon in his father's home at Wellesley Hills by shooting himself in the head with a revolver. Plympton was about 31 years old and was a remarkably bright and energetic politician. He had been actively at work in the interests of the campaign for the last month, and appeared fully as bright as usual.

The report of a pistol was heard in a room in the second story of the house usually occupied by a brother of the dead man. Investigation was immediately made and Plympton was found lying on the floor with the smoking revolver in his hand. He died almost immediately. Plympton was agent of the Penn Mutual Life Insurance company and had a large business. He leaves a widow and two children. No cause is known for the act.

DEATH OF JAMES M. ASHLEY.

Prominent in Politics in Slavery Days, During the War, and Later.

Alma, Mich., Sept. 17.—Governor James M. Ashley, of Toledo, died at the sanitarium here yesterday of chronic nephritis, aged about 74 years. The governor had occupied a prominent position in political life, especially in connection with the anti-slavery movement, and was one of the originators of the Republican party. He was a member of the national congress from 1858 to 1868.

He was prominently connected with the business interests of the city of Toledo, and was the builder and until recently president of the Ann Arbor Railroad company, which is one of the best railroad properties in Michigan. He leaves a widow, Mrs. Emma Ashley; a daughter, Mrs. Edward Hewitt, of New York, and three sons, James M. Jr., H. W., and C. S. Ashley, all of Toledo. The remains will be taken to Toledo for interment.

BAD RAILWAY WRECK IN INDIANA.

Pay Car and Locomotive Collide Killing Four Men—Others Badly Hurt.

Indianapolis, Sept. 19.—The following men were intantly killed by a collision on the C., H. and D. near Connersville, this state yesterday morning. Christ Sweetman, engineman, Dayton; —— Kinsey, fireman, Cincinnati; Geo. House, conductor, Indianapolis; —— Hughes, fireman, Hamilton. Besides these six others were injured, three badly and one fatally, those worst hurt being: Paymaster Jansens, badly; —— Fishback, porter of the pay car, badly; E. Wysong, foreman of bridges and buildings, badly; —— Conner, engineer, Hamilton, supposed fatally.

The engine was a freight engine and was running wild. The collision wreched it and sent the pay car into the ditch.

Britishers Watching for Dynamiters.

London, Sept. 19.—As a result of the alleged disclosures said to have been made by the finding of documents upon the person of Edward J. Ivory, alias Edward Bell, of New York, who has been brought to this city from Glasgow on the charge of being concerned in the dynamite conspiracy, the number of policemen on duty in plain clothes at the houses of parliament, the Mansion house, the Royal exchange, the National gallery, the British museum, and other public buildings, have been doubled. The war office has also taken additional precautions here, besides doubling the force of police and sentinels who are guarding the powder magazines at Woolwich.

Laurels for Star Pointer.

Medford, Mass., Sept. 19.—Star Pointer at Mystic park yesterday afternoon not only beat the two accredited faster horses—Robert J. (2:01½) and Frank Agan (2:03¾)—but paced the three fastest heats ever made in competition, the time being 2:02½, 2:03½ and 2:03¾, an average of 2:03¼. He also lower the record for the fastest first heat ever paced, 2:02½, as well as the records for the fastest quarter and half, 29¾ and 59¾ respectively. The race between 59¾ respectively.

Put against the Masonic five points of fellowship all points of human fellowship and Christian fellowship, and under the light of such a comparison how shriveled Masonry appears.

Are murder and treason the only crimes that ought not to be concealed? All but Masons think it good citizenship, aye, and good human fellowship too, not to let the innocent suffer, but to fasten crimes on those who are guilty of them.

The license system brings the Government into partnership with the liquor traffic, and thus makes every citizen responsible for its results. The government receives much the larger share of the revenue, and thus becomes the head partner of the great saloon business. Like a huge knife this traffic destroys annually 100,000 lives, and every citizen who votes license has his hand on the hilt, and is responsible for this wholesale murder.

A drawing-room meeting in the interests of the anti-secret reform was held at the home of James Dow, 6310 St. Lawrence Ave., in this city, Friday evening, Sept. 25. General Secretary Phillips gave an instructive record of the progress of the movement. Mr. and Mrs. Gault, Rev. J. M. Wylie and wife, Miss Flora Moreland of the Chicago University, Miss Amy Moffatt and others contributed to make the meeting interesting and profitable.

The autumn days with their long, clear evenings are again upon us. There is no such favorable season for meetings and conventions. Could not some of our readers try, as a correspondent in this issue suggests, to organize societies in the rural districts in which the boys and girls can be interested in the reform against secret societies? The fathers and mothers who are now at the front in this reform will some time pass to their rest. The question is, are we training our boys and girls to take their places?

GEORGE W. CLARK.

Very many of our readers will recognize here the face, and in imagination will hear again the voice of "Our Old Liberty Singer," George W. Clark, for so many years an inspiring feature of our annual meetings and conventions. He acquired this title before the war and during the anti-slavery agitation, because he was a popular singer and composer of liberty songs and was in great demand at anti-slavery meetings. After the death of slavery Bro. Clark enlisted in the prohibition and anti-secret conflicts. His natural gift of song made him a great favorite in meetings and conventions. He has for many years resided in Detroit, Mich., and though feeble with age yet he still takes a keen interest in reform work, as can be seen by his communication on our ninth page.

The last time we heard that inspiring reform singer, George W. Clark, was in the summer of 1888. He and Bro. Foote, for many years his comrade in reform work, but who has since gone to his rest, were attending the National Reform Convocation at Lake Side, Ohio. The management was somewhat shy of these veterans because of their radicalism on the anti-secret issue. But one day when that heroic leader, Mary E. Woodbridge, presided, she saw Bro. Clark in the audience and requested him to come to the platform and sing a song she had heard him sing several years before at a convention. She said the last line of that song, "Lean out your souls and listen," had often rung in her ears. Bro. Clark went forward and sung this song with thrilling effect. It is needless to add that from this time onward Bro. Clark's reform songs were the inspiration of the convocation.

Our Government requires a higher moral qualification for a saloon-keeper than for a President. The law in some States requires that a saloon-keeper must have a good moral character. But the Constitution of the United States requires no moral qualification of a President; it only requires that he shall be at least thirty-five years old and a natural-born citizen.

This life is not such a trifling, easy-going, leisurely thing that one can afford to let advantages slip or take uncertain chances. He does all this when he blindly submits to being divested of freedom and encumbered with lodge chains, permanently riveted almost before he has had a glimpse of them. To assume a lifelong obligation which is important yet unconsidered is against conscience and reason.

That narrow view of Gospel work, which excludes reform work, is like a process of farming which would exclude the removal of all stumps, stones or weeds. The Gospel work which has nothing to do with politics is like farm work which has nothing to do with building fences. Almost the first thing in good farming is to look after the fences. So thorough Gospel and missionary work must seek reformation in politics.

An exchange suggests the calling of a convention of representatives of all religious denominations on the quarter-deck of an English or American gunboat in the Mediterranean, if free speech can be guaranteed nowhere else, that might furnish information and advice which would tend to arouse the civil powers to action in the case of the persecuted Armenians. The inaction of these powers and their apparent indifference respecting the barbarities of the Turkish government is a sad commentary on the Christian civilization of our day.

The call has been issued for the annual convention of the friends of anti-secrecy in Iowa to meet in the Friends' church at New Sharon, Nov. 18, 19. As the peril to our country from secret organizations is growing more and more threatening, the call comes louder than ever to every anti-secretist in the State to do everything possible to make this convention a powerful protest against this evil. Write at once to the President, Rev. T. P. Robb, Linton, Ia., stating what you can do, and what should be done to help on the cause in the State.

An unusually interesting meeting of the N. C. A. Board of Directors was held at the Association rooms Friday morning, Sept. 18. Steps were taken to inaugurate an anti-secret lecture bureau, with J. M. Hitchcock as its superintendent, from which important results are expected. President Blanchard gave an encouraging account of his reception at the Northfield Conference, and his lecture tour among the colleges in the South. Opportunities were never so favorable for the advancement of our cause and the great need of the hour is larger contributions for the work.

ONE LESS AT HOME.

BY S. G. STOCK.

One less at home!
The charmed circle broken; a dear face
Missed day by day from its accustomed place;
But, cleansed and saved and perfected by grace,
One more in heaven.

One less at home!
One voice of welcome hushed, and evermore
One farewell word unspoken; on the shore
Where parting comes not, one soul landed more,
One more in heaven!

One less at home!
A sense of loss that meets us at the gate;
Within, a place unfilled and desolate;
And far away, our coming to await,
One more in heaven!

One less at home!
Chill as the earth-born mist the thought would rise
And wrap our footsteps round and dim our eyes;
But the bright sunbeams darteth from the skies—
One more in heaven!

One more at home!
This is not home, where cramped in earthly mold,
Our sight of Christ is dim, our love it cold;
But there, where face to face we shall behold,
Is home and heaven.

One less on earth!
Its pain, its sorrow and its toil to share;
One less the pilgrim's daily cross to bear;
One more the crown of ransomed souls to wear,
At home in heaven.

One more in heaven!
Another thought to brighten cloudy days,
Another theme for thankfulness and praise,
Another link on high our souls to raise
To home and heaven!

One more at home—
That home where separation cannot be,
That home where none are missed eternally,
Lord Jesus, grant us all a place with thee,
At home in heaven.

TRY THE SPIRITS.

BY H D. WHITCOMB.

"Whatsoever is not sacrificial is Satanic."—Dr. Joseph Parker.

This saying is certainly a great and startling truth, worthy to be adopted as a maxim by which to try everything in life. As the one characterized our Lord, our great exemplar for good, so the other marked our great enemy, the author of evil. Every act of life has the brand of benevolence or selfishness, being inspired by one or the other of these spirits. Our business, our religion, our social influence and our politics, each belongs in one of these classes, which may be determined by asking the question, "Is it sacrificial?" if not it is Satanic. Any business which has not the good of those with whom we deal in view is Satanic. Any religion which begins and ends in our own salvation will probably fail of its object, and any politics which seeks our own good only is unworthy the name. Any social life—organized or not—which cares only for its own members, has no claim to be regarded benevolent.

Shakespeare says, "The quality of mercy is not strained; it droppeth like the gentle dew of heaven." But what is the "quality" of that mercy which only comes by the payment of dues, and requires a pledge of like service in return. Not much like gentle dew is that which requires the lash of penalty to enforce it. It is simply Satanic. True socialism can ignore no human being, but seeks the general good, sustained by each according to ability and to be enjoyed by each according to necessity. This must ultimately come; then why allow Satan to pitch the key of society, and further mould it to his image? "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they be of God." 1 John 4: 1.

In such a light, how mean, heartless and Satanic appears our protective tariff. Protection from whom? Our enemies? No, our friends, our brethren, born to the same rights, desires, necessities and destiny as ourselves, and entitled to the same reward for their labors. Shall we, the most pampered people on earth, enjoy to repletion and practice waste while aware that large populations of the old world can seldom have their desires fully satisfied? Shall this knowledge only add to the gusto of our enjoyment while we set up tariffs to prolong the situation? Americanism is only another term for egotism, favoritism, among God's family of nations.

It is the spirit which Michael cast over the battlements of heaven; it is the "old dragon" who brought sin and misery to the earth. We do not accept the Malthusian doctrine, that population naturally increases to the verge of safety, where hunger, vice and misery are necessary to remove the surplus, while the fittest always survive. Such a doctrine is an impeachment of the good purposes of God, who desires all men to be happy. Nothing but

> "Man's inhumanity to man
> Makes countless thousands mourn."

But when the spirit of sacrifice prevails all will be happy and all will be supplied. We consider that a Satanic political party which says to the voter, "put us in power and we will give you the industrial advantage of other men," whose crime is that they were born on a poorer soil, on the other side of the ocean, and have not come over. Compare this with the party which proposes to champion the cause of the poor weak and wronged, to shield the tempted and to snatch his prey from the jaws of the destroyer. All this to the injury or disadvantage of no one. Such is the party of legal prohibition.

OPEN AND SECRET BENEFIT ASSOCIATIONS.

PAPER PRESENTED BEFORE THE SOCIOLOGICAL CLASS IN THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO BY PROF. E. WHIPPLE OF WHEATON COLLEGE.

Open benefit associations predominate in Great Britain, while the secret associations are most numerous in the United States. Secrecy is wholly unnecessary and opens the way to corrupt management; especially when there is a circle within a circle, the doings of the higher degrees are kept secret from those who are members only of the lower. In the United States, at least, the secret associations nearly always have a religious ritual which tends to make membership therein take the place of faith in Christ.

Another classification is into endowment orders and those providing life insurance and sick benefits. It is conceivable that the former could be rightly managed, but the principles usually adopted are such as to lead to inevitable disaster. It must be said of all kinds of fraternal associations that, in their eagerness to compete with one another and with "old line" insurance companies and to furnish cheap benefits, they usually fix the rates of assessment too low.

None but those having the endowment feature may ever "fail" in the legal sense, because they may never have promised positively anything definite; but after leading their members to expect to have a certain sum paid to their families at death, they either "freeze" them out, as old age approaches, by frequent assessments or else fail to pay any such amounts as were expected.

Johnson's Encyclopedia inserts the uncontradicted claim that no such organization having "lodge" features ever failed. Alongside of this we may put the fact stated in the Massachusetts Insurance Report for 1892, that twenty-three such associations went to pieces in Massachusetts alone during the preceding year.

GREATNESS OF THE ANTI-SECRET ISSUE.

REPORT ON SECRET SOCIETIES ADOPTED BY THE MINNESOTA AND NORTHERN IOWA FREE METHODIST CONFERENCE AT ITS LATE SESSION.

The secret society question is probably one of far greater significance than is generally appreciated even by those opposed to them. Their number, extent and influence are not fully known and realized. Those with which we are most familiar are but a mere fraction. Heathen lands are infested with them. Civilized and semi-civilized countries are honey-combed. Some are distinctly murderous in character and design.

Just now in Pennsylvania Italians are being stealthily struck down almost under the eye of the police by the assassins of the Mafia, which a few years since so seriously involved our Government with Italy over murders in New Orleans. There is excitement in Great Britain over the probable capture of the leader of the celebrated gang of Phœnix Park murderers who shocked civilization not long ago. There is revived and dangerous activity among the Chinese Highbinders, deadly assassins of the Orient, on our Pacific Coast.

The secret murderers of paganism are fitted for their deadly work by religious rites. From this point of view it is apparent, that like idolatry itself, secretism is a product and growth of Satanic inspiration and fostering. And in this light the barbarous penalties of Masonic oaths descending from an earlier and more brutal age, projecting into Christian lands and communities, the symbolism and tenets of the mysteries of ancient heathenism, though regarded as an amusing farce by those who assume their obligations, receive a very different complexion and importance.

It is not wise to trifle with instruments of such an origin and history. At best they are more than childish—selfish, clannish divisions of society, tending to unfair advantages, lowering the moral and social standard of a generous, manly nobility of character, and brotherly business cooperation. The so-called benevolent and moral reform societies of the secret fraternity introduce false types and standards of religious sentiment, blind the eyes and benumb the conscience to the evil principles at their foundation, and so become stepping-stones to those of graver character.

We think it Scriptural and wise for us as a people to keep clear of the whole brood of fraternities. Let us, as we have opportunity or can make it, by voice, pen and ballot, give our aid to the growing cause of anti-secret reform. The Christian Cynosure of Chicago, edited by a fearless champion of reform, social and national, the Rev. M. A. Gault, is an exponent of this cause worthy our patronage and circulation.

WHAT KANSAS FREEDOM COST.

FREE STATE MEN IMPRISONED.

[We invite especially Kansans to read the account of what the early settlers of that State endured in preventing it from being a slave State. If they had succumbed to the slave power not only Kansas but all States west of the Missouri might have been slave States.—Editor]

On Sabbath morning, Sept. 14th, Mr. Dyer, of Osawkie, whom Lane's men had robbed on the 11th, before the Hickory Point fight, arrived at Lecompton with witnesses and affidavits of the fact, and stating, also, that Lane and Whipple had gone toward Hickory Point. So Gov. Geary, whose proclamation had been sent out two days before ordering all armed forces to disband, called on Col. Cooke, of United States troops, who sent eighty men in search of them.

It was late in the day when the troops got started, and when night overtook them they secured a guide who took them toward Newell's Mill, where Harvey's force was camped. About midnight A. G. Patrick, who had withdrawn with a squad of others from the main camp on account of no guards being put out, went up to the main camp, where there was fire, to warm up and roast some corn. By this time the wounded were suffering terribly, especially the one who was shot through the lung, and Patrick and one Porterfield concluded to take them at once to Lawrence where they could have medical aid.

By one o'clock they were on their way with the wounded, when, about a mile from camp, they ran upon the United States troops. They were surrounded and upon inquiry one of the captives incautiously "let the cat out." The ambulance with the wounded was sent on to Lawrence under escort, while Patrick and Porterfield were compelled to lead the way to Harvey's camp. As they neared the camp, Capt. Bickerton hearing them and supposing they were a Pro-slavery band trying to surprise the camp, matched a fire brand and rushing to the cannon waved it over his head, declaring he would blow them all to perdition if they didn't surrender immediately.

Patrick yelled to him to hold on, telling who they were, when the main camp was at once surrounded and all captured but Harvey, who had gone to stay at the home of Newell, and the squad which had camped at a distance from the rest. It was now toward morning and the commander hurried them into ranks in order to get back to Lecompton for breakfast. A few escaped on the way in brushy places.

Strange to say the boy who guided them to Harvey's camp undertook to ride off hastily, and being probably mistaken for an escaping prisoner was pursued, when he turned in his saddle and fired, wounding a soldier. The fire was returned and he fell dead. The body was thrown into a feed trough attached to the hind end of a wagon, and taken to Lecompton.

Of the 150 in the fight at Hickory Point under Harvey, 101 were marched into Lecompton on the morning of the 15th, prisoners, and placed in two tents only large enough to hold one-forth of them comfortably. Upon the testimony of Dyer and others who were encouraged by this act of Gov. Geary, other prisoners were now brought in, making a total of 126. One dark night, having bribed the guards, the prisoners undertook to escape. They rolled out under the side of the tent till the sixth one, who had on a rubber coat which rattled so it scared the horses, making some of them break loose when the officers were aroused and the guards had to stop it.

One day one stout fellow pitched his guard into the river and escaped. In about two weeks the prisoners, having been kept two miles out, were brought into town and indicted for the murder of C. G. Newell, who was killed on the Pro-slavery side at the battle of Hickory Point. They were now confined in a board shanty, which was so open that they did not lack for ventilation at least.

Judge Cats, who had interested himself overmuch, apparently, in the indictment of the prisoners, now proceeded to the examination of the arms taken with them, when a gun accidentally discharged a load into his ankle. He was carried by where the prisoners were confined, and having learned of the accident, they hissed and groaned and taunted him fearfully. The prisoners lay there for weeks half-clad and dirty and alive with vermin. Porterfield, who was taken with Patrick, had, upon hearing of his daughter in Kansas being imperiled and insulted, taken his gun and footed it from New York, I believe, all the way to Kansas, to avenge her wrongs. He was an old man too, and now in the hands of his enemies awaiting with the rest his sentence to the penitentiary.

BRO. W. B. STODDARD AT BROCKTON.

The Brockton, Mass., Daily Enterprise of Friday, Sept. 11, contains the following report of an address in that city by Secretary W. B. Stoddard:

"Rev. W. B. Stoddard, of Washington, D. C., who is the Eastern Secretary of the National Christian Association, lectured before an audience of fully 300 people at the Swedish Lutheran church last evening, on the subject, 'The Relation of the Secret Societies to the Church of God.'

"The discourse was full of denunciation of the secret societies all over the United States, but was especially directed against the Masonic order. The speaker delivered his address in English. He said in the beginning that he was opposed to all secret societies in general, but especially against Freemasonry, as he knew it to be anti-Christian, as the obligations of the lodge made the members turn away from God. He remarked that if the members of the Freemasons kept their obligations to the order they must necessarily break their duties to the church and God, and for this reason alone they are a menace to the country. This, said the speaker, was proven by the fact that although the Masons called their order a religious institution, the doctrine of Christ, and even the name of Christ, was never used in the constitution of the lodge. He had seen several Masonic books where the name of Christ had been cut out, and the literal meaning of the passages from which they were cut was changed on this account.

"The prayers in all secret societies were Christless because they were not offered in the name of Christ. He continued by saying that the obligations of a Mason were against the man's duty to his home, for the reason that a man will go to the lodge and swear to keep secret everything that has been done, even from his wife. Their obligations also put a man in opposition to the state and government, as a Mason is bound, according to his obligations, to keep secret whatever crimes he knows of a brother member. The speaker cited several instances where this had been proven.

"His attack against the secret societies of the country was the most pronounced one that has been heard in this city for a long time. Among the audience were a number of men who are members of the different societies in this city."

AN ACHAN IN THE CAMP.

No one can be more heartily in sympathy with the principles and purposes of the A. P. A., in resisting the aggressions of the Roman hierarchy in this land, than I am; but from the purest patriotic motives I am constrained to protest against and dissent from their use of secrecy as a means to accomplish their purposes and establish their principles. Secrecy is the method of the kingdom of darkness. Open and public testimony is the method of the kingdom of light. Satan works secretly; Christ works openly. Satan's followers are given to deeds of darkness, which will not bear the light; Christ's followers are children of the light and of the day. Wendell Phillips, William Lloyd Garrison, Gerrit Smith and the other Abolitionists abhorred secret methods and repudiated the lodge. The slaveholders in the South loved secrecy and were generally members of secret, oathbound fraternities. Abolitionism belonged to the kingdom of light and abjured secrecy. Slavery belonged to the kingdom of darkness and allied itself with the lodge. The conflict was irrepressible.

"There was war in heaven; Michael and his angels fought, and the dragon and his angels, and prevailed not, but was cast out into the earth." The conflict to-day between the friends and foes of our free institutions is irrepressible. But the lines must be clearly and sharply drawn. The 144,000 followers of the Lamb must have the seal of God on their foreheads. That seal of God is not secrecy, but an open and public profession of allegiance to the truth. The Jesuits employ secrecy, because they belong to the "secret empire." Secrecy is the mark of the beast. Every follower of the beast has the mark of secrecy on his forehead or his right hand. Some are open and defiant followers of anti-Christ; others are hidden and timid. But all his devotees employ secret methods.

The servants of Christ will not have that "mark" upon them. They make war upon Satan and all that pertains to him. If they had no other reason they would reject secrecy because Satan wants it. What their greatest enemy wants they do not want. But they have a better reason: Christ rejects secrecy. "In secret have I said nothing." "To this end was I born that I might bear witness to the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice." The divine method is: God proclaims the truth; his people declare it; his enemies flee away. Gideon and his 300 broke the pitchers, swung their lamps, and cried: "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon." And the great host of the Midianites fled in terror.—Rev. J. M. Foster in Boston Citizen.

CATHOLICS AND JESUITS.

The Roman Catholic laymen themselves will be grateful to us for leading in an onset which will deliver them at last from bondage. South American Catholics have shaken off the Jesuit yoke. In Chili there is a fine for sending a child to a Jesuit school for instruction. In the Argentine Republic the parochial schools are put under close supervision. That republic is so filled with the modern spirit that it will not submit to Jesuitism for a moment. In all the republics of South America the yoke of political Romanism has been shaken off, although the Catholic faith of the people has remained. Many of our Roman Catholics, devoutly attached to their faith, are still ill at ease under the power of this secret society in clerical form; and if we raise a huge wave of popular indignation, I have no doubt will take advantage of it to assert their own liberties in the United States as they have in South America and in Mexico.

Parochial schools are abolished in Mexico. In this foreign attack on your common schools you have an exhibition of disloyal secret oaths setting up a power within a power and introducing here actual alien authority. Cardinal Manning, of London, himself well understanding the power of the secret organization of the Roman Catholic church, says, —and he said this in public to Roman Catholic ecclesiastics—"It is your mission, Holy Fathers, to bend and to break the will of an imperial race." I say from Chicago here, the city of the Great Lakes, to Cardinal Manning, that we have now, thank God, no slave and no king on this continent, and that we shall never go into bondage to any king or prelate on the other side of the sea. But you are in danger of having a struggle on that matter, because you underrate the power of the Jesuit oath-bound secret organization.—Joseph Cook.

MORGAN'S PRESS.

STORY OF ITS DESTRUCTION. MORGAN'S REVELATIONS ARE MATTERS OF FACT. A MEMORABLE ANTI MASONIC BOOK.

The following reminiscence of the old Morgan press and of his book revealing Freemasonry, is taken from an article by R. H. Farnham in the Buffalo Illustrated Express of March 22:

Morgan's press, like that of Dr. Franklin, consisted of the ordinary movable table or bed-plate, on which the "forms" rested, and had the usual appendages of tympan, frisket, etc., but this bed-plate, instead of being of iron, was a slab of dark colored polished stone. In place of the solid iron "arch" of modern hand presses, the "platen," which was of wood instead of iron, was suspended between two heavy timber uprights, resting on a substructure of the same kind, bound together by wooden cross-bars, one of which formed the "cap" of the structure.

In lieu of the obtuse-angled jointed lever, or the compound lever employed in modern hand presses, to bring the platen down onto the form for the purpose of making the impression, the pressure was produced by an iron screw working in a hollow screw, set in one of the cross-bars, the pitch of the screw being such that a quarter turn of the hand lever by the pressman was sufficient. (In Dr. Franklin's press the screw is a large wooden one, like that in an old-fashioned cider press.) The inking of the types was done by means of two stuffed dogskin "balls," instead of the modern gelatine roller. A rude, unwieldy, cumbersome affair, in appearance, was this old press of Morgan; nevertheless, good work could be done on it, at the rate of 200 impressions an hour. I am the only person now living who has any knowledge of that press.

Morgan's book is said to have entirely disappeared from the public reach within a few years after it was issued; it and its revelations are now a matter of tradition only. So the public think. But within a short time I have been placed in possession of a specimen of Anti-masonic literature, almost as curious, and, in some respects, even more so, than Morgan's book itself; I had not supposed that any such publication was extant. It is a leather-bound duodecimo of over 600 pages, and bears the imprint of William Williams, Printer, Utica, N. Y., 1820. The title page reads:

"Light on Masonry: A collection of all the most important documents on the subject of Freemasonry; embracing the reports of the Western committees in relation to the abduction of William Morgan; proceedings of conventions, orations, essays, etc., etc., with all the degrees of the order conferred in a Master's Lodge, as written by Captain William Morgan. All the degrees conferred in the Royal Arch Chapter and Grand Encampment of Knights Templar, with the appendant orders, as published by the convention of seceding Masons, held at LeRoy, July 4 and 5, 1828. Also, a revelation of all the degrees conferred in the lodge of perfection, and fifteen degrees of a still higher order, with seven French degrees, making forty-eight degrees of Freemasonry. With notes and critical remarks by elder David Bernard, of Warsaw, Genesee Co., N. Y., once an Intimate Secretary in the Lodge of Perfection, and Secretary of the Convention of Seceding Masons held at LeRoy, July 4 and 5, 1828."

A sufficiently comprehensive "prelude," one would say. It claims to embody all that Morgan divulged and a great deal more. The purported disclosures are of the most minute and detailed character, and fill 300 pages of the work. I shall not allude to them, but some reference to certain historical features of the book may not be out of place.

The volume is illustrated by two steel engravings, one of which is a portrait of William Morgan, from a painting in oil by F. R. Spencer, and depicts the subject as a man of refined appearance, in a ruffled shirt front, with spectacles raised and resting across his forehead, seated at a table, with a pile of manuscript and several large tomes before him. No well-grounded opinion can now be formed as to his real character. He was born about 1776, in Culpepper county, Virginia, and in 1819 was married to Lucinda Pendleton, a young lady only 16 years old. He was a mason by trade; became a merchant in Richmond, and in 1821 removed to York, Canada, where he built a brewery, which was burned, the loss reducing him to poverty. He then removed to Rochester, in this State, and finally turned up in Batavia. It is said that he was a captain in the war of 1812.

OPEN LETTERS.

TO CARDINAL GIBBONS AND MR. ECHOLS, PRESIDENT OF THE AMERICAN PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION.

LETTER II.

Sirs:—That Masonry and Romanism are very closely connected can be proved by the likeness in their origin, history and methods. Somebody has said that to write the actual history of anything one must go back to the creation. I don't propose to do this, though if I did, I should only follow the example of not a few Masonic historians; I am content with simply asserting what all the standard authorities from Mackey and Morris downward have affirmed and re-affirmed,—that the Masonic rites and ceremonies had their origin on the banks of the Nile, in the secret mysteries of Isis and Osiris. On the other hand, as Hislop has abundantly proved in his wonderfully learned and able work on "The Two Babylons," the rites and ceremonies practiced in the Roman Catholic church to-day, and even many of her distinguishing doctrines, were a part of the ancient Babylonian worship,—broken images of the old idolatry and superstition which prevailed in the childhood of the race, and from which we flatter ourselves that we are free.

It is certainly a striking parellel that both pride themselves on their age. Romanism and Masonry are twin sisters—Aholah and Aholibah daughters of a heathen mother. Under the starry skies of Chaldea, when the world's first great poem was yet unsung, under the shadowing walls of Karnak, when its sculptured columns were but just wrought, they mingled the same cup of enchantment; they pressed to the lips of their victims the same draught of spiritual death.

Jesuitism and the A. P. A. both come from the same family tree, and that tree is Masonry. The Masonic principle, organized secrecy, enters into both exactly as the alcoholic principle enters into the various forms of spirituous liquor. It does not matter what label they bear. When it is a matter of poisonous snakes, why stop to dispute over the question, which is worse, and therefore to be exterminated, or which is not quite so bad and therefore to be treated with discriminating toleration? When it is a matter of right and wrong, why compromise with falsehood, thinking to advance the cause of truth?

Why should we in our zeal against Rome cooperate with Masonry when she comes in the form of the A. P. A. or some other so-called patriotic organization that requires a grip and a password before it will allow the purest patriot to enter her secret chambers? No fact in history is better authenticated than this; that when Rome was bending all her energies to recapture the English people, that after they had thrown off the Stuart dynasty, Masonry was her willing tool. This is a chapter of history that Rome suppresses. Masonic historians are not so squeamish. Look at the article, "Stuart Masonry," in Mackey's Encyclopedia, or what is said under "Scotch Rite," in Macoy's, or consult Rebold's General History of Freemasonry, p. 161.

Why, on the other hand, in our zeal against Masonry, should we co-operate with Rome when she herself has made such free use of this "infernal sect," "this diabolical organization," as Archbishop Begin of the diocese of Quebec lately called it in a circular to his clergy? What is to hinder her using it again? What is to prevent her from getting secret control of even the A. P. A through her Jesuit emissaries? Was there ever a society or association of any kind into which it was not possible for a Jesuit to worm his way? And as Rome has more at stake now than she ever did in any previous age of the world—for with her it is the last throw of the dice—will she be likely to neglect an instrumentality more potent, more world-wide, and therefore better fitted for her use, than it was in the days of the Stuarts?

Gentlemen, there is another parallel in the two systems which you each represent—their choice vocabulary in describing each other. "Vile," "pestilent," "fiendish," "hellish," are some of the mildest terms which Masonry gives to Rome, and vice versa. And when we have the best of reasons for believing them both, shall Christian men and women, in their terror of one, throw themselves into the arms of the other?

A Jesuit is a man without a country. Says Graf Hoensfroech, a prominent ex-Jesuit of Germany: "Catholic orders in general and the Jesuits in particular have no fatherland and do not wish to have one. They are, and want to be, cosmopolitan and international." He testifies further that while in the order he was censured for his "indestructible patriotism." The Jesuit recognizes no authority, human or divine, save that of the head of his order. Secrecy and unquestioning obedience to his superiors, from the one law which he must not violate on any pretext. Always and everywhere he is a Jesuit.

But, Masonically considered, a Mason is just as much a man without a country as a Jesuit. What says the Grand Lodge Report of Missouri for 1867?

"Once a Mason, always a Mason. Once a Mason, everywhere a Mason. However independent either as individuals or as lodges, whether grand or subordinate—and we are each and all truly free and uncontrolled by anything save our own ancient laws and constitution—yet no Mason can be a foreigner to any other Mason. We are all equal citizens of one common government; having equal rights, equal privileges and equal duties; and in which government, thank God, the majority does not govern. For our order, in its very constitution, strikes at the root of that which is the very basis of popular government. It proclaims and practices, not that the will of the masses is wise and good, and as such ought to be obeyed—not that the majority shall govern—but that the law shall govern. Our tenet is not only that no single man but that no body of men can change in any degree one single landmark of our ancient institution. You may take a man to pieces, and you may take a watch to pieces, but you cannot alter his organs and put him together again as you do the time-keeper. Masonry is the living man, and all other forms of government mere convenient machines for regulating the affairs of state. Not only do we know no North, no South, no East and no West, but we know no government save our own. To every government save that of Masonry, and to each and all alike, we are foreigners; and this form of government is neither pontificial, autocratic, monarchial, republican, democratic nor despotic; it is a government per se, and that government is Masonic. We have nothing to do with forms of government, forms of religion, or forms of social life. We are a nation of men only, bound to each other by Masonic ties as citizens of the world, and that world the world of Masonry—brethren to each other all the world over, foreigners to all the world beside."

Can more than this be said of the followers of Loyola?

And now, Cardinal Gibbons, can that church in which you stand very near—so it is whispered—to the supreme headship, have the face to ask us to co-operate with her in putting down Masonry while she cherishes in her own bosom the worst of all secret orders? an order which teaches a man to stifle all patriotism, all love of country, and be dead to every tie which binds him to his native soil.

On the other hand, dare you, Mr. Echols, ask us to co-operate with Masonry to put down the power of Rome by joining the A. P. A. and thus allying ourselves with this dark, terrible, world-wide secret power, which teaches that it is a government by itself, owing allegiance to none else, "brethren to each other," "foreigners to all the world beside," even their own which they are to look upon only as "a convenient machine for regulating the affairs of state," while Masonry is the living organism. And this is the kind of patriotism you would teach! You must excuse us. We learned a different and a better kind in the "Little Red Schoolhouse" of which your order claims to be the special defenders.

Through the machinations of that dark power, which sits on many waters, the martyred Lincoln met his death. Masonry working through the Knights of the Golden Circle plotted secession years before the first gun was fired on Sumter. Shall we as Christians and patriots take the hand of either in a fraternal grasp? Is it not the boast of Rome that she is built upon the rock of St. Peter and cannot change? And would Masonry be Masonry if she did not hold fast to the "ancient landmarks?"

In my next letter I propose to show some still more striking parallels. The Jesuitism of to-day is the Jesuitism of Loyola; the Masonry of to-day is the Masonry of the Jacobins and the Southern secessionists. Individual Romanists may possess real piety; individual Masons may be genuine patriots, but as a system, Rome does not know the meaning of religion, nor Masonry of patriotism; and woe betide the land, that to escape the clutch of the one dreadful foe to liberty, makes an unholy compact with the other.

Sincerely yours, Elizabeth E. Flagg.

A REVIEW OF FREEMASONRY.

PART OF AN ADDRESS BEFORE THE OREGON STATE CONVENTION AT PORTLAND, AUG. 27, BY SECRETARY P. B. WILLIAMS.

Freemasons claim many things for their system, which, if well founded, we would cheerfully concede. Its principles of morality are often urged as highly commendatory of the order. Let us, for the sake of our arguments, concede all they claim in this regard, and then candidly and impartially examine the subject.

The lodge is called the "sacred retreat of friendship and virtue." Here we are taught to worship and adore the Supreme Jehovah, and to supplicate his protection and assistance in all our well-meant endeavors." But of what avail is this "worship" without repentance towards God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ? It is, indeed, a "drawing nigh to God with the mouth, while the heart is far from him." No such "worship" or adoration is pleasing to God. They that worship him must do so in spirit and in truth. "Our institution," say they, "is said to be supported by wisdom, strength and beauty." "Its covering is no less than a clouded canopy, or a starry-decked heaven, where all good Masons hope at last to arrive." But how? "By the aid of the theological ladder which Jacob saw in his vision, ascending from earth to heaven; the three principal rounds of which are denominated Faith, Hope and Charity, and which admonish us to have faith in God, hope in immortality and charity to all mankind."

On this "theological ladder," then, Masons expect to climb to a starry-decked heaven." And the "three principal rounds" of this "theological ladder" are faith in God, hope in immortality, and charity to all mankind. Christ crucified is not in all the system! "No man cometh to the Father but by me," saith our Lord. The whole system is of the self-righteous order, and extremely Pharisaical. Masons expect to get to heaven by their good works, and hence they speak of "the just reward of a pious and virtuous life."

True, men are to be "rewarded according to the deeds done in the body," but still there is no salvation out of Christ; for "there is none other name given under heaven or among men whereby they must be saved!" There is no salvation in Masonry! Masonic morality is not the morality of the Gospel! And hence they are self-deceived when they expect by good works to enter into the paradise of God.

No Mason who is not a Christian (and if he is a Christian he should not be a Mason) can have "purity of life and conduct." A pure heart, "sprinkled from an evil conscience," precedes a pure life. Masons may love Masons, profess faith in God and hope in immortality, and yet be wanting in the great qualifications of acceptance with God. But they evidently expect by their Masonic virtues, and hence they speak of "gaining admission into the celestial lodge above, where the Supreme Architect of the universe presides," of "fitting their minds as living stones for that spiritual building, that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," and various other declarations of similar import.

But we have introduced the question of morality for a higher and far different reason than has yet appeared. Masonry has its own vocabulary and terminology. Let us examine this briefly. God is spoken of and addressed as "Almighty Father of the universe," "Supreme Architect of the universe," "Grand Architect of the universe," "Divine Artist," "All-seeing Eye," "Grand Overseer," "Grand Master of the universe," "Supreme Grand Architect of the universe," "Supreme High Priest," "Almighty and Supreme High Priest of heaven and earth," etc.

These are all, or nearly all, names given to Jehovah by Masons, which may all be well enough in Masonic or deistic theology; but God has not revealed himself by them, neither are they to be found in the Book of God's inspiration; and those who contend for a pure speech in speaking of divine things will find it impossible to reconcile the use of such terms with that purity which the living oracles demand.

Besides, the Lord our God is not a "priest" at all; much less is he spoken of as the "Supreme and Grand High Priest of heaven and earth." Jesus Christ, and not the Father, is the Great High Priest of our profession;" and he is the only priest in the whole universe who has power with God. True, saints, not Masons, are, in a very subordinate sense, said to be "priests unto God," and to offer up spiritual sacrifices;"but even these are offered "by Jesus Christ;" otherwise they would not be acceptable.

We seriously doubt the morality of using these bombastic, high-sounding names with reference to God, when he has, in his Word, revealed himself by those names and titles by which he desires to be known and addressed. But human nature, in its arrogance and presumption, aspires "to be wise above what is written," while, at the same time, it is very slow to learn that divine wisdom "which comes down from above," and of which the Holy Scriptures are full.

Whatever Freemasons may claim for the institution in the way of morality, it is certainly a system of religion! Perhaps Masons may deny this (though we have conversed with many who admitted it), but a denial here is of no avail. The system has all the elements necessary to constitute it a religion, but not the religion of Jesus Christ. It is a compound of paganism, Judaism, and what is called "natural religion." It has its "ceremonies" of initiation; its vows, oaths or obligations; its sermons or lectures; its Scripture readings, prayers, songs and burial service. Originating in the Polytheism of Syria, it has borrowed largely from the Jewish ritual. It is a symbolism of a moral and religious character.

FROM THE COAST AGENT.

Oakdale, Cal., Sept. 16, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—On Sept. 5th I went to Sunnyside in Clackamas county, Oregon, to assist Rev. Thos. Wiles, of the Wesleyan Methodist church, in a quarterly meeting. The meeting was held in the Free Methodist church, and was fairly attended. We preached on Sabbath morning and evening, and felt the divine presence and power at each service. Bro. Wiles introduced the sacrament, after which we waited upon the Christians present. It was a good spiritual meeting. I secured a few Cynosure subscriptions. We returned home the next day, feeling that a very pleasant and profitable time had been had at Sunnyside.

On Tuesday we went to South Bend on the Tualetan river. I spoke for two hours to a very good house, quite a number of lodge people being present. The address was well received, and we trust good will be accomplished. Wife accompanied me to the last two places. It is good to have a human friend as well as a divine one, who is willing to stand with you in sharing your toils and perils.

We returned home the next morning by the kindness of Bro. Chas. Keller, who met us at the electric car, and brought us back. We hurriedly packed our grip, and at ten at night we boarded the train for San Franciso, where we arrived on Friday morning at 6: 30. We secured our one-half fare rates on the Southern Pacific R R. in California. Then called to see Rev. W. R. Young of the Advocate office. We found him in very poor health, but faithful to his high calling. He is arranging to take a little much needed rest. We wish that he might recover, and live many years to bless the world, and especially oppose the popular evils of this day.

We next called to see our old friend and brother, Rev. David Morrow, but found him absent. I called on a few friends, attended services at the mission on Telegraph Ave., and heard Rev. J. W. Byers, of the Faith Home, of Oakland. He preached on Divine Healing. He supported his positions by Scriptural quotations. The sermon was a clear presentation of the truth from the Scripture standpoint.

The next morning I took the train for Oakdale, Stanislaus county, where the annual conference is to be held. Rev. George Shepherdson, of Los Angeles, preached Saturday night; your agent preached Sabbath morning. Rev. P. A. Black preached in the afternoon at three and Rev. W. P. Tibbett, of Los Angeles, at night; Rev. E. DeWitt, Monday night and Bishop Dillon on Tuesday night. I wish to say the preaching has been almost wholly on the line of holiness and separation from the world.

The ministers and members present are looking well, with a few exceptions. All wearing good clothes, are neat and clean, and as a visitor we are impressed that they are as a rule clean within. Some of them have driven four hundred miles to attend the conference, showing a devotion to the cause which is very commendable. There is not a minister present, and I think not one in the conference, who uses tobacco in any form. This is as it should be. The conference has convened with Bishop Dillon presiding. This letter is being written in the conference room. In another letter we will give further notes of the conference.

FROM OUR KANSAS COLPORTEUR.

Yates Center Kan., Sept. 21, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—What impresses me most here is the cry of hard times. The farms are generally worked by renters, and this year the crops are good, yet I feel safe in saying that more than half the renters would be glad if they could pay the rent with all their crop. The seed flax cost $1 25 a bushel last spring; now they are forced to sell the crop for 45 cents a bushel to pay the contracted debt. Southern Kansas hay is a staple, and yields a ton and a half to the acre. To put it in the stack costs $1.25 a ton, and to get it bailed costs $3 a ton, and then to ship it to Kansas City makes it cost $4 25 a ton for actual expenses. At Kansas City it brings only from $4.50 to $6 a ton.

One thrasher says, "I stood on my machine and counted twenty-two steamers at work; the farmers furnished the coal, we furnish all the hands, board ourselves and put the wheat in the granary for 4 cents a bushel. The farmers have been so close run that they have only about one-third the cattle and hogs that they should have. If a man wants a day's work he can scarcely get it, and then at only 75 cents a day, which would only pay for their meals at a second-class hotel. In short, the people are not earning their board and clothes, so they have to go in debt until their farms and crops and stock and wages are all taken for debt; in other words, until they are entirely strapped.

When I ask the cause of these hard times some say they are caused by a Democratic administration; others will say by a gold standard since '73; others will say the railroads and mortgages are ruining us; others will say overproduction and no laborers for consumption of produce; still others will claim they can't raise good crops and so have nothing to sell. It seems to be the idea of the people that self, self, self is all we have to look after, and the God who controls all things and who alone gives rain and fruitful season, and all other good gifts, is forgotten. Have we forgotten his Word which says, "If ye walk in my statutes and keep my commandments and do them, then I will give you rain in due season and the land shall yield her increase and the trees of the field shall yield their fruit. And your thrashing shall reach unto the vintage, and the vintage shall reach unto the sowing time, and ye shall eat your bread to the full, and dwell in your land safely. And I will give peace in the land..... For I will have respect unto you, and make you fruitful, and multiply you, and establish my covenant with you. And ye shall eat old store and bring forth the old because of the new, and my soul shall not abhor you. And I will walk among you, and will be your God and ye shall be my people."

Our experience has demonstrated that this prairie country is fertile; that crops can be raised here in abundance; the rain has fallen when needed; in short, God's promises have been fulfilled to the full, as always is the case before the penalty falls. Any one in passing over these great fertile prairies would know that there has been disobedience to God's law. Hear what God says: "But if ye will not hearken unto me, and will not do all these commandments.....I will appoint over you terror.....and ye shall sow your seed in vain, for your enemies shall eat it, and I will set my face against you.....and if ye will not yet for all this hearken unto me then I will punish you seven times more for your sins. And I will break the pride of your power, and I will make your heaven as iron and your earth as brass, and your strength shall be spent in vain, for your land shall not yield her increase; neither shall the trees of the land yield their fruits." J. T. Cullor.

CORRESPONDENCE.

AFRAID TO INTERFERE WITH TURKEY.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 23, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—This week the news comes from Europe once more that the United States is to be a party of intervention in Turkish affairs by Great Britain and Italy. It would seem that the policy of this government, under the present administration, had been officially stated often enough to prevent serious attention being given to such statements. While fully aware of the sympathy felt for the Armenians in Turkey by the people of this country, which was voiced by the resolutions passed by the last Congress and never acted upon by the administration, President Cleveland has never wavered for a moment from his original intention to follow the advice of President Washington and to avoid all "foreign entanglements."

If it were possible to act in this case alone, there is little doubt that the humane sentiments of President Cleveland and Secretary Olney would have caused them to accept some of the overtures which have been made to get the United States to join with Great Britain in compelling the protection of the Armenians in Turkey. But, in their judgment, it isn't. And to enter any coalition with any European power for any purpose means that this government may be dragged into any war into which that power may get. It has been officially stated by the British government that if it attempted to act without the consent of the treaty powers in dealing with the Sultan of Turkey it would precipitate a general European war.

That has been the opinion of the present and other administrations of the United States; hence the policy of acting entirely independent of other nations and confining the official acts of the government to the protection of American citizens and American interests. That policy is, of course, liable to be changed when the administration changes, but the statement cannot be too positively made that it will not be changed under this administration, no matter what inducements may be held out by European powers. It isn't a new policy. It prevented the U. S. becoming a party to the treaty of Berlin. C. A. S.

CALIFORNIA AND THE LODGES.

Oakland, Cal., 1024 East 30th St., Sept. 21, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—It is not wise to be pessimistic. Perhaps reforms are prone to fall into that error. I guess the Cynosure is not an exception. Probably the writer of this belongs to the same class. But how can we be optimistic when wickedness abounds? Steeped in guilt the nation staggers like a drunken man. That the right will finally prevail is as sure as that the Lord's Christ is on the throne; but that the armies of the aliens are increasing in number and growing in power is just as certain as that the devil is not yet cast into the botomless pit.

If you of the Cynosure wish to be optimists, you had better stay away from California. For disregard of the holy Sabbath it has no parallel in the land; and by its lodges so multiform and so numerous, probably no cities are so cursed as are San Francisco and Oakland. On my table lies a copy of yesterday's San Francisco Call. Under the head of "Fraternal Bonds" I find reports or news from twenty six different secret orders and filling three long columns of small type. The first is the "Order of the Eastern Star." Perhaps not all your readers may know that that is the feminine side of Masonry. One item of news is that during their next grand excursion they will visit Del Monte, and "on Sunday be taken over the seventeen-mile drive and to all points of interest in Monterey." How many of them will attend church, or how much time they will have, does not appear. The last of the twenty-six orders mentioned is the "Order of Pends." Do you know what that is?

These twenty-six are only a part of the long list of the secret orders. Most of the lodgemen are Sabbath-breakers. How many of them are wine-drinkers, who knows? That some of these orders are a kind of life insurance companies is illustrated by the statement of the American Legion of Honor that "statistics for August show seventy-nine deaths, creating obligations to the amount of $198,000. Amount received through assessments, $240,895; paid death losses, $240,500. Total amount of losses paid since the order was established in 1878 up to July 9, 1896, $33,551,945." And that Methodist ministers and D. D.'s are not strangers in the lodge is illustrated by this statement from the same report, viz.: "When Grand Commander Filben closes his labors at the annual conference of the M. E. church at Pacific Grove, he will visit councils in various parts of the State."

And now, dear editor, let me close this "hefty" (?) paper by adding this pessimistic remark, that if it were not for the hope that the churches may be saved from the curse of the lodge system, I would advise the Christian Association to disband, and the Cynosure to give up its fight and let the nation go to ruin, for it seems to be going down that broad road with accelerated speed. Of double honor will they be worthy who may help to arrest it in this fearful trend. N. R. J.

"WHAT YER GOIN' TO DO ABOUT IT?"

Blanchard, Iowa, Sept. 21, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—When the selling of liquor on prescriptions in our town was brought to an end, one of the drug-stores had gotten such a taste of the profits of the whiskey business that it kept on selling. The temperance people became aroused, and under the efforts of Mr. Samuel Johnston, a Law and Order League was formed. A few lodgemen and a few Republicans who believe in temperance, when it becomes a local question, joined this league, and we began to prepare for legal prosecution.

But it was hard to get evidence. The liquor was sold only to the lodge men and the "known ones;" and with the proverbial character of all drinkers, they would swear to a lie, even when you could smell the liquor on their breath. They were paid for these lies in liquor. One man who spent almost all his leisure hours in this drug-store, and played cards with the druggist almost every night until midnight, was given so much whiskey once that he lay drunk in his stable all day, but was in court the next day and swore that there wasn't a drop of liquor kept or sold in that drug-store.

This druggist was a leading lodge man. He belonged to the I. O. O. F.s. Some of his brother lodge men belonged to the L. and O. League, and one of them in making a speech for the league one evening, spoke of this druggist as being "away above his fellow townsmen in social accomplishments and standing." This of course applied to his position and standing in the lodge, for outside of that he was only a common gambler.

It was soon evident that the lodge was behind him in his liquor business. A few of his lodge brothers opposed him but none exposed him. We lost first suit through lodge influence, and we learned at the same time that it was useless to try to have this man committed in Clarinda, our county seat, because he had once been an influential member of the lodge there.

Some of the temperance sympathizers in our lodge here tried to have this druggist expelled from their lodge. From private sources we learn that there was quite a struggle, but the druggist won and the temperance people still remained in the lodge, although some of them ceased to attend; but all kept quiet, so great is the influence of the lodge in quenching aggressive rightness.

The druggist having won in the lodge and in the courts through the lodge, he began to be more bold in his nafarious business, and taunted the temperance people with "What yer goin' to do about it," and in every way possible. When the Mulct law was passed he at once applied for a license, but prompt and harmonious action on the part of the temperance people prevented this, and the lodge was not able to help him out. At this he was much enraged, and tried to pose before the public as a persecuted man, and won the sympathy of even some good people.

His plea was that the people wouldn't allow him to do an honorable business; all he wanted was to use alcohol in his drug and paint business, and he couldn't do it honestly without a license. This plea of course was false but some people didn't know it. Our local newspaper was at that time in the hands of a quiet, peaceable temperance man, a member of the M. E. church and opposed to the lodge, though very mild in his opposition.

But he had helped to prevent this druggist getting his license, and in consequence the druggist decided that he must go. With the aid of his lodge Republicans he brought in a low, characterless Republican lodge man, whom he could use as his tool, and forced the good editor to sell out. This lodged-backed man at once opened fire on the good people and upheld the lawless druggist.

The people were again aroused and subscriptions to the paper began to fall off. But the breweries which furnisned the druggist his liquor came to his aid and he kept up the fight until the town was burned. J. R W.

A MINISTER'S FRIGHTFUL PLUNGE.

Los Angeles, Cal., Sept. 17, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—I read your paper with increasing interest and could not do without it. I think it improves all the time. I noticed your report of our anti-secret convention in the First United Presbyterian church of this city last spring did not tell it all. We had a good convention. Rev. P. B. Williams is a grand man, and did everything possible to make the meeting a success, but there was a disposition to hold him back on the part of some of the ministers.

Rev. J. C. Linn was filling the pulpit of our First church at the time, and asked a brother United Presbyterian minister to take part in the discussion. He replied that he knew nothing about secret societies. What a pity for a watchman on Zion's walls to confess that he knows nothing respecting the greatest iniquity that is lapping the church's life-blood to-day. I understand that the same pastor has since invited secret society men to come to his church and that they had no objections to them.

This city is full of all grades of secret orders, and pure religion is at a very low ebb. I send you the following report from one of our daily papers of a lecture by one of the pastors of Oregon, showing to what depths a minister can descend in advocating these false religions:

"Dr. W. E. Copeland, of Salem, Ore., a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity, thirty second degree, Scottish rite, delivered a lecture last evening before a large and interested audience at the hall of the Friday Morning Club, on South Broadway. He took for his subject, 'The Mystic Meaning of King Solomon's Temple,' and his lecture showed great study and research into the early history of Masonry, and the real meaning of the signs and symbols of the order, as well as a high appreciation of the lofty truths these are intended to convey. Dr. Copeland is an eloquent speaker, and he held the close attention of the large audience throughout his very interesting and instructive address.

"He began his lecture by discussing the question of the antiquity of Freemasonry, which he placed as far back as the mysteries of Egypt, and perhaps Atlantis. His theory was that there had been for thousands of years mystic lodges of masters who initiated into their wisdom those 'who were worthy and well qualified,' and when the time came that these mysteries were banned by the church, that then they were condensed and given to the charge of Freemasons, who had carefully preserved the exoteric form of whose esoteric meaning only a few were informed. These mystic lodges had from time to time given parts of the wisdom they possessed, usually towards the close of a century, and now one of these lodges proposed to erect on the Pacific coast a temple where in due and ancient form the candidates should be initiated. In the preparation for this interesting event, a body of Theosophists, who were most of them Masons who had received the thirty second degree, were journeying around the world and proclaiming the revival of the ancient mysteries.

"The lecturer gave some interesting explanations of signs printed on Masonic charts, among them the dot within the circle, which was explained as teaching the doctrine of evolution, or as the Gnostics held it, the doctrine of emanation. The circle was the circle of infinity, representing infinite space filled with ether, and the dot or point was the beginning of the manifested universe, when the first sound set up that conscious vibration which finally resulted in the universe. Mr. Copeland explained that the square and compass was a most comprehensive symbol, the compass again referring to the universe, the infinite from which was evolved the worlds which fill space and the inhabitants of those worlds. Dr. Copeland then explained the square, which was a form of the cross, the most ancient and common symbol, found in some form among all religions, and always referring to the descent of spirit into matter and then its return to the divine center of all things, teaching regeneration and immortality. So that the square and compass, so commonly worn by Masons, refers to the evolution of the universe, the descent of man, his regeneration and final union with God.

"In conclusion Dr. Copeland said that Masonry, by its tolerance of all creeds, by its vigorous battle for civil and religious freedom, by its symbolic teaching of regeneration and immortality, has become a power in diffusing light. A Masonic lodge, properly conducted, is a true church of God, teaching the essentials of true religion, and closely resembling a Christian ecclesia of the first century, where there ever prevailed liberty, fraternity and equality. The inner meaning has been too often overlooked, but next year is to be erected in California a temple where, under the direction of masters from Egypt and India, the ancient mysteries are to be conferred in due and ancient form, candidates are to be initiated into a knowledge of immortality and invested with the true omnific word. Under the influence of truth now fully revealed those deemed worthy by severe trial are to become perfect masters and be invested with those powers which made initiates veritable creative forces.

"Turning to the Masons present, the lecturer said: My brothers, let us be ever faithful in the building up of King Solomon's Temple, a perfect character, so that when we are called hence, we may meet the Supreme Inspector of the work at the east gate of the temple, our feet forming the angle of a perfect square, our bodies erect and facing the Sun of Righteousness, which, rising in the east, sheds its glorious, life-giving light through our whole nature, flooding us with unspeakable strength and beauty."

THAT PICTURE OF DR. WILSON.

New Castle, Pa., Sept. 21, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—I am glad to see on the first page of your last number (Sept. 17) the picture of the distinguished Dr. Wilson, of Allegheny Seminary. I can vouch for him as a reformer, and can distinctly remember when, but eight years old, I sat and listend to him, night after night, at a revival in Steubenville. There he preached about the wonderful salvation of Christ with such force and emphasis that the truths sank deep into my heart with lasting impression.

His familiar face still gleams with sympathy toward his fellowmen, and in the great reform he is so deeply interested in, he displays malice toward none but charity and eternal life for all. May the King of kings come to the help of his people, that so through his strength the marshaled hosts of Magog, those who have the mark of the beast's image, may be obliterated to give sway to Christ's kingdom.

HOW COLUMBUS REACHED LAND.

A Flight of Birds Changed the History of America.

When Columbus sailed westward over the unknown Atlantic, he expected to reach Zipangu (Japan). After several days' sail from Gomera, one of the Canary islands, he became uneasy at not discovering Zipangu, which, according to his reckoning, should have been 216 nautical miles more to the east. After a long discussion he yielded to the opinion of Martin Alonzo Pinzon, the commander of the Pinta, and steered to the southwest. Pinzon was guided in his opinion by a flight of parrots toward the southwest. The effect of this change in his course curiously exemplifies the influence of small and apparently trivial events in the world's history. If Columbus, resisting the counsel of Pinzon, had kept his original route he would have entered the warm current of the gulf stream, have reached Florida and then probably have been carried to Cape Hatteras and Virginia. The result would probably have been to give the present United States a Roman Catholic Spanish population instead of a Protestant English one, a circumstance of immeasurable importance. "Never," wrote Humboldt, "had the flight of birds more important consequences. It may be said to have determined the first settlements on the new continent and its distribution between the Latin and Germanic races."

How to Succeed In Politics.

Always remember that your present opponent may some day be on your side. Therefore do all your vituperating "by word of mouth" and never on paper. Before undertaking an argument always make the strongest argument you possibly can on the other side—in your mind—and be prepared to meet it. Remember that the current of opinion is nearly always determined by a very few men, possibly not more than a dozen in each precinct or township. Get them, and you have got the community. But if you are smart enough to pick the right men you are too smart to need this advice.

How to Make Rose Jars.

Put a layer of petals of any fragrant variety of rose in the bottom of a jar. On this scatter some coarse salt. Cover the jar closely and put in the sun. Next day add another layer of rose leaves and salt. Continue this until you have as much material as desired, then add cinnamon, orrisroot, cloves and other fragrant spices or perfumes. Mix the whole well and keep the jar closed.

How to Make a Dainty Pudding.

This delicious pudding is made from half a cupful of rice, 3 eggs, 2 cupfuls of milk, half a cupful of sugar and a pint of whipped cream. Boil the rice until tender, putting it on to cook in a pint of cold water; add a pinch of salt, and when cooked nearly dry put the rice in your double boiler with 2 cupfuls of milk. Cook until all the milk is absorbed and then put through a sieve. Return the rice to the boiler; add the 3 eggs, beaten until light, and the sugar. When cold, flavor, mix thoroughly with the whipped cream, beating it into rice, and freeze.

How to Make Baked Plum Pudding.

Eight crackers rolled fine, 4 eggs well beaten, a quart of milk, three-fourths cup of sugar, 2 tablespoonfuls butter, one-fourth teaspoonful salt, one-fourth nutmeg, one-half teaspoonful cinnamon, a pound raisins, seeded. Mix all but eggs, then add them, beaten very light. Bake in a moderate oven about an hour and a half.

How to Make a Marguerite Bag.

Some young women are now turning their attention to prayer book bags which they carry to church.

Embroider on a square of satin large enough to be afterward cut in a shield shape for a bag of sufficient capacity to carry a prayer book a crescent shaped branch of orange blossoms with a few buds and leaves. Let the branch descend from the upper right hand corner and sweep down to the left lower corner in a graceful curve.

Two or three loose, stray blossoms floating off as if in a breeze will add to the pleasing effect. Work with rich embroidery silks in natural colors on a cream white satin ground. Trim the shield shape all around with a double frill of elegant white lace.

Line bag with gold colored silk over a thin layer of perfumed wadding. Sew handsome 2½ or 3 inch wide satin ribbons of best quality to attach the bag to the bride's belt. A skillful painter could substitute painted flowers for embroidery.

How to Keep Milk Fresh.

Milk and cream, like butter, should never be left open to the air. It does not suffice to put it into a pitcher without a cover, because the milk gathers every noxious germ afloat in the air. This is the real cause of ice cream poisoning and often of cream cake poisoning.

How to Clean Tinware.

To clean tinware rub well with a damp cloth dipped in sal soda, then dry. An equally effectual method is to place tin articles in a large vessel of water in which soda has been dissolved and let it boil from 10 to 15 minutes.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1896.

MASONIC CORNER-STONE LAYING.

Masons improve the opportunity to turn out a procession and brass band parade, when they can get the chance to put corn, wine and oil on a corner-stone. Sometimes a church gives them the chance, but their best opportunity seems to be furnished by city government buildings. Probably this will not be remedied by mere protest. What seems to be needed is a movement in favor of a ceremony that is civic. The mayor and council, with the board of aldermen, form, with other city officials, a sufficiently numerous body of men, suitably related to the occasion.

It is suitable and reasonable to ask that they attend to a matter so much their own instead of delegating it to a mere clan or club. This is the more so because the Masonic order contains elements that are not loyal. It not only expressly disclaims national limitations and continental or governmental boundaries, it also requires a vow that is ill fitted to American obligations. If any organization were to take the work out of the city government's hands this ought not to be the one

Opposition based on this ground, however, seems liable to be less effective than a request that the city government lay the corner-stone of a city building with civic ceremonies.

FREEMASONRY AND ROMANISM.

Freemasonry claims to be intrusted with a special mission to crusade against the Catholic church, while all the forms and ceremonies are largely plagiarized from the mass of the Catholic church, which is nothing more than an imitation of the mysteries practiced in honor of Mithra, the sun god of Persia, and those of Eleusis practiced in honor of Demeter.

Freemasonry has more foolish and degrading superstition associated with it than any other organization known in the history of the world. It is the huge monstrosity of superstition. It riots in ignorance and feasts on barbarism. It hides in the darkness of night for its preparation for initiation, for its conferring of degrees—and such degrees. They are instigated by deceit and cruelty. It makes its signs and uses its grips by day, that by such some undue advantage may be secured over those who do not know the sign or the grip. The idea of a professed minister of the Gospel going around using signs and grips, secured by taking the most horrible oaths ever formulated; if there is anything more degrading than such performance we would be glad to know of it. We offer a premium to any bright Freemason who will furnish us with anything that can outrank such for infamy.

EXCEPTIONS PROVE RULES.

"Murder and treason excepted" is part of the regular formula of Masonic obligation. It occurs in the oath of the third or Master Mason's degree. In this degree the candidate really becomes a Mason, and from this point forward he lives under the restriction known as the third point of fellowship. He is no longer free.

The third of the five points obliges him to keep the personal secrets of any other Master Mason, neighbor or stranger, friend or foe. It was under this that Dr. Jackson was lately expelled from Hartford lodge. He gave testimony in court where another Mason was convicted of arson. The criminal who went to State prison had violated his country's law but not Masonic law. Behind the bars at Wethersfield he is a brother in good standing. But if his crime had been treason or murder, the witness who testified in the Connecticut court could not have been punished by the Masonic lodge. Arson was not one of the crimes included in the exception. It is evident that such an exception proves the rule Arson and other crimes must be concealed. The intention to commit any crime short of treason or murder must be kept from the intended victim.

It must not be revealed to his or her relatives or friends. A brother may not know a villain's designs against his sister, not even if they include violence. One who consents to this outrageous oath, pledges himself to let his best friend suffer to any extent rather than tell the truth about his worst enemy or about a total stranger.

This is a cutthroat fellowship. The rule proved by such a fellowship is the rule of an outlaw. Its observance demands that a Mason shall be out of fellowship if occasion requires, with all loyal citizens of the state and all virtuous members of society. For not being so, the lodge recently punished Jackson. It needs a good many feathers, ribbands and aprons to hide this shame. The fact that some ministers have taken the wicked obligation does not make it innocent. It shows for itself, and its operation also proves it thoroughly bad.

HOW JESUITISM DESTROYS PRIVATE JUDGMENT.

A good explanation of how a secret order reduces men to mere tools in the hands of others and destroys their individuality and private judgment is given by a Jesuit, Father Clarke, in the Nineteenth Century. He says he attributes the high reputation which Jesuits enjoy, both in the church and out, chiefly to three causes.

"The first is the extreme care with which its members are in the first instance chosen, and the process of natural selection which eliminates all who are not suited for its work. The second is the length and thoroughness of its training, both moral and intellectual, and the pains that is taken to adapt it to the special talents and capacities of the individual. The third is the spirit of implicit obedience, of blind obedience, in the sense in which I have explained it above, which is absolutely indispensable to everyone who is to live and die as one of its members."

Writing on the obedience which is exacted from all members of the order, he says:

"It is the difficult habit of abstaining from any mental criticism of the order given that is the distinctive feature of the obedience of the Society of Jesus. When still a secular, I once encountered an officer in the army who had been for some time in the noviceship, and had left because he found the obedience required too much for him. I took occasion to ask him how it was that he who had been accustomed to the strict discipline and rigorous obedience demanded of a soldier, could not endure the gentler rule to which he was subject as a religious man. 'In the army,' was his answer, 'you must do what you are told, but you can relieve your feelings by swearing mentally at your colonel, but you cannot do that in the Society of Jesus.'"

FREEMASONRY INCITED THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

Prof. John Robison, one of the popular instructors in the Edinburgh University more than a century ago, in his wonderful book on "Masonry a Conspiracy Against all Religions and Governments," quotes another important witness, proving that Freemasonry is responsible for the French Revolution with its deluge of blood. He says:

"I see more evidence of these important facts in another book just published by an emigrant gentleman, Mr. Latocnaye. He confirms my repeated assertions, that all the irreligious and seditious doctrines were the subjects of perpetual harangues in the Mason lodges, and that all the principles of the Revolution, by which the public mind was, as it were, set on fire, were nothing but enthusiastic amplifications of the commonplace cant of Freemasonry, and arose naturally out of it.

"He even thinks 'that this must of necessity be the case in every country where the minds of the lower classes of the state are in any way considerably fretted or irritated; it is almost impossible to avoid being drawn into this vortex, whenever a discontented mind enters into a Mason lodge. The stale story of brotherly love, which at another time would only lull the hearer asleep, now makes him prick up his ears and listen with avidity to the silly tale, and he cannot hinder fretting thoughts from continually rankling in his mind.'

"Mr. Latocnaye says expressly: 'That notwithstanding the general contempt of the public for the Duke of Orleans, his authority as Grand Master of the Masons gave him the greatest opportunity that a seditious mind could desire for helping forward the Revolution. He had ready to his hand a connected system of hidden societies protected by the state, habituated to secrecy and artifice, and already tinged with the very enthusiasm he wished to inspire. In these he formed political committees, into which only his agents were admitted. He filled the lodges with the French guards, whom he corrupted with money and hopes of preferment; and by means of the Abbe Sieyes, and other emissaries, they were harangued with all the sophistical declamation or cant of Masonry.'

"Mr. Latocnaye says that all this was peculiar to the lodges of the Grand Orient, but that there were many—not very many, if we judge by the Neuwied almanac, which reckons only 289 in all France in 1784, of which 266 were of the Grand Orient—lodges who continued on the old plan of amusing themselves with a little solemn trifling. He coincides with Mr. Lesranc in the opinion that the awful and gloomy rituals of Masonry, and particularly the severe trials of confidence and submission, must have a great tendency to harden the heart and fit a man for atrocious actions."

INTERNATIONAL ANTI-MASONIC CATHOLIC CONGRESS.

The Catholic Review, the leading organ of the Catholic church in this country, in a recent issue has this to say of the Anti-masonic Congress of Europe, held in the city of Trent in Austria, beginning Sept. 26. It is significant that this congress will be held in the church built on the site of the council chamber in which the famous "Council of Trent" was held.

The Review says: "This convention which will begin its sessions on the 26th of September is attracting the attention of Catholics and the Catholic press in every part of the world except those that represent the English speaking communities. The anti-Catholic, and especially the Masonic and the Jewish press, are sworn to ignore it, and will hardly allude to it as a matter of news, but the Protestant journals that feel that the Masonic sect are causing their churches to be deserted, especially by the men who spend their time in the lodges and their money to support the craft, are very outspoken in their denunciation of Masonry as the great enemy of religion, and warmly encourage the convention to be held at Trent. Among these is prominent the Christian Cynosure, the organ of the 'National Christian Association.' It has this to say of the convention:"

The Review then quotes what the Cynosure published recently in regard to this congress, adding that "representatives from Canada, Province of Quebec and from South America will also be in attendance."

"A number of German Catholic clergymen will attend the congress. The Bishop of Trent will preside after the congress has been formally opened by Cardinal Agliardi, who will read a letter from the Pope, in which he recalls the dangers resulting from secret societies, and declares that Freemasonry is more pernicious than ever, menacing both church and state. He expresses hope that the congress will find means to stop the progress of this malignant enemy of society." "Freemasonry," says the Review, "will not admit its real designs, which it is sworn to keep secret to be published for the benefit of the enemy whom it is preparing to destroy. Their instructions to the 'higher initiated,' tells them that:

" 'Our final aim is that of Voltaire and of the French Revolution—the complete annihilation of Catholicism and ultimately of Christianity.' The object of the coming congress is to devise means to protect the church from the attacks of 'this malignant enemy of society.'"

HOW MINISTERS DIFFER.

Some weeks ago we published a letter we received from a prominent Presbyterian pastor of Owensboro, Ky., in which he said:

"But worst of all is the thought of an association, calling itself Christian, selling the so-called standard works on secret societies, the publications of men who are liars and do not hesitate to pervert the real facts of Masonry, any more than the murderer Holmes did to confess that he murdered twenty-seven persons in order to sell his confession to the newspapers, and then said he had lied about it. I would not handle such goods for all the gain there is in the sale, for they are known to grossly misrepresent; and I can not see how a Christian man can make gain by pretending to gratify a morbid taste of the public, regarding the private affairs of a respectable class of the community."

Last week we received a letter from a prominent Methodist minister of Illinois, ordering a supply of anti-secret literature and adding these words:

"I wish I could furnish you with a thousand darts of truth with which to pierce the most dreadful monster—Freemasonry. The horribleness of the monstrosity cannot possibly be overstated. It is false and full of sin. It is all unrighteousness. I wish I could spend the balance of my days in holding up the fraud before the people, in the interest of truth and the sacred rights of the race. Continue to pour solid shot into the huge lie. Smite it with truth until it shall have no place to flaunt its lie. Think of professed ministers of the Gospel taking Masonic oaths and receiving Masonic signs on Thursday night, and then going to the church on Sabbath to administer the Lord's Supper. Give them no rest until they repent in sackcloth and ashes. May God be with you."

HISTORY REPEATS ITSELF.

George W. Clark, of Detroit, whose picture we publish on our first page, wrote us last week the following reminiscence of his experience in the anti-slavery agitation:

"It will doubtless be well remembered by your older readers that in 1844 Henry Clay was the Whig party's candidate for the Presidency. He was a slaveholder and a defender of slavery, declaring that 'three hundred years had sanctioned and sanctified Negro slaves as property, and what the law made property was property.' Northern freemen revolted at this monstrous doctrine, and organized an anti-slavery party for liberty and equal rights; and had nominated the Hon. James G. Birney, who was formerly a slaveholder in Kentucky, but had set his slaves free and removed North; first to Cincinnati, where he established an anti-slavery paper, which was thrown into the Ohio river by a mob. This noble self-sacrificing and eloquent man was the Liberty party's candidate for the Presidency against the slaveholder, Henry Clay, nominated by the Whigs.

"I was campaigning with Mr. Birney in New York, when that famous, or rather infamous, 'Roorback', the 'Garland forgery', was sent out over the country from Saginaw, Mich., where Mr. Birney then lived. This 'Roorback' stated that Birney had abandoned the liberty cause, and was going to vote for Henry Clay. Mr. Birney at once dictated to me, and I wrote the denial of the falsehood and sent it directly to the public press, and it appeared the next day just in time to save some, yes, many, from voting for Clay; enough, it was charged, to defeat Mr. Clay, and the Whigs were very indignant about it; and Horace Greely, especially, seemed never to have gotten over grieving about the defeat of his political idol nor of lashing the Abolitionists for not stultifying themselves and voting for a slaveholder against their highest and holiest convictions.

"Last week I received a letter from my son Geo. W. Clark, Jr., of Indianapolis, Ind., who was captain of the company in the 4th Michigan cavalry that captured Jeff Davis. He wrote me that our noble and venerable Neal Dow was not going to vote for Prohibition in the coming election. I immediately wrote to friend Dow, saying, I have no doubt I should soon receive as prompt and emphatic a refutation of the slander as I did of the 'Garland forgery' from Mr. Birney. Monday morning Sept. 21, I received the following:

"714 Congress, St., Portland, Maine, Sept. 18, 1896.
"Geo. W. Clark, Esq.,
"Dear Sir:—Your note just received. I have had no thought of voting any other than the Prohibition ticket. At every Presidential election the same report has been sent over the country. Respectfully yours,
"Neal Dow."

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Bro. H. Daib, of Merrill, Wis., sends for the Lodge Lamp and adds: "Keep up the good work of fighting the devil's church."

—Rev. Samuel F. Porter spent Sabbath, Sept. 13th, at Quincy, Mich. He assisted Rev. Alter of the Baptist church in the morning, and in the afternoon he preached in the country at a grove meeting.

—Rash promises are almost as bad as broken ones. Vows taken suddenly and blindfold in the lodge are rash.

—Rev. John Harper, of Smithville, Ill., called at the Cynosure office recently on his way to visit friends in Northern New York.

—Anti-masonic battles are the only ones which extraordinarily wise and judicious people think ought to be fought without any fighting.

—Rev. Wm. Fenton lectured on the secret society issue at St. Paul, Minn., in the Salvation Army Hall, Saturday evening, Sept. 26.

—General Secretary Phillips visited Green Co., Wis., last week on N. C. A. business. This week he spent several days in Northern Wisconsin.

—Rev. Wm. Fenton has spent some time recently in Minneapolis, talking up a State convention for Minnesota, and getting the views of the people regarding time and place.

—Rev. S. F. Porter expects to locate in Ohio from this time forward. In writing from Lodi he says: "I came in contact with many old friends here, and hope the dear Lord will find something for me to do for him."

—Rev. J. P. Stoddard begins this week a month's campaign in Otsego Co., N. Y., speaking first at Richfield Springs. We trust the friends in that county will work up as many meetings as possible for this experienced and talented champion of the cause.

—Bro. J. J. Jones, a druggist of Friendship, Tenn., sends a year's subscription for the Cynosure and adds: "I have been very much lost without the paper. It is one of the safest guides in these last days to give light on the hidden works of darkness."

—Rev. W. B. Stoddard is now home in Washington, but starts soon to work up the Pennsylvania State Convention. We hope all friends in that State will give this convention earnest prayer and thought, and write to Sec. W. B. Stoddard at 215 4½ street, Washington, D. C.

—Rev. E. E. Shellramer, editor of The Repairer, Atlanta, Ga., writes: "I am very glad to get the Cynosure, and you will find it noticed in our next issue. The lodge devil is not less prominent in the South than elsewhere. We are fearlessly preaching and laboring to exterminate secretism as well as all other works of darkness. We appreciate the Cynosure. God bless you."

—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold was one of our visitors last week. He closed a series of two weeks' tent meetings at Naperville recently. He is now prepared as never before to give illustrated lectures in churches in Chicago and vicinity. No more efficient missionary and reform work has ever been done in Du Page county than Bro. Arnold has done by his tent meetings during the past summer.

—The Buffalo Evening News of Sept. 2 has an editorial quoting from the Cynosure and glorying over the fact that Freemasonry is fast be coming a mighty power in American politics. History has demonstrated clearly that the influence of Masonry tends strongly toward monarchy and despotism. The drift of our government in this direction is in ratio to the growing influence of Masonry in our politics.

—Ex President John G. Fee, of Berea College, Kentucky, sends to this office for anti-secret lit erature as he has done often in the past. He says Freemasons are now making strong efforts to get a foothold in Berea. A young minister to whom he read extracts from Masonic expositions expressed great astonishment. How great is the need that friends should scatter literature exposing this modern heathenism.

—Bro. Geo. E Holden, of Montpelier, Vt., writes us that a too-constant reiteration of the evils of the lodge has a bad effect in some respects. If this is true of the lodge evil, it must be of every other; and so ministers must guard against a too-constant reiteration of the evil of sin in any form. He also says, "When Christ shall come with power, as he will at the time set for him, secret societies must disappear." If the personal coming of Christ is meant, then we remember this objection was raised forty years ago against the agitation of the slavery question. Men said the evil is on the increase and will not be destroyed till Christ's personal coming. But what a pity if the Abolitionists had ceased their agitation for this reason, and slavery had gone on all these years dominating our nation.

—For years an Italian, named Antonio, has been the president of the Antillean League, a West Indian society composed of blacks, partly a secret organization. Its sole object is black supremacy in Cuba and the West Indies. They wish a series of republics like Hayti. In 1890 Antonio Maceo was in his old home in Santiago de Cuba, when the blacks accorded him a royal welcome. At a meeting he spoke of a Cuban republic with Antonio Maceo as its first president.

—Rev. Henry Cogswell, of Sumner, Wash., is in feeble health. Bro. J. W. Wood, who now resides in the same place, writes that "Bro. Cogswell is much attached to the Cynosure and retains an affectionate interest in the old names and memories connected with it. His renunciation of the lodge was a turning point in his life and he is universally esteemed. Times are very hard here. Churches run on low planes of religious thought. Disloyalty to God's law is bearing bitter and destructive fruit. God's Sabbath is derided and Sunday has little hold on the Christian conscience.

—Rev. Wm. Fenton writes from St. Paul: One of our leading merchants has privately to me renounced Freemasonry. When asked as to his motive for joining he said, "To get on better in business and make friends." At the time that he joined he was a member of the M. E. church, "but the very man that carried my application to the lodge tried afterwards to get me out of my position." So that a man is not always sure of success by swearing his soul away to the devil. Well did the Apostle Peter say to Christ: "To whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life." John 6: 68.

—The Review of Reviews for October continues its admirable record of the Presidential campaign. In the July, August and September numbers the Republican, Democratic and Populist conventions were reviewed, together with the careers of the nominees. In the October number the movement of the "sound-money" Democrats, culminating in the Indianapolis convention, receives similar attention. No other publication in the country offers in a single number such a wealth of political portraiture, or so wide a range of cartoon illustrations. Every noteworthy phase of the canvass is fully and impartially presented. Material is gathered from every source and carefully digested.

—Bro. Thomas Whittaker, at No. 2 Bible House, New York, has just published a handsome little volume of 160 pages and sold for fifty cents, entitled, "Heaven Every Day" or "Common Sense Christianity." It is full of fresh, original and helpful things, all based upon a practical and common sense applicatian of Christ's teachings. In the chapter on "The Reunion of Christendom" the author, Theo. F. Seward, quotes Pres. Andrews of Brown University as saying that "communities are not rare in this land where competition is far sharper between the different denominations than between Christ's kingdom and Satan's. This condition is absolutely fatal to true spiritual life."

—A. S. McConnell, of Clinton, Oneida Co., N. Y., writes: "For a long time I have been thinking that it would be a very good plan to organize in the rural places a society of young men and learn them the evils of secretism, and the best manner possible to overthrow these dark institutions, and get them interested in the various reforms, and drill them to work for them. I know that if I do not accomplish this some one else will, and I do not doubt but victory will be the result some day, for I have faith in God. I witnessed a parade of 2,200 Sir Knights recently with twenty-four bands of music. They made an impression on the minds of ignorant people, no doubt, and they thought they were grand and noble-looking men. But they do not know their power for evil. The music was excellent, but they who dance must pay the fiddlers, and I know they had an enormous expense to meet. I feel alarmed when I think how many secret societies are nestled in Uncle Sam's dominions. And I know that some day the Lord will teach Uncle Sam a lesson."

THE MONEY QUESTION

LIZZIE HOLMES IS CAUGHT UP IN THE FINANCIAL STORM.

She Has a Word to Say to the Goldbug Who Declares the People Don't Understand the Subject—Then She Digs Deep Down Into Bottom Principles.

[Special Correspondence.]

Whenever a class of people begin to protest too violently against injustice, they are first accused of ignorance and next of criminality. The great financiers of the country have reached the first stage. The producers in agricultural and mining districts have been systematically bled for over 30 years, not alone as labor is always exploited, more or less, but by deliberate and well laid plans of men with capital to invest. Now that these people are becoming desperate and are determined to seek a way out of the entanglements that bind them, they are made the targets of the "wise men of the east." They are "crude," "ignorant," "fanatical," "dishonest," "unpatriotic." The burden of the gold standard missionary literature is that the western people are ignorant of how the world's business is carried on, and that their ideas, founded on such ignorance, are absolutely absurd and meaningless. T. S. Vandyke in the August Forum voices this sentiment in his "Financial Broncho," a prolonged sneer for these ridiculous people, who "will not stop to think a little further." The people's ignorance is the trouble; the heavy dry rot of "sound money" literature is the remedy. The consolation and advice offered after the summing up amount to this: "Yes, times are hard, but you must pay your debts, you know, whether or no. Don't meddle with what you do not understand. Just do your simple duty. Meet your obligations like men. Be patient, be industrious, be saving and leave the rest to us."

This to men who have paid their debts several times over, both in interest and in the multiplied hours of toil necessary to meet the fluctuating value of their debts, to men denied the opportunity of being industrious, to men who, however much they add to the aggregate of wealth in the world, cannot "save" out of their own share without depriving themselves and families of actual necessities, to men who have faced toil and poverty with greater heroism than soldiers have marched up to the cannon's mouth. Do they expect this kind of consolation will stop the agitation going on among a long suffering people? They are really not in earnest in asking people to be "saving" any more than the men whose business it is to punish crime want people to stop sinning. In either case their occupation would be gone.

Well, in the eyes of the financiers and their politicians the great fault of the deluded common people is that they do not understand the financial and commercial systems of civilization. Not only is it their great fault, but it is their only trouble, for the inference is that if they only understood how it was all done they would have to admit there was nothing at all the matter with them. True, they are conscious that commerce is stagnated, enterprising towns are lying dull and inert, wheels are silent, mines are deserted, men are idle, women and children are hollow eyed with want, and the black shadow of deeper misery looms up in the near future, that harvests are plentiful, the earth bountiful, labor's products are piled up in abundance, and the people everywhere need these things and cannot get them. They are conscious of all this, yet it is only because "they do not understand how the business of the world is carried on" that they are wretched and bitter.

True, we may not know as much of the workings of civilization's monetary system as do some of the principal manipulators of it. But we know this much about it: We do not need the cursed, incomprehensible, intricate, robbing, murderous system at all. It isn't so absolute. It is not so inevitable. It is not the only way. These great financial teachers act as though such a thought never occurred to them. They appear to think the present monetary system is all there is of civilization, that without it chaos and darkness would come and suns and worlds would whirl together in black ruin and eternal night if any other method should be inaugurated. The only possible thing to do is to understand it, then submissively accept the results, cease to squirm and struggle under it, and it will not hurt so much.

The case is similar to that in the time of Malthus. To the people in their degradation and misery he, with his wonderful discovery, practically said: "The heavenly Father did not provide a sufficiently bounteous earth for all of you. Now, if you will only understand this fact and accept it meekly, submit yourselves to the positive checks in existence, kill each other in wars, die by pestilence, starve when you can't get enough to eat, all will be well. A few can live comfortably, and as it is the will of God nobody can help it. Nobody is guilty, and all that is necessary is for you to know you must suffer and die and to do it quietly and without raising a disturbance." But the people began to doubt after awhile that this was a fixed and unalterable law of God. They have since learned that the earth, treated scientifically, is amply able to support all the inhabitants likely to depend on it for a million years yet, and that the cause of their poverty lies somewhere else. They are already beginning to doubt the all wise, miraculous, all essential nature of our present financial system. Some time they will learn that it is false, unjust, inhuman, from beginning to end. And then they will have no more of it.

For we have only to turn back to first principles to learn that naturally exchange involves no exploitations no unearned accumulations of wealth. When the fisherman bartered fish for corn, the hunter traded his game and furs for tools and weapons, and the maker of nets, arrows and axes for food, there was no robbery, none was absolutely propertyless, none undeservedly rich. The mere complexity of trade, as civilization advanced, ought not to have wrought all the mischief that has come with our modern commercial system. Had we really built upon the equitable principles of primitive barter and trade, we would not see today such monstrous social conditions as exist. We can see that the earth would have offered her treasures, man would have exerted his strength and skill and ingenuity, wealth would have been created, people would have exchanged their products, they would have lived, loved, enjoyed and learned, had there been no gold and silver, no currency based on metal, no reserve fund of precious mineral. Realizing this, we can see that the important factor in civilization is the production of things that human beings need, the next important matter being the proper and equitable distribution of them among the people. It is not money at all, as money is considered today, that we need.

Very early in the history of the race the necessity of a medium of exchange was acknowledged. But this medium was designed to facilitate exchange, and its only legitimate function is to do this. Instead, we have got something that hinders, retards, blocks up, exchange in a most monstrous fashion. Something that has made possible the absurd and inexplicable spectacle of a world full of wealth, a mass of people needing it, millions of acres and natural storehouses of treasures wanting hands to despoil them and millions of hands wanting the opportunity to get at them, and the impossible towering between! A magnificent "medium of exchange," most truly. No wonder we do not "understand" it.

One of the causes of the strange inefficiency of the world's medium of exchange is the fictitious value given it by restricting its basis to certain commodities and then making it a legal tender, to the exclusion of everything else that might naturally be used as mediums. Aside from the intrinsic value in gold and silver, it acquires a new and artificial value as money, and this fictitious value, that can administer to no human want or desire, must be paid for in hard, wearisome human toil. It is the product of labor that we all want, after all is said and done. We must acknowledge this. Why, then, do we submit to the enforced use of a monopolized, false, unscientific medium of exchange, with its inevitable, incomprehensible, complicated, "financial system," that serves so effectually and mysteriously to deprive us of them? Why not have a medium of exchange that represents labor's productions and nothing else? I do not mean that it must necessarily be based on the aggregate sum of a nation's wealth as represented by a government, but on definite, actual wealth wherever it exists—something that would balance so much human exertion as against so much other human exertion. Does it sound impractical, mysterious, crude? It is plainly the monetization of all wealth. It is simple justice. It is natural. It is scientific. It means the full, perfect liberation of labor, the elimination of that dreaded, hideous specter, poverty, from human society forever.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Oct. 4.
Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

Topic.—Why I believe in the atonement.—Heb. ix, 11-28.

The doctrine of the atonement is one of the most precious doctrines of the Bible. It is the belief that Christ died for us, that by His death on the cross, as an expiatory sacrifice, He paid the penalty of our sins, satisfied divine justice and reconciled us to God. It is an important doctrine and because of its importance we should know why we believe in it. Taking its importance into consideration, it is a matter of satisfaction that there are so many and such positive proofs that the Bible teaches this doctrine. Upon these proofs our belief in this truth is founded.

1. The atonement is prophesied and God fulfills prophecy. Only one instance of prophecy need be quoted—the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah, which undoubtedly refers to Christ's atoning death. "He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon Him and with His stripes we are healed" (verse 5). Language could not be more definite or plain. Christ's death for us is distinctly prophesied in this chapter. God fulfills prophecy, and this one was fulfilled by the death of Christ on the cross of Calvary.

2. The Old Testament sacrifices were expiatory and pointed to Christ. The names of these sacrifices prove their character. They were called sin offerings, trespass offerings—that is, offerings made by sinners on account of sin. They are said to bear the sins of offenders and to secure God's forgiveness by the shedding of blood by giving life for life. These sacrifices were the type of the sacrifice of Christ, who once offered Himself up, and if they were expiatory it necessarily follows that the sacrifice of Christ would possess the same character.

3. The New Testament declares positively that Christ's death was expiatory. In Rom. iii, 25 Paul says Christ is set as "a propitiation (an expiatory sacrifice) through faith in His blood." In Gal. i, 4 he says that Christ "gave Himself for our sins." The writer of Hebrews says that were "sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all." John says that Jesus Christ "is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the world." Peter speaks of Christ as He "who His own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree."

4. No other theory will explain the death of Christ. God would not have given Christ to pay a debt to satan, or to teach us by example to live a life of sacrifice, or to show His idea of the majesty of the law. Christ's death must have been necessary to atone for the sins of the world or He would never have died.

Bible Readings.—Isa. liii, 4-6; Zech. xiii, 1; Math. xxvi, 26-28; Rom. iii, 23-26; v, 6-8; II Cor. v, 18; Gal. i, 3-5; iii, 11-14; Titus ii, 11-14; I Pet. i, 18-21; ii, 24; iii, 18; I John ii, 1, 2; Rev. i, 5.

Individual Effort.

When John Williams, the martyr missionary of Eromanga, went to the south sea islands, he took with him a single banana tree from an English nobleman's conservatory, says The Irish Congregational Magazine. And now from that single banana tree bananas are to be found throughout the whole group of islands.

Before the negro slaves in the West Indies were emancipated a regiment of British soldiers was stationed near one of the plantations. A soldier offered to teach a slave to read on condition that he would teach a second, and that second a third, and so on.

This he faithfully carried out, though severely flogged by the master of the plantation. Being sent to another plantation, he repeated the same thing there, and when at length liberty was proclaimed throughout the island and the Bible society offered a New Testament to every negro who could read, the number taught through this slave's instrumentality was no less than 600.

Missionary Endeavorers.

We have heard from Ningpo, China, through Rev. H. E. Shoemaker, of a district in which there is no paid Christian worker, and which has been wonderfully quickened through the zeal of five or six delegates to the Christian Endeavor convention at Ningpo. Genuine Christian Endeavor conventions always make missionaries of their delegates.—Exchange.

Factory Endeavorers.

"The factory Christian Endeavor societies will soon be able to have a conference at the international conventions, the same as the seamen and travelers." Thus prophecies Miss Sara L. Oller, an earnest worker in this new and auspicious branch of Christian Endeavor. We look for the fulfillment of her prophecy.

Endeavor Notes.

The Floating Society of Christian Endeavor at Portland, Me., makes a noble six months' report. Forty new members were secured, 1,600 tracts and 2,602 papers were distributed on vessels and at the Marine hospital. Six hundred and twenty visits were made to vessels and 75 to the seamen's boarding house. Thirteen services were held at the Marine hospital. Fifty-six comfort bags were given to seamen. Seven persons asked prayer in the services.

The splendid sum of $211 was raised for missionary purposes last year by the Junior society of the Montclair (N. J.) Congregational church.

The Christian Endeavor movement in the Nutmeg State is progressing. If we are not enlarging in numbers, we are deepening in spiritual life. If we have less of enthusiasm, there is more of genuine service. Still, we are not wanting in true enthusiasm. Many of the quarterly and annual meetings are largely attended, often filling the houses, with chairs in the aisles. Connecticut has 24 unions, with about 35,000 members.

Mrs. Zerelda Wallace.

One of the greatest of America's woman orators is Mrs. Zerelda Wallace, the stepmother of General Lew Wallace and the original of one of the most beautiful characters in "Ben-Hur."

Mrs. Wallace has been a temperance worker and a woman suffragist for many years. She thus relates the circumstances of her conversion to the cause of woman's rights:

After I had been in religious reform work for a little while I took up the cause of woman suffrage. It happened this way: A number of us women went to Indianapolis to work for the retention of the Baxter local option law when the question of its repeal was up before the Indiana legislature. During the vote on the question a Dr. Thompson, an elder in the Presbyterian church and a member of the senate, rose in his place to explain his vote. He said that although personally opposed to the liquor traffic he must, as the representative of his constituency and the taxpayers, cast his ballot in favor of the repeal of the local option law.

Then I thought to myself, Who compose his constituency and the taxpayers whom he represents? I was then a widow with six little children, and I had my taxes to pay, and we all had to obey the laws. A light broke over me, and I came to the conclusion that I was a part of that constituency of which the senator spoke, and so was every other woman in the district. After the session I went up to Senator Thompson, and, shaking hands with him, thanked him for that speech and told him that his speech had made a woman suffragist of me.—New York Mail and Express.

Pockets and Buttons.

Women never look smarter than when in tailor made gowns. It is remarkable that the frocks of heavy cloth, cut in severely plain style, suit every kind of woman. If she has a good figure, the tailor made gown sets it off; if she has a bad figure, the gown improves it so that it appears good. In view of these facts it is good news to every one that the tailor made gown will be more in evidence this coming autumn and winter than for many years.

The patterns will be mostly shot goods, with some solid colors. There will be greens, browns, black and dozens of shades of gray. They will be in all kinds of combinations, and most of them will be pleasing to the eye, according to the manufacturers. As for the make of the gowns, they will be rather more ornamented than has been the case. They are to have buttons large and small and of all kinds of material and make. The buttons will be put on wherever there is room for them and will be attached for ornament as much as for utility. There will be pockets in the coats and pockets in the skirts. A determined effort will be made to supply women with receptacles for the small baggage that they always carry about with them, and that is generally clutched feverishly in the hand for lack of anywhere else to keep it. Altogether there is a prospect of much comfort as well as style in the tailor made gowns for the fall and winter. As for the prices —well, that is another story.—New York Press.

Convertible Nightgown.

The sequel to the folding bed is the convertible nightgown. Fold up the bed and you have the cheval glass. Shake out the nightgown, add a ruffle or so, and behold the negligee. And the belle who has learned the secret of perfect repose, so that the gown in question emerges unrumpled from the beauty sleep, may be as Parisian as she pleases in her hours for morning coffee and boudoir calls without change of raiment.—Exchange.

The Voting Question.

A prominent citizen of Auburndale, Mass., suggests the following considerations:

It is very frequently put forth as a conclusive argument against the voting of women that they are not capable of military duty. But there is an argument also against the voting of men which, it seems to me, is equally if not more conclusive. Let us put the two arguments one against each other and see how they appear. Thus:

Women cannot bear arms; therefore they should not vote.

Men cannot bear children; therefore they should not vote.—Boston Woman's Journal.

A lodge for female Odd Fellows has lately been started in Tasmania. This is probably the first lodge of the sort formed for women in the whole world.

Rev. F. L. Baker of San Francisco, says, "The time has come when we need to put the right of suffrage in the hands of our mothers and daughters."

The British and Foreign Antislavery society has adopted resolutions commemorative of Harriet Beecher Stowe.

FATAL DRINK HABIT.

CLOUDS HUMAN REASON AND DARKENS INTELLIGENCE.

Alcoholic Liquors Are the Most Potent Factors In the Commission of Crime—A Poisoning Power That Begets and Perpetuates Vice—Its Vile Results.

The drink problem puzzles the municipal reformer and the honest citizen in every city in the land. The saloon power is the menacing weapon in the hands of conscienceless and cunning political tricksters threatening with dire disaster the hopeful aspirations of a free and ambitious people. The destructive influence of the drink habit and the liquor traffic threatens to undermine intelligence and virtue, the strong supports that give promise of endurance to our national life. The fatal drink habit clouds human reason and darkens the light of intelligence in the soul. The saloon power places unscrupulous and conscienceless men in office, who will condone its violation of decent laws and do its bidding as a token of gratitude for precious favors received. The most practical work that can be done for the welfare of the nation is that which is carried on in the promotion of virtue and the diffusion of knowledge.

The republic cannot live if we become a nation of drunkards. Men will fail to win the golden prizes which modern civilization provides for thrift and industry if they give generous support to the liquor traffic. Excessive drinking paralyzes the national life as well as the energies of individuals.

It requires no specialist in phrenology to convince every honest man that alcoholic liquors in this country are more potent factors in the commission of crime and in conducing to a criminal career than all other dangerous or evil influences combined. The greatest criminals in the land are not the greatest drunkards. The men who make a profession of crime, and who startle and alarm the world by the boldness of their daring and their skill in their craft, are often total abstainers from intoxicants, for the use of intoxicating liquor would unfit them for successful work in their lawless calling. But let their environments be carefully investigated, let the school of their early training be closely examined, and in the vast majority of cases it will be found that intemperate parents sowed the seeds of crime in the hearts of a degenerate offspring, and, on account of their fondness for strong drink, neglected the proper culture of their children's moral character, neglected also their proper training in habits of honesty, industry and thrift, and from the slums of the city the neglected children of besotted parents are recruited for the workhouse and the penitentiary.

The more we know of the miseries and woes of suffering people in our day and country the better we understand that the drink curse is the poisoning power that begets and perpetuates the vices and misfortunes of suffering humanity.

The notion has sometimes prevailed that all the evils of intemperance are the result of the debasing influence of the saloon. The saloon, no doubt, is much to blame for the widespread extent of the evil of excessive drinking, but the saloon is not wholly to blame. The saloon exerts marvelous ingenuity in not only catering to an appetite already well developed, but also in cultivating new and insatiable appetites for intoxicants. The profits of the saloon from ministering to anything like a reasonable or legitimate demand for intoxicants would, indeed, be discouragingly small. Its greedy coffers must be filled by the contributions of those who demand drink to still the cravings of an appetite diseased and destructive, that has silenced conscience and trampled upon reason.

Habitual drinking in the home, with the usual bad example, is a sad and prolific cause of the sin of drunkenness. Many an uncontrollable appetite for strong drink has been created in the home into which intoxicants freely and frequently enter. Many heartbroken mothers have only themselves to blame for the dissipation of their wayward sons, because they did not protect them in time by sufficient safeguards against the insidious danger of drink. Some women, alas, are not wholly free from the frightful curse of this most destructive appetite. It is in the home, or in the social circle, that this fatal fondness found its first encouragement. The saloon will not entertain any scruples at enriching itself from the reckless contributions of unfortunate and degraded women. But the saloon does not make women drunkards. With all its foul sins to account for, this, at least, cannot be laid to its door.

This vilest result of drink's terrible work must be traced to the homes invaded by the evil. How important it is, therefore, that the homes of the people should be freed from this poisonous danger. Our good, noble hearted women must be the refining influence to cleanse the home and society from the foulness of habitual drinking. Woman's power for good or evil is greater than we are able to estimate.—Rev. James M. Cleary.

The Pathway to Death.

Alcohol is the greatest enemy of the human race. It is the pattern of all deceitfulness. No matter how fashionable or beautiful may be its temptation, the dread reality is always the same. It charms by stimulating the intellect, giving rest to the weary brain and nerves. It lures its victim by flattery and deceit, but allows no one to escape. No matter what the form of liquor, or the form of the invitation to drink—whether fashion, or prescription, or vice—the inebriates all go by the same route eventually, which leads to disease and death.—Banner of Gold.

Temperance Notes.

As long as there is a single saloon every man's life is in peril.

There is only one side of the saloon a church member can stand on—the outside.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON II, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, OCT. 11.

Text of the Lesson, I Kings iii, 5-15. Memory Verses, 11, 12—Golden Text, Ps. cxi, 10—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

5. "In Gibeon the Lord appeared to Solomon in a dream by night, and God said, Ask what I shall give thee." David was now dead, having reigned 40 years, 7 at Hebron and 33 at Jerusalem (I Kings ii, 10, 11). Solomon was strengthened in his kingdom, and the Lord his God was with him and magnified him exceedingly. The ark of God was in the tent which David had pitched for it at Jerusalem, but the tabernacle and altar of burnt offering, etc., were still at Gibeon (II Chron. i, 1-4). Thither Solomon and many of the people went to offer burnt offerings, token of whole hearted surrender to God to serve Him only. It was in that night that the Lord appeared to him as here recorded. Hear the Lord saying similar words to us in John xiv, 13, 14.

6. "David, my father, walked before thee in truth and in righteousness and in uprightness of heart with thee." Solomon begins his request by speaking of God's great mercy or bounty to his father. The mercies of the Lord are a good topic for every morning, for they are new every morning. His compassions fail not. Great is His faithfulness (Lam. iii, 22, 23). He is the Father of Mercies (II Cor. i, 3). Solomon speaks of his father's walk before the Lord and with the Lord. Like Abraham, he walked before God (Gen. xvii, 1), and, like Enoch, Noah and Levi, he walked with God (Gen. v, 24; vi, 9; Mal. ii, 6).

7. "I am but a little child. I know not how to go out or come in." Acknowledging his indebtedness to the Lord God of his father for his position, he confesses his helplessness and ignorance. He is but a child and knows not anything. When Jeremiah long after this was called of God to be His prophet, he also said, "Ah, Lord God, I cannot speak, for I am a child," but the Lord said to him most comforting words, which also He is saying to you and me if only we have ears to hear them (Jer. i, 6-9). His father's words, by the Spirit, concerning going out and coming in (Ps. cxi, 8), should have greatly helped him, for they have helped many.

8. "Thy servant is in the midst of thy people, which thou hast chosen." So also was the Lord in the midst of His people, for He had chosen them that He might dwell in their midst, and thus make them a people different from all other people on the earth and separated from all other people. For that reason the tabernacle was built. See Ex. xxv, 8; xxxiii, 16. The future glory of Israel shall be Jehovah in their midst forevermore (Ezek. xxxvii, 28; Zeph. iii, 17). The greatest fact in every gathering of God's people now is the presence of the Lord in their midst (Math. xviii, 20), and not the presence of this or that important person.

9. "Give, therefore, thy servant an understanding heart to judge thy people, that I may discern between good and bad." The request is worded a little differently in II Chron. i, 10, "Give me now wisdom and knowledge, that I may go out and come in before this people," but the substance of it is the same, that he may have wisdom to do right before God in the matter of the kingdom and in the midst of this people like the dust of the earth in multitude (I Kings iv, 20; II Chron. i, 9). Great comfort for each of us in the matter of wisdom is found in Jas. i, 5, 6.

10. "And the speech pleased the Lord, that Solomon had asked this thing." It is possible to please God and have the joyous consciousness of it. Our Lord Jesus said, "I do always those things that please Him" (John viii, 29), and Paul says in I Thess. ii, 4, "Not as pleasing man, but God, who trieth our hearts." The secret of it is in yielding fully to God, that He may work in us that which is well pleasing in His sight (Hab. xiii, 21).

11. "And God said unto him, Because thou hast asked this thing and hast not asked for thyself long life, neither hast asked riches for thyself." Our Lord Jesus never sought anything merely for Himself. It does me good to quote His words, "I seek not mine own will;" "I seek not mine own glory" (John v, 30; viii, 50), and to remember that "Even Christ pleased not Himself" (Rom. xv, 3). I have also been helped by Jeremiah's words to Baruch, his scribe: "Seekest thou great things for thyself? Seek them not," (Jer. xlv, 5). I believe the best and most joyous life is to let God Himself be our portion (Lam. iii, 24) and live to be a channel of blessing to others. "Be content if God thou hast; having Him, thy need is past."

12. "Behold, I have done according to thy words. Lo, I have given thee a wise and an understanding heart." Inasmuch as Israel was as the sand which is by the sea in multitude God gave Solomon wisdom and understanding as the sand that is on the seashore (I Kings iv, 20, 29), or wisdom for every case that might possibly come before him. In verses 16 to 28 of this chapter there is an illustration of this wisdom, and the people saw that the wisdom of God was in him to do judgment.

13. "And I have also given thee that which thou hast not asked, both riches and honor." Here is our Lord's "exceeding abundantly." If we are willing to live "unto Him" and "for His pleasure," there will be no need to ask anything for ourselves. "If any man serve Me, him will My Father honor," is always true. If as believers in Christ we would only accept as true our standing in Him and live to honor Him and glorify Him, we would never need to ask anything for ourselves, but would daily find the promise true. "My God shall supply all your need according to His riches in glory by Christ Jesus' (Phil. iv, 19).

14. "And if thou wilt walk in My ways, then I will lengthen thy days." Length of days upon the land given them by God was a special promise to Israel in connection with obedience (Ex. xx, 12). Again in Ps. xci, 16, we read concerning him who trusts in God, "With long life will I satisfy him and show him My salvation." The believer in Christ who has thus become a part of His body rejoices that Christ is his life, and that because Christ lives he shall live also; whether in the mortal body or absent from the body, or in an immortal body, he is willing to leave wholly to the will of God.

15. "And Solomon awoke, and, behold, it was a dream." But it was none the less a reality, for God spoke to His servants in dreams and visions of the night (Job xxxiii, 14, 15). Some think that if God would come to them in a vision or a dream they would believe more readily, and some think that if one rose from the dead they would believe, but it is written that if we believe not Moses and the prophets we would not believe even one risen from the dead (Luke xvi, 31).

QUEEN AND CZAR.

Nicholas of Russia a Visitor at Victoria's Balmoral Castle,

London, Sept. 23.—A dispatch from Ballater, Scotland, near Balmoral castle, says: "The queen's special train bearing the czar and czarina of Russia and the members of the English royal family who acompanied them arrived here at 7:05 o'clock last evening. After the formal reception by the municipal authorities the czar and czarina entered an open state carriage, and escorted by the Scots Greys drove to Balmoral. As the imperial personages started on their drive the first bonfire was lighted on the mountain peak. Arrived at the entrance of the castle grounds of Balmoral the servants of the castle and the Balleter and Crathie volunteers led the procession of carriages with flaming torches, and three other bonfires on the adjoining peaks illuminated the mountain side with a glare of light.

"Balmoral castle was reached without any incident. The queen and Princess Beatrice received their imperial guests at the door of the castle, and the warmest greetings were exchanged, the bagpipes meanwhile sounding a shrill welcome and the torches carried by the servants being thrust high in the air, accompanied by loud cheering of all the attendants. Before the Russian party disapeared within the doors the, torch-bearesr marched past them in single file."

The significance of this royal visit will not be fully known until later, but in view of the situation in the east and the relationship between Queen Victoria and Czar Nicholas, there are hopes that Russia and Great Britain may be brought into closer and more friendly relations and to act together in the Armenian question. The Birmingham Post says that at the expressed desire of the czar important communications upon the Armenian question have passed between the Marquis of Salisbury and M. de Staal, the Russian ambassador at London, in which certain points have been agreed upon to form the basis for a consultation between the czar and the Marquis of Salisbury. There is no doubt that the queen will use all her influence to the end noted in the foregoing.

Some Happy Events Expected.

London, Sept. 24.—In addition to the announcement of a domestic event expected to the dowager duchess of Marlborough, Lady William Beresford, the official announcement is made to friends of the young duchess of Marlborough that the same happy event is now certainly expected at Blenheim palace.

Doings of the Bankers' Convention.

St. Louis, Sept. 24.—The afternoon session of the Bankers' convention was rather prosy and uninteresting. There were few if any spectators, and less than two score of bankers attended. Herman Justi, of Nashville, presented a lengthy paper discussing the question as to whether banks should go on bonds. Justi took the position that they should not. It was not read, but was referred to the executive committee for publication. A dozen or more subjects regarding the practical and technical operation of banks were presented and discussed informally.

ILLINOIS MELANGE.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST TO OUR OWN PEOPLE.

Some of the Principal Happenings of the Week Reported by Telegraph and Placed for Convenience of Our Readers—Matters of Interest.

Chicago, Sept. 23.—Mrs. Julia Bradley, an aged woman of Peoria, Ills., has bestowed all her fortune, estimated at $2,200,000, upon the University of Chicago on condition that a branch school shall be built at Peoria. Mrs. Bradley has planned for the last fifteen years to give this vast sum to the university, so that an affiliated school could be arranged for at Peoria, but the fact has only just leaked out.

The advance work has been begun already, jand the course of study is almost completed. It will be submitted to Mrs. Bradley next week. Some time ago the aged woman came to the conclusion that she would like to see the school at work before she died and the incorporation papers are now being drawn. It will be named the "Bradley Polytechnic Institute," in affiliation with the University of Chicago. There will be seven directors, two at all times to be connected with the University of Chicago. In accordance with the wish of the donor special attention will be paid to technical and manual training.

GOV. ALTGELD IN DANGER.

Comes Near Being the Victim of a Runaway Horse Incident.

Danville, Ills., Sept. 26. — During a Democratic pole-raising yesterday morning Governor Altgeld had a narrow escape from a similar misfortune to that which overtook Captain Tanner at Quincy. The governor, with T. F. Donovan, of Kankakee, and Congressman Coffeen, of Woyming, was seated in a carriage. Mr. Donovan was making a speech when one of the horses became restive and began to kick. One of the traces became unfastened, and the animal, finding itself comparatively free, made a wild plunge and started to run away. Bystanders seized him after he had dragged the carriage several feet to the side of the road, and succeeded in quieting him, preventing a runaway which might have ended in a serious accident.

During the whole time the governor sat calm and unmoved as if he had no fears whatever. Great excitement previaled among the crowd, who expected a catastrophe would follow.

College Destroyed by Fire.

Fulton, Ills., Sept. 26.—Fire starting at 1:30 Saturday morning totally destroyed the Northern Illinois college, entailing a loss of $100,000. Much of the apparatus was saved. Thirty students who were in bed escaped with slight injury to one of the number. One fireman was hurt by falling walls and the whole crew were forced to fight their way out.

Indicted for Embezzlement.

Kankakee, Ills., Sept. 24.—Welton M. Durham, a Momence banker, who failed last year, has been indicted by the grand jury on the charge of embezzlement on six counts. His bail has been fixed at $3,000. Some surprise has been occasioned by the indictment, as it was believed that a friendly feeling existed between the banker and his creditors.

France Will Not Give Up Tynan.

Paris, Sept. 24.—There is good authority for the statement that, in face of the certainty that it would be refused, England has abandoned her demand upon France for the extradition of P. J. P. Tynan, the alleged "Number One" whom Scotland yard officers have charged with concocting a dynamite conspiracy.

Illinois Crop Report.

Illinois—Heavy frost throughout the northern portions of the state and light throughout central counties Sunday morning doing little damage owing to advanced stage of crops. Dryness and later rains prevented work, but the ground is in good condition for plowing and seeding which will be active this week. Early sown wheat and rye are up and doing well.

Got Judgment Against the School Board.

Princeton, Ills., Sept. 25.—Miss Mary O'Brien has been given a judgment against the school district of Spring Valley in the circuit court here for $400. Miss O'Brien had been re-engaged to teach school for another year, making her eighth year, but was peremptorily discharged after two weeks' service. The affair created a sensation, and resulted in the present law suit.

Illinois Socialists File a Petition.

Springfield, Sept. 28.—The Socialist-Labor party of Illinois has filed a petition of nominations of national candidates with the secretary of state for a place on the official ballot. This is the first time the party has filed a full list of state and national candidates in Illinois.

American Marchioness Decorated.

Havana, Sept. 28.—The queen regent has decorated the Marchioness de Apeztegui, an American, with the order of the Noble Ladies of Maria Luisa. The marchioness is well known for her many charitable works.

Serious Washouts.

Denver, Sept. 28.—The washouts on the Rio Grande and Western railroad west of Grand Junction, Col., are much more severe than was imagined possible when the news first reached the headquarters of the railway in this city. The latest reports show that the Rio Grande and Western road will have to be practically rebuilt for a distance of fifteen or twenty miles, and great hills of mud must be removed before the track in other places.

THE NEW BOYCOTT.

SCOTCH TRADESMEN UNITE IN A WAR UPON CO-OPERATION.

Refuse to Buy Goods of Manufacturers Who Sell to Co-ops and Threaten to Discharge Employees Who Support the Societies In Any Manner.

Certain questions recently put to the lord advocate in the house of commons with reference to the legality of an attempt now making by Glasgow tradesmen to boycott co-operative societies have attracted much attention in England owing to the fact that these questions gave to most Englishmen their first proof of how rapidly co-operative principles and practices have been spreading in Scotland.

In discussing this matter a writer in The Pall Mall Gazette says that the multiplication of co-operative stores has nowhere been regarded by the private trader with equanimity. Nor was it to be expected that it should. But, while the trader's hostility to the movement was only natural, that hostility has not always been openly expressed. In many quarters it was at one time deemed the wiser policy to dissemble and to affect to look upon "the store," whether co-operative or otherwise, as a competitor which the shopkeeper who knew his business would be well able to meet. More recently, however, there have been general signs of a departure from such a policy of restraint. In those places in Great Britain where the shop and the store have been brought into particularly sharp competition the private dealer, as a rule, now makes no secret of his antagonism and discontent.

In Scotland it has frequently been suggested that something more ought to be done. But what? That has always been the difficulty, for, since the modest beginning of the co-operative movement half a century ago, no organized attack upon it by the private trader has been seriously attempted. Such an attack has at length been made by a section of the Scottish traders.

This anti-co-operative movement began in Glasgow a few months ago. It was originated by a number of shopkeepers, chiefly in the grocery trade, who had convinced themselves that unless a strong stand were speedily made against the enemy their own occupation, like Othello's, would be gone. These traders formed themselves into a body called the Private Traders' Defense association and issued a manifesto to the traders of Scotland, inviting their adhesion to the association and to a certain "plan of campaign" directed against the co-operative stores.

This plan proposed that all traders should agree not to employ any person, of whatever age, "connected in the remotest degree" with co-operation, not to buy from any wholesale firm transacting business with co-operative dealers, and only to purchase from such wholesale houses and manufacturers as had "publicly advertised themselves to be nonsupporters of co-operation." The most important steps in the proposed boycott were, therefore, indirect—namely, through the manufacturers and wholesale houses, from whom both the shops and the co-operative stores obtain their supplies. The date suggested for bringing the scheme into full operation was Jan. 1 next.

That the "plan of campaign" will meet with the general adoption and success which its promoters anticipate by the proposed date is exceedingly unlikely. Its operation so far has certainly caused some stir. Merchants and manufacturers have already been told by many shopkeepers that if they wish to retain their trade they must discontinue selling goods to co-operative stores.

There can be no doubt that those wholesale firms who have assumed an independent attitude on this point have lost a few customers among the private traders here and there, but particularly in Glasgow. At present, however, the great majority of shopkeepers—doubtless for good reasons—hold aloof from the boycott. It is quite possible, therefore, that such wholesale firms might have lost still more by consenting to give up their store connection.

On the other hand, several Glasgow manufacturers of some importance, and at least one large manufacturing firm in Edinbugh, have joined the traders' defense movement. In addition to informing the co-operative societies with which they have hitherto done business that they will no longer supply them, these firms have posted notices in their works to the effect that those of their employees who are members of co-operative societies or whose parents are co-operators must either leave their service or sever their connection with co-operation.

Apart from any question of legality, however, this particular piece of tactics cannot be said to have done the cause of the private trader any good. It seems, indeed, to have acted as a splendid advertisement for co-operation in some quarters. One co-operative society in Edinburgh is reported to have increased its membership by several hundreds since the boycott began.

If, then, the anti-co-operative agitation is, for the sake of appearances, to be carried on solely through the medium of the wholesale merchants and manufacturers, it is not easy to see at this time of day how it can bear the fruit expected of it. It must be remembered that in Scotland, as in England, there is now a Co-operative Wholesale society which both imports and manufactures goods, thus making the retail stores, most of which are themselves members of the Wholesale and hold shares in it, practically independent of most private wholesale and some manufacturing firms for their supplies. The Scottish Co-operative Wholesale society (limited) has several warehouses and factories throughout the country and does a business amounting to several millions annually. It is thus in an excellent position both as regards buying and selling.

Some of Labor's Friends.

The charge is made against the Brooklyn Heights Railroad company by some of its employees who are in a position to know that the company is watching the men closely to prevent them from organizing and takes the first opportunity—and one is seldom lacking—to get rid of those who are found organizing. President Rossiter will doubtless deny that there is any truth in this charge, and, of course, ex-Governor Flower, who is just now very much worried lest the workingmen will get paid in 53 cent dollars if Bryan is elected, would not like to admit that a railroad company in which he has so much interest is denying the right of organization to its employees. Yet, in spite of anything Mr. Rossiter may say, or ex-Governor Flower either, the charge may be strictly true.—Brooklyn Citizen.

Address W. I. PHILLIPS,
221 West Madison Street, Chicago, Ill.

RICHARD RUSH: "Hooker, personifying law, eloquently exclaims, 'her seat is the bosom of God, her voice the harmony of the world; everything on earth does her homage, the highest as not beyond her control, the least as claiming her protection.' Masonry has overset this primordial system. She has dethroned this image of God upon earth. To reinstate it over so insolent a victor, we must have a political organization. There is no other way of assaulting, there is no other hope of vanquishing, there need be no other dream of humbling such a foe. It fights with desperation."

JOHN MARSHALL: "I never did utter the words ascribed to me, nor any other words importing the sentiment they convey. I never did say, 'Freemasonry is a jewel of the utmost value, that the pure in heart and life can only appreciate it fully, and that in a free government it must, it will be sustained and protected.' The fact mentioned in the resolution, that I have been in a lodge but once, so far as I can recollect, for nearly forty years, is evidence that I have no disposition to volunteer in this controversy, as the zealous partisan which this language would indicate."—Letter to Hon. John Bailey, Oct. 18, 1833.

HON. EDWARD BLAKE, Leader in Canadian Parliament, in a Debate, March, 1884: "I am not in favor of State recognition of any secret societies. I have never joined one, though many of my best friends are members of secret societies. But I believe the tendency of secrecy itself to be injurious. I believe that it brings with it the possibility of evil; I believe that it involves a certain amount of sacrifice of individuality and independence, and gives very great facilities for the misleading of members by designing leaders—very great and mischievous facilities for that purpose." "I believe that a great deal of the trouble, social and political, that has occurred in those countries [Europe and America] is due to secret societies."

GEN. HENRY SEWELL, a Companion of Washington: "I was initiated an Entered Apprentice to the Masonic rites in October, 1777, at Albany, soon after the capture of Burgoyne, being then an officer in the American army..... I was led by the influence of this 'Perfect Rule of faith and practice,' during the year 1784, to view speculative Masonry in a shape still more deformed. Its character appeared to be selfishness, because restricted to its own members; its religion, deism, because entirely devoid of the Gospel. Its history appeared fabulous; its claims to antiquity, unsustainable; its titles, fulsome; its rites, barbarous and absurd; its oaths, extra-judicial, unlawfully imposed and blindly taken; and the penal sanctions annexed, horrid and impious."

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Speech in the Senate: "Secret societies, sir? Before I would place my hand between the hands of other men, in a secret lodge, order, class or council, and bending on my knee before them, enter into combination with them for any object, personal or political, good or bad, I would pray to God that that hand and that knee might be paralyzed, and that I might become an object of pity and even the mockery of my fellow men. Swear, sir! I, a man, an American citizen, a Christian, swear to submit myself to the guidance and direction of other men, surrendering my own judgment to their judgments, and my own conscience to their keeping! No. No, sir. I know quite well the fallibility of my own judgment, and my liability to fall into error and temptation. But my life has been spent in breaking the bonds of the slavery of men. I, therefore, know too well the danger of confiding power to irresponsible hands, to make myself a willing slave."

GEORGE WASHINGTON, in Farewell Address: "The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish Government, pre-supposes the duty of every individual to obey the established Government. All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive to this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency. They serve to organize faction, to give it an artificial and extraordinary force, to put in the place of the delegated will of the nation, the will of a party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community..... However combinations and associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to become potent engines, by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men, will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of Government; destroying, afterwards, the very engines which had lifted them to unjust dominion."

HUB IN A HUBBUB.

Wind-Up of the Faction Fight Among the Democrats.

ALL EXCEPT A FEW OF ONE MIND.

Three Separate Conventions Held and Each Nominates the Same State Ticket with George Fred Williams at the Head—Gold Minority Adds Variety by Putting Up Other Men—One Life Lost by Accident in the Struggle

Boston, Sept. 28.—The "Hub" was in a hubbub Saturday, and during the day added a new page to the sensational part of the history of politics in the United States. There have been other exciting political scenes in Boston, but none that was "in it" with those of Saturday. The peculiarity of it all is that now it looks as though the scenes were entirely unnecessary, for the two Democratic conventions that can claim the delegates nominated the same ticket although meeting one in a hall and the other in the open air. The ticket nominated is as follows: For governor, George Fred Williams; lieutenant governor. J. C. Callahan; secretary of state, Joseph H. Potts; treasurer and receiver general, Thomas S. Watson; attorney general, John D. O'Donnell; auditor, Morris B. Cavanaugh.

Beginning of the Bay State Fight.

The factional fight in the ranks of the hitherto united Massachusetts Democracy can be traced back to the Chicago convention of last July, when, in the struggle between gold and silver, George Fred Williams and a few others boldly left the majority of the Massachusetts delegation and voted for the free and unlimited coinage of silver. Since that time the "rift in the lute" has gradually become wider, and the epithets of "traitors" and "would-be dictators" were bandied about freely. But the peculiarity again is that the party managers who were opposed to free silver were in a smaller minority even than they were at the Chicago convention as was demonstrated by the action of the two conventions held Saturday. In other words had the convention been held in one hall there does not seem to have been the least chance for the gold men to have headed off anything the silver men desired.

George Fred's Men Held the Fort.

When the sun rose Saturdday there were 600 accredited delegates to the state convention in the Music hall where Williams had made such a dramatic speech Friday night, and there they stayed with the doors locked. Early Saturday thousands of men, scores of whom were delegates from out of town, assembled around Music hall, expecting the doors to be opened at any moment that a compromise might ensue. Overtures were made by the members of the state central committee, and they were rejected by the men in possession of the hall, who were fearful of treachery. The men on the outside then organized in Hamilton place, in response to the suggestion of Timothy W. Coakley, the locked-in leader of the silver men, and whatever business was transcated in the hall was indorsed by the outside meeting.

And the State Committee Also.

Even the state committee was silver, it seems; for after trying in vain to get into Music hall that body went to Faneuil hall, where a convention was held, and the national candidates and the Chicago platform were indorsed, and George Fred Williams was nominated for gubernatorial honors. This action was protested by a number of gold standard Democrats, who withdrew in a body, and placed a ticket favorable to Palmer and Buckner in the field, on nomination papers. The ticket, as filed by the National Democratic state committee of Massachusetts, includes presidential electors and state officers, the latter headed by George O. Prince for governor. The Populist state convention met at Wesleyan hall and indorsed the Music hall nominees.

One Man Loses His Life.

Friday night's proceedings at Music hall were not without a tragic feature. James Hughes, a delegate from Somerville, lost his life in an effort to get out of the hall by a fire escape in the rear. Hughes was preparing to jump to the ground, fifteen feet below, when his foot slipped, and, in trying to save himself, he seized a wire dangling near. The wire was a live one, and with an agonized cry Hughes fell senseless on the fire escape, and then tumbled to the ground, where he died before any one could reach him.

THACHER IS OUT OF THE RACE.

Cannot Run on a Platform Declaring for Free Silver.

Albany, Sept. 28.—The Democrats of this state are without a head to their state ticket, John Boyd Thacher declining to run on the platform adopted by the Buffalo convention. As in his statement issued a week ago, he took time by the forelock and didn't wait for the notification committee which was to have visited him Saturday, but came out in a letter in advance of the committee's visit declining the nomination. He says he was away from Albany at the time of his nomination and it was not until the night of the convention day that he learned the character of the platform upon which he was nominated.

He declares he had no reason to expect, after the Saratoga convention's declaration and the attitude of the New York delegates at the Chicago convention, that the Buffalo gathering would commit the party to free silver; that his object in permitting the use of his name was to contend against "bossism" in state politics, and to further municipal reforms, and that he believed the people would be with him on that issue. He adds: "It is impossible for me, with the views I hold, to make a contest on the coinage issue.. I believe in the good old Democratic doctrine of the joint, free and equal use of gold and silver. This doctrine is as far removed from the single use of gold, which enables speculators to juggle with its value, as it is from that other principle which seeks to establish an impossible ratio for its sister metal."

STRIKERS AT LEADVILLE FIRE ON THE PICKETS.

Buckshot Riddles the Timberwork of the Mine and the Bullets Whistle Uncomfortably Close to the Soldiers, Who Return the Fire and Charge Into the Brush

Leadville, Colo., Sept. 28.—Renewed rioting occurred here last night. The entire city was up and in arms. At 10 o'clock the military guard at the Bon Air mine, on Carbonate hill, was attacked. The pickets were driven in behind the stockades by a fusillade of lead fired from one of the dark recesses of the mountain. Buckshot riddled the timberwork of the mine and whistled close to the ears of the militiamen. The fire was returned, the heavy ring of the Springfield rifle sounded on the air, and in a few moments all Leadville was awake. Lieutenant Verdeckberg telephoned General Brooks that the guard had been driven in, and a few moments later the troops were turned out and started to the Bon Air on double time.

Infantry Makes a Bayanet Charge.

The shots from the Bon Air sounded like a hail. Lights flashed in all the windows of the town, and within half an hour the streets were filled with men, armed and ready to go to the mine, which is some little distance away. The exchange of shots was lively and lasted fully fifteen minutes. The attacking party was located in one spot, while the fire of the military was scattering and from different points along the guard line. A squad of infantry with fixed bayonets charged into the brush, but the assailants retreated rapidly before them and were soon silenced.

Occurred at an Inopportune Time.

This attack occurred at a time when the union was consulting for peace, and will have the effect of causing renewed enlistments to the ranks of the militia today. No one was injured among the troops. It is not known whether any of the rioters were killed or injured. It will be impossible to tell until later. Indignation prevails and it is the general opinion that this attack will bring forth a declaration of martial law.

Objective Point Was the Waterworks.

There have been rumors for the past few days that there would be renewed trouble. but this was scoffed at by the militiary. It is generally believed that the men who made the assault of last night were on their way to the waterworks for the purpose of tampering with the water supply of the city, and were discovered, when they opened fire on the guards. It is believed that the outbreak was caused by the arrival of workmen from the lead minese of Missouri Saturday, when twelve companies of military were necessary to conduct the men through the town.

Fireman and Rioter Buried.

The funeral of Jerry O'Keefe, the fireman murdered last Monday while turning a hose on the fire at the Coronado mine, occurred yesterday. It was the largest funeral procession ever seen here. The funeral of William Higgins, who was literally filled with buckshot while engaged in the attack on the Coronado, was from the same church and immediately following that of O'Keefe. Almost the entire miners' union, including fully 1,500 people, followed the remains to the cemetery.

Firemen Adopt a Resolve About Debs.

Galveston, Sept. 24.—The Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen has selected Toronto for the next biennial convention. To make its position clear on the Debs matter the convention adopted the following resolution: "That this convention does not indorse any alleged irregularities which the experts report have been brought to light, which occurred during Mr. Debs' administration and were, perhaps, the alleged irregularities of his assistants; that we earnestly condemn any acts that Mr. Debs has made as an officer of the American Railway Union against the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen."

Found $6,000 in Gold.

Port Arthur, Ont., Sept. 28.—A terrible bush fire is raging in the vicinity of Fort William. The flames have entered the town. Brown's terrace on Archibald street has been burned and the Roman Catholic church has been several times on fire. The residents are moving their goods. The wind is blowing a gale and unless it subsides it will be impossible to save the town and the immense grain elevators of the Canadian Pacific railway. The steam fire engine has been dispatched from this town.

VETERANS GATHER AT ROCKFORD.

Society of the Army of the Cumberland Holding Its Annual Reunion.

Rockford, Ills., Sept. 24.—Several hundred distinguished veterans arrived here yesterday to attend the twenty-sixth annual reunion of the Society of the Army of the Cumberland, which continues today. Much of the first day was given over to the reception of visitors and to regimental reunions. A business session was held in the morning, at which letters of regret were read from many prominent members of the society, detained by campaign work, ill-health, etc. Numerous reports were presented, including a lengthy one by General H. V. Boynton on the work of the Chickamauga park commission. Grand Rapids, Columbus and Chattanooga have delegations here working for the location of next reunion. In the afternoon the visitors were given a drive over the city. Last evening a big reunion was held at the opera house, at which General David S. Stanley, of Washington, made the principal oration.

Rockford, Ills., Sept. 25.—The final business session of the Army of the Cumberland was held yesterday, and the following officers were elected: President, W. S. Rosecrans; corresponding secretary, H. A. Boyden, Columbus, O., was selected as the place for next meeting. A telegram was received from General Rosecrans, sending a warm greeting to his old comrades. The session adjourned to next year after selecting Major General H. Wilson, of Delaware, captain of the cavalry which captured Jeff Davis, orator for the next year. Judge Arba N. Waterman, of Chicago, was chosen as alternate.

Suicide of a Chicago Merchant.

Chicago, Sept 23.—Edson Keith, brother of Elbridge G. Keith, president of the Metropolitan National bank, prominent in Chicago for forty-two years as a merchant, manufacturer, importer and influential citizen, is dead and by his own act. That the merchant hurled himself into the lake from the pier at the foot of Thirteenth street early Monday morning, while his mind was temporarily deranged as the result of long suffering from dyspepsia and insomnia, there is no doubt. The lake is being dragged for his body.

Chicago, Sept. 24.—The body of Edson Keith, who threw himself into the lake Monday morning, was recovered from the lake at the foot of Sixteenth street at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The remains were taken to Jordan's undertaking establishment, where an inqust was held. The body had drifted south three square from where the suicide took the plunge.

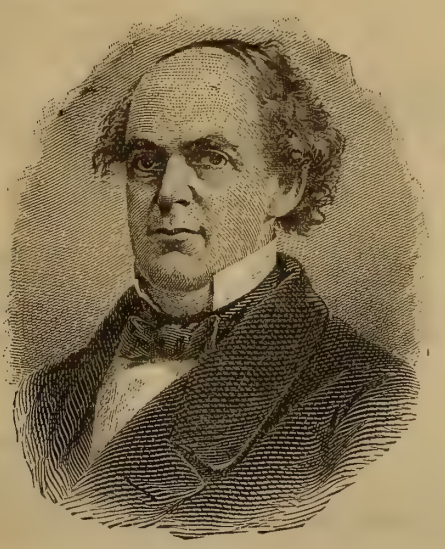
The church is the visible body of Christ upon earth. Its form and organism are as essential to its life as is our physical organism to its life. Christianity without a church is not of Christ.

Iowa readers, what are you doing to make your State convention at New Sharon a success? Pastors, announce it from your pulpits and pray for it, and urge the sending of a delegation. Let every Iowa reader talk it up and pray for it, and write to the State President, Rev. T. P. Robb, at Linton, Ia. Do not forget the time, November 18 and 19.

The agitation against the Sultan in Great Britain has reached a high pitch. The language is heavily taxed for terms in which to express the feeling against him. He is called "the great assassin," "fiend incarnate," "murderer incarnate," "Abdul the bloody," "Satan's vicegerent," etc. But the Sultan has forbidden the circulation of any foreign newspaper mentioning Mr. Gladstone's speech, and the latest report is that the Turks are planning for an Armenian massacre that will eclipse any heretofore.

The Cynosure extends congratulation to Rev. J. W. Fifield, pastor of the Warren Ave. Congregational church, this city, on the occasion last Sabbath of the re-dedication of his church. Its growth since the coming of the new pastor has been upwards of 180, necessitating the enlargment of the old edifice by taking out the south wall and adding a space of about 30 by 75 feet. The Inter Ocean of last Monday gave excellent cuts of the new building and of the pastor who preached in the morning. At 3 o'clock, at a fellowship service, addresses were given by Prof. S. J. Curtis, D. D., Rev. D. F. Fox, D. D., Dr. E. P. Goodwin and Dr. J. B. Silcox. In the evening the sermon was preached by Prof. W. Douglas McKenzie, D. D., of Scotland.



SALMON P. CHASE.

Lincoln, Chase, Seward, Stevens, Stanton, Sumner and Adams were American statesmen opposed to the secret lodge. It was our greatest national blessing that they were brought to the front to hold the reins of government in the crucial years of our Civil War. If they had been lodge men, there is every reason to believe the Southern confederacy would have triumphed. Our army did not make headway in putting down the rebellion until it was officered by such Anti-masonic generals as Grant, Sherman, Sheridan and Howard.

Salmon Portland Chase was a New Hampshire farmer boy, a student dependent on friends, a graduate of Dartmouth, a law student of Wm. Wirt, United States Senator from Ohio, was twice governor of that State, and during the war was a member of Lincoln's cabinet as Secretary of the Treasury, and Chief Justice of the United States. His father had been a Mason, but Salmon shunned and resisted every temptation to join the lodge. He was a life-long enemy of slavery. His sister was mobbed and her house sacked for holding anti-slavery meetings, and Mr. Chase prosecuted the mob. He defended Hon. James G. Birney for harboring slaves. He was radical on prohibition, and while councilman of Cincinnati refused to vote to license saloons. He died of paralysis in 1873, in the sixty-fifth year of his age.

According to the Daily News, Chicago had last year 378 known cases of suicide, and says, "there were over 100 more doubtful cases, the majority of which we know were suicides." Men and women daily prefer death to want and despair. The case recently of Edson Keith turning his back at early dawn upon his palatial home on Michigan Ave., and upon his family and admiring friends, and going to the lake, over whose blue waters he had often looked with delight, he plunged into their cold depths. Oh! what a commentary on the need poor, despairing humanity has of Him who said, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest."

Mr. Gladstone said many years ago, "The nineteenth century is the century of the working classes," and in point of fact the question of the working classes pre-eminently occupies the attention of politicians and statesmen to-day. And society will never know peace until it is settled upon the rock where Christ put it, "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them."

The New York Advocate in comparing the world's four great evangelists, Wesley, Whitefield, Finney and Moody, says of Mr. Finney: "He was a lawyer, and without exception the most extraordinary evangelist America has produced, who, applying the hair-splitting, point-making methods of a lawyer convincing a jury of different degrees of intelligence, added thereto an awful solemnity, earnestness, power of denunciation and condensation which made men feel that every time they stepped they trod on chords that would vibrate to all eternity. By a sentence he could produce a deeper sense of the reality of the day of judgment than most great orators could create in a dramatic appeal of half an hour in length."

The California Voice has a strong editorial, the substance of which is that God will not and cannot bless the church with a sweeping revival of religion because of its complicity with the saloon. There are about 4,500,000 church voters in the United States, but only about 150,000 of them have ever voted against the saloon when they have had the opportunity of doing so. For its complicity with American slavery, God sent a civil war that carried sorrow and mourning to a million homes. During two bloody years of battles and until the very hour when emancipation was proclaimed the tide of battle was against our armies. So until this nation proclaims the prohibition of the liquor traffic, which is a far greater crime in the eyes of God than slavery, we cannot expect a sweeping revival in the churches.

In 1869 Europe had 6,958,000 armed soldiers; now it has standing armies numbering 22,248,000. The great powers will not disarm so that war is the only alternative. They feel that the consequences of war would be so frightful that each are afraid to take the initiative. The Sultan knows this and is emboldened to go on with his butcheries of the Armenians. England is aroused and would be glad to put an end to the Turkish empire but the continental powers will not permit her to interfere alone. The Czar made a visit last week to England, and it is hoped that he may be induced to act in concert with the other powers and demand that Turkish atrocities shall cease. And if Queen Victoria can infuse some of her earnest convictions into the mind of her granddaughter, the wife of the Czar, it is probable that Russia will be induced to join England in behalf of the persecuted Armenians.

THE VOICE OF BLOOD.

[Written by Jonathan Blanchard on the murder of Elijah P. Lovejoy by a pro-slavery mob at Alton, Ill., Nov. 7, 1837.]

I'm the Voice of Blood! and I wail along
As the wind sweeps sullenly by,
All choked and still is its wonted song
As soft, or solemn, or brisk, or strong,
It sung to the answering sky;
One breath, one shuddering breath—a moan
Like the flap of a pall on a coffin of stone,
Or a dead man's last, long sigh.

It comes to thee, Alton, by day or by night
Where freedom's champion stood;
And the child, when he hears it, shall cry for light,
Tho' the sun is high and the day is bright.
And the mother in frantic mood
Shall shriek, as it mutters the cradle near,
In a whisper so loud that the dead might hear,
"I am blood! The voice of blood!"

Wake! wake, Illinois! for through prairie and glen
There is blood; there's the voice of blood;
It bids thee arouse, or the rust on their chain
Shall scar the fair necks of your daughters—a stain
Bleached alone by your heart's hot flood;
Your sons low in manacles crouch at your feet,
Where the prarie-fowl starts as the young lambkins bleat,
In the fields where your free dwellings stood.

Rouse! rouse thee! or purchase for freedom a shroud,
And bury your hopes in her grave;
Then hushed be the glees of your laborers proud,
As driven with the mule and the ass, in a crowd
They slink to the task of a slave;
With a curse on their lip and a scowl in their eye,
As they mope by your tombstones and tauntingly cry,
"Ho! here go the sons of the brave!"

BENEVOLENCE OF SECRET SOCIETIES.

AN ADDRESS BEFORE THE OREGON STATE CONVENTION AT PORTLAND, AUG. 27TH, BY REV. T. THOMAS.

I am to speak on the bevevolence or selfishness of secret societies. Benevolence, as taught by our Saviour in the parable of the Good Samaritan, is to love the Lord and our neighbor as ourselves. To love all in an equal degree is indeed impossible, because though some have larger hearts than others, the affections, like our other powers, act within certain limits. Our understanding is confined within bounds that it cannot pass; many subjects lie beyond its reach. Our eyes have a limited range of vision; we see the stars, not those who inhabit them. Our ears have a still more limited range of hearing. We see the flash of lightning when too distant on the horizon or in the upper regions of air for us to hear the thunder; no sound reaches us.

On the other hand, God embraces all creatures; those which are farthest removed from him as well as the lofty archangels that stand nearest his throne. His heart has room enough to hold them all. Infinite, not less than eternal and unchangeable, unaffected by space or place, knowing neither distance nor nearness, he embraces this world with all its creatures, and all other worlds with theirs in his heart, as he embraces them all in his arms. But, though we were originally made after his image, our affections are of limited capacity. They diminish in strength in proportion as the objects we love are removed from us—as the circle in the lake, the larger it grows in size, grows the less in height, till it is lost in the distant waters or dies with a feeble ripple on the shore. It cannot be otherwise, else we were gods, not men.

We must admit this; and that, as a candle, shining brighter on near than remote objects, gives more light to the room where it burns than to the traveler who sees it gleaming afar in the cottage window, our benevolence necessarily grows weaker the more it is diffused. Still like light, or the circle in the water, it ought, not moving in one direction rather than in another, nor limited in its outgoings to our own party, or sect, or race, or country, to diffuse itself on all around. Such is the grand and most necessary lesson which the parable of the Good Samaritan was designed to teach.

"Go and do thou likewise;" this is the moral of the story. It was told to rebuke the narrow-minded prejudices and selfishness of the Jews. May it rebuke our own. Our love is confined within narrow channels because it is a tiny stream. Let it swell into a bigger volume and these could not contain it; and therefore may God, pouring out his Spirit in showers from heaven, so flood our hearts with benevolence that it shall burst the boundaries within which education, ecclesiastical or national prejudices confine it, and drowning them, flow forth to all mankind. By this story Jesus teaches us to do good to all men as we have opportunity, and to rejoice in the opportunities of doing it. If any man's sorrows need our sympathy, his bodily or spiritual wants our help, let us think no more of asking whether he belongs to our country or family, our party or church, than if we saw him stretching out his hands from the window of a burning house or found him, like this object of the Samaritan's kindness, expiring in a pool of blood.

The teaching of Christ in this parable condemns all secret societies in their claims to benevolence. Suppose some poor virtuous widow, whose husband did not belong to any secret society, was to present herself with her fatherless children as an object of charity, and with tears beg for assistance, would they be bound by their obligation to listen to her entreaties and grant her petition? No, there is nothing in their rituals that compels them to help any body but their own members. And yet they claim to be charitable institutions, and sail under the banner of universal benevolence.

And there are many who, on reading the high pretensions of the lodges, and not understanding the principles of their organizations, really believe that these things are so, that they are charitable and benevolent to all mankind, but by the false colors which they hold out they are deceived. There are a numerous class of sufferers—widows and orphans, real objects of charity—scattered over the land to whom they are under no obligatiod to extend the helping hand. They leave them to starve or die because they are not members of their society. I do not say that as individuals they would not aid them from their own private resources; this, perhaps, many of them would do as cheerfully as any others; but, I say, as members they are not under obligation by their lodges to respond to their calls.

Now look at secret societies contrasted with Christianity. When money is needed to assuage the world's grief, to relieve the world's distress, men go straight to the church to beg. And it is a fact that almost all the alms of the world are administered by the church; almost all the charitable institutions are dependent for their moral and pecuniary support, and almost all the benevolent movements of society are dependent for their success on them that belong to the church.

Just think of all the benevolent institutions and where the money comes from that supports them; mainly from the pockets and the hearts of those who attend church. If money is needed for those who are famine stricken or Armenian sufferers, or for missionary enterprise or church extension, or for the distribution of Bibles, where does it come from? Not from the secret societies, but from the church.

I am pained and very often surprised to hear some minister extol the lodges above the church for their benevolence, as though they intended to supersede the church. I tell you, when there is no church you had better get your shroud ready and your grave dug. Do not think the world can do without a church. As long as there are heathen to preach to, and lame to help, and blind to lead, and the hungry to be fed, and the poor to have the Gospel preached to, there will be need of a church. The church is found not so much in the power as in the needs of the race.

Lazarus died at the rich man's gate, but the lame man was healed at the temple gate. Members of secret societies have no more right to call their lodges benevolent institutions than insurance companies and such like. The primary object of a secret society is to help their own members. If two men with their families are in the same suffering circumstances, one belongs to a lodge and the other does not, if both apply for help according to their ritual, the one that belongs to their society is helped, and they are under no obligation to help the other. What is it that makes them discriminate between the two? One is a member of their society; the other is not.

To help their members in time of necessity is not charity; it is the fulfilling of a contract. This is no more like benevolence than is the fulfilling of any other contract or the paying of an honest debt. Charity was beautifully illustrated by the pagan legend.

Once upon a time, says the legend, a dispute arose between three young ladies as to which had the most beautiful hand. One sat by a crystal stream and dipped her snowy hand into the water and held it up. Another plucked strawberries till the ends of her tapering fingers were pink. Another gathered violets till her hands were fragrant. Thereupon an aged woman passed by, hungry, emaciate, decrepit. "Who will give me a gift?" said she, "for I am poor." All the three young ladies denied her request; but a poor peasant girl who stood near, unwashed in the stream, unstained by the pink of strawberries, unadorned with flowers, gave her a simple gift and cheered the aged pilgrim. Then turning back she asked the young ladies, with voice musical and sweet, what they were disputing about, and they told her and lifted up their beautiful hands for her to decide. "Beautiful, indeed," exclamed she, with radiant countenance. "But which is the most beautiful?" asked they. "It is not the hand that is washed in the purling brook," said she; "it is not the hand that is tipped with delicate pink; it is not the hand that is garlanded with fragrant flowers; it is the hand which gave a gift to the destitute that is most beautiful."

And as she spoke her body was slowly transfigured, her wrinkles gradually vanished, her staff suddenly dropped, and there flew up to heaven in a blaze of glory the radiant form of an angel of God. We know not the angels we pass by in contempt in the streets. Let us do good to all men as we have opportunity.

GOD IN THE HEAVENS.

BY C. A. S. TEMPLE.

"The heavens declare the glory of God."—Psa. 19:1.

Whoever attempts to call special attention to the greatness and glory of God is sure to refer, first of all, to the heavens, which, more than all else of his material creation, reveal him as he is. If what we can see of the heavens, whether with our naked eyes or with artificial help that tells us so much of the extent of his greatness and glory, how much more were we able to comprehend the infinitude of his works.

The countless number and variety of the fixed stars, the endless diversity and arrangement of their constellations, and their incalculable distances from each other and from us, all call the attention of the whole intelligent universe to the infinite wisdom, skill and power of their Creator, as also to the illimitable extent and glory of his dominion.

Then, too, at other times, the calm, placid face of the moon, walking in brightness, gives still further illustration of the greatness and glory, as also of the benevolence and love of Him whose hand hath made all these things, and for whose pleasure they are and were created.

Who has not, on some bright, starlight night, looked upward toward heaven, and gazed upon the sparkling, glorious galaxy which studs and adorns the firmament on high, and which infinite wisdom and benevolence has stretched out as a curtain and spread out as a tent to dwell in? At such a time how we gaze, and wonder, and adore! Though there is no speech nor language, though their voice is not heard, yet, to our inner consciousness a still, small voice comes from Him who sitteth in the heavens, "Lo, all these things hath my hand made." Thus, "day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge."

A SECRET PLOT DISCOVERED.

BY REV. JOHN BROWN, A. M.

"Then the chief captain took him by the hand (Paul's nephew) and went with him aside privately and asked him, what is that thou hast to tell me? And he said, the Jews have agreed to desire thee that thou wouldst bring Paul down tomorrow into the council, as though thou would enquire of him somewhat more particularly. But do not thou yield unto them, for there lie in wait for him more than forty men, which have bound themselves with an oath that they will neither eat nor drink till they have killed him; and now are they ready, looking for a promise from thee." Acts 23: 12-22.

What wonderful scheming. Were they Freemasons? or did they belong to any other secret orders? They might well have laughed in each other's faces at the clever trick they were about to play. Did "the great curse" or "oath" under which they had "bound themselves" oblige them to kill Paul or to keep the secret? The very statement of the question forms a sufficient answer. By what means Paul's nephew discovered the plot we do not know; but he had the moral courage to reveal the secret, and thus to save his uncle's life; and Luke faithfully records the transaction for the public benefit of all ages. "Oh, my soul, come not thou into their secret; unto their assembly, mine honor, be not thou united." Gen. 42: 6. There is a day coming when God will "bring to light the hidden things of darkness" in the councils of secret societies, and in the councils of churches, too.

We have seen a church covenant in which the members promise not to reveal the secrets of the church. Doubtless things occur in churches which ought not to be told outside, but one ought not to give a pledge of secrecy till he knows what the secret is. By so doing, a man's character may be murdered in a particular church, and if he appeal to a third party, he may be charged with the additional of violating his pledge —with breach of covenant. We have known this to be the case. The independent form of church government has its advantages, but it is liable to great abuse. A crafty man may succeed in excommunicating a member or deposing a minister, and there is no appeal. Jonathan Edwards experienced all its inconveniences.

SHOULD GOVERNMENT OWN AND MANAGE RAILROADS?

BY PROF. E. WHIPPLE.

Railroads are indispensable at the present stage of civilization. They equalize prices, tend to prevent famines, have made possible a great extension of the advantages of division of labor and representative republican government, cheapen and quicken transportation enormously, and stimulate the progress of civilization inconceivably.

Railroads have come to stay, until something better can be devised. Meantime they are attended by evils so great and so widespread as to be almost unendurable. For example:

1. Great corporations, in order to secure their own ends, which may be for public good, but more likely are not, corrupt officials, courts, legislatures, and sometimes enough of the people to control the elections.

2. They become the tools of trusts and other combinations in their too often successful attempts to build up monopolies in certain lines of business, killing off competition by secret rebates, discriminative rates, refusal to provide prompt and impartial transportation, etc.

3. They discriminate arbitrarily between localities, "setting up whom they will and pulling down whom they will;" sometimes on account of supposed exigencies of the business of the railroad itself; sometimes for ulterior and less justifiable purposes.

4. Railroad managers claim, and doubtless oftentimes rightly, that their injurious and unjust practices are forced upon them by conditions over which they have no control.

5. Railroad directors, often having little interest in the property itself, make contracts with construction companies, repair shops, express companies, transportation companies, terminal companies, etc., in which they have an interest, greatly to the detriment of the owners of the railroads and of the public.

5. Promoters build roads that are not needed, for the profit of construction, leaving the deluded stockholders and bondholders hopelessly involved.

6. Manipulation of stocks, undue capitalization, railroad wrecking, etc., with their attendant pernicious influences on legitimate business and the morals of business men.

7. Immense fortunes acquired by above methods by persons who have not performed any useful service for the community.

Some of above evils have been partially mitigated by government supervision and restriction exercised through railroad committees, railroad commissioners, inter-state commerce commission, etc.; but mainly the current of evil flows on unchecked, gathering strength and velocity with the passing years. The experience of various forms of government in various countries and under various conditions is much the same, so that it seems improbable that any system of mere control which leaves the ownership and management in the hands of individuals or corporations can cope with the chief difficulties that have manifested themselves in connection with railroads.

J. D. Hudson's proposition to regard railroads as public highways, over which anybody may haul trains on payment of suitable tolls and under suitable restrictions, though elaborated with considerable ingenuity does not seem very practicable when we consider the complexity of the business, the necessity of gathering up packages of freight from a multitude of stations and delivering the same at varied destinations, the questions of right of way of trains moving in same direction at varying rates of speed, etc.

Were such a plan adopted, the manifest advantages of a central management make it almost certain that a few well-organized transportation companies would soon possess the field, as, in somewhat similar conditions, a few express companies have divided the express business of the country and practically eliminated competition. Some of the evils of the situation could be obviated by allowing the railroad companies to combine in legalized pools under the control of some agency of the government like our Inter-state Commerce Commission.

Rate wars, and the more objectionable forms of discrimination, might be lessened, but would not the tendency be to increase prices for transportation? If such a system had been in vogue during the last twenty-five years, should we be enjoying anything like the low rates now customary? The fact that in the midst of universal distress and business depression the railroads of the United States earn four and one-half per cent on their nominal capitalization, which includes from thirty to fifty per cent of water, seems to prove that they are no more entitled to be exempt from the results of competition than many other kinds of business which cannot in such times earn so large a per cent on the capital invested.

Furthermore, if we are to abandon the attempt to allow competition to regulate prices of transportation, would it not be better to transfer the whole business to the management of responsible governmental agencies? Let us therefore consider the reasons for and against government ownership and management of railroads. In its favor are the following considerations among many others:

1. We would secure one comprehensive, consistent, impartial system for the whole country, so that every business man would know just what to depend upon both as to rates on his own goods and those granted to his competitors. The results attained in the postoffice department are believed to justify every word of the above statement.

2. It would abolish rate wars, all unnecessary discriminations, and the friction and waste arising from the rivalry of competing roads. It is estimated that the total of useless expenditures by railroads in the United States on account of competition, including advertising, agents to drum up business, rebates, etc., amounts to not less than $160,000,000 per year. Some of this goes back to some of the people, but is not distributed in any impartial manner; and, where it is used to build up one man's business by giving him an undue advantage over a competitor, it works a positive injustice. Under government management this whole amount could be applied to reduce rates or improve facilities as might be thought best. As the total earnings of all the roads are about $1,000,000,000, this means that rates might be reduced about sixteen and two-thirds per cent, which would be an important saving to the people of the country.

3. Except at certain points which have the advantage of competing lines by land or water, the relation of railroads to their customers is practically that of monopolists, whether they are allowed to pool or not; and they have not been slow to recognize this fact and adopt the principle of "charging what the traffic will bear." The full meaning of this has been sadly realized by many a man who has invested his all to develop a business, only to find that the railroad upon which he must depend for the transportation of his supplies or his products was coolly taking about all the profits, leaving him barely enough to pay his operating expenses and keep the business running.

So far, the attempt to remedy this state of things by having a government commission fix the rates has not been very successful, and there is little reason to expect better success in the future. It can hardly be conceived that the government, if managing the railroads, would attempt to do otherwise than charge fair and impartial rates to all its customers, as nearly as it could determine what such rates should be.

4. Government management would prevent future duplication of unnecessary parallel lines.

5. It would do away with gambling in railroad stocks, railroad wrecking, the acquisition of great fortunes for which no equivalent service has been rendered, and the whole corrupt brood of evils mentioned under No. 5 of "evils".

6. It would prevent railroad strikes, with the attendant destruction of property, interruption of traffic, etc.

7. The following countries have adopted government management in whole or in part, and there is no report of any country which has adopted the plan within the past twenty-five years and returned to the method of private ownership, but everywhere it seems to work more satisfactorily than any other method, and is consequently being rapidly extended: India, South Africa, Australia, New Zealand, Prussia, Bavaria, Belgium, Austro-Hungary, Denmark, Sweden, Holland, Chili, etc.

In another article I will write of some objections to government management of railroads.

A WONDERFUL DELIVERANCE.

Right forever on the scaffold;
Wrong forever on the throne;
Yet that scaffold sways the future,
For behind the dim unknown
Standeth God between the shadows,
Keeping watch above his own.

The United States troops had barely started in search of Lane and Whipple on Sept. 14th, when messengers from Lawrence arrived at Lecompton and informed Gov. Geary that a large armed force had suddenly appeared a few miles from Lawrence, and were marching toward the town in a warlike attitude, evidently intent upon an attack.

Geary ordered Secretary Woodson and Adjutant General Strickler to repair at once to the camp of the invaders and disband them. This was a bitter dose for Woodson, and Geary suspecting so, and fearing his orders would not be promptly carried out, sent his confidential agent, Theodore Adams, along. Meanwhile, the Lawrence people not getting any tidings from Geary, who had sent direct to the camp, concluded they were left to their own resources.

Old John Brown, who always tried to be where there was any fighting to be done, advised them to send out a few companies and take up a position on an advantageous eminence that lay along the route of the enemy and harass them. About five o'clock Sabbath evening, Sept. 14th, the Stubb's company of forty men, and another under Brown, took their position a few miles south of town, and as the advance were pushing ahead they opened fire on them. A running fire was continued till a Missourian was killed, when they returned to the main force.

A week before, Lane and Harvey had been in Lawrence with several hundred men, and could have mustered a thousand then, on short notice, and would have gladly welcomed the Missouri army. But now, as a part of the Pro-slavery plan, the town was found comparatively defenseless and apparently doomed to destruction. It was designed to render the town in this condition before the new governor entered upon the duties of his office, and destroy it; devastate the Free State settlements and escape back to Missouri satiated with blood and plunder. Geary, having forebodings of evil, did not wait to hear from his confidential agent, but took Col. Cooke and all the United States troops left at Lecompton, and followed; arriving out of Lawrence after dark, he went into town alone, and all unknown to its citizens. He found the town with only 300 men, but prepared for a desperate resistance, being totally unaware of the succor at hand, and sleeplessly watching and defiantly awaiting the expected attack.

At the arrival of the Woodson party at the camp of the invaders just before dark, and the distribution of Geary's proclamation and delivery of his orders to disband, they were so enraged that they would not read the proclamation, nor would the officers assemble to hear it read; but they denounced the governor and threatened his life, and wanted to make an attack on the town that night. Adams left the camp at Franklin toward midnight after they had apparently settled down to sober consideration, and sent from Lawrence a dispatch to Geary at Lecompton, all unconscious that he could have been seen there at that moment.

This was perhaps one of the most remarkable nights—certainly the most remarkable Sabbath night in the history of Kansas; with John Brown, the undauntable hero, in command of the little force in Lawrence, expecting hourly to be attacked by an overwhelming force, and all be killed in its final defense. Also Geary, without their knowledge, with his United States troops keeping vigil, too; while 2,500 invaders were clamoring till midnight for blood and revenge. At the same time Whipple was hiding, Lane was fleeing and Harvey's force was being taken prisoners near Hickory Point. S. C. Hart.

OPEN LETTERS.

TO CARDINAL GIBBONS AND MR. ECHOLS, PRESIDENT OF THE AMERICAN PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION.

LETTER III.

Sirs:—When we find two trees bearing similar fruit we do not have to consult a botanical treatise to know that they are related. It would manifestly be impossible in the limited scope of these letters to give anything like an exhaustive review of the origin and history of Romanism and Freemasonry, and it is fortunate that this is not necessary. "By their fruits ye shall know them;" and the most convincing proof of their near relationship lies in their similarity of methods,—and even of doctrine, when we come to foundation principles.

Rome professes to be the enemy of all secret societies in general, and Masonry in particular. Why does she not begin at home by a war on her own secret societies, commencing with the worst of them all, the Jesuits? Be it remembered that when I speak of Rome I mean Jesuitism; when I speak of Jesuitism I mean Rome, for never has she repudiated the order or its teachings; never has she put under ban the works of Lignori, Gury and Dens, though so abominably filthy that they cannot be translated into English, without laying one open to the charge of printing obscene literature. To-day these are authorized text-books in Romish ecclesiastical seminaries, both in this country and in Europe. Rome has not a word of condemnation for their horrible immorality, but has given to it her official assent and seal;—she that put Pascal on her Index Expurgatorius, and MadameGuyon in the dungeons of the Bastile;that burned the writings of Galileo, and in every land where she holds supreme sway has made the Bible itself—that divine revelation from God to man—the rarest and least known of all books. For centuries Rome has identified herself with this secret society founded by Loyola, by allowing it to direct and control the papal policy; and am I not therefore right, Cardinal Gibbons, when I say that Rome is Jesuitism and Jesuitism is Rome?

Now on the other side Masonry professes to hate Rome with a perfect hatred. Then why does she not repudiate the higher Masonic degrees which were, as shown in my previous letter, the invention of Jesuit priests working in the interests of the papacy? Or if she must retain them, if they have grown too much part and parcel of Masonry to give up, why does she not tear therefrom the colors of the purple and scarlet clothed woman, and the terms and symbols which she has borrowed from her wholesale? She has priests and altars and supreme pontiffs; she has vestments and candles, and in the Knight Templar degree particularly, makes ostentatious display of the sign of the cross, as no one needs to be told who saw what lavish use was made by Boston barrooms of this sacred symbol when they were decorating a year ago last summer in honor of the visiting Knights.

Nor have they been always irreconcilable foes even in this country. In our Civil War they united to work the nation's destruction. Catholic Beauregard fired the first shot on Sumter, and the only foreign power to recognize the Southern Confederacy was the papacy. As for Masonry, —well did she play her part with the Knights of the Golden Circle to hatch the egg of treason, and Masonic Union generals holding treacherous parley with their brother Masons on the other side. There was no quarrel between Rome and Masonry then; they had one grand reason for uniting—to perpetuate slavery, and given a reason sufficiently strong to-day, who can say that they would not again secretly unite for the overthrow of this Republic?

Dr. Vernon, late superintendent of the M. E. missions in Italy, thus describes Jesuitism in its political effect: "There is not a people of the Old World whose peace it has not disturbed, whose rulers it has not embroiled, the administration of whose government it has not embarrassed, whose rights it has not usurped, and whose soil it has not drenched in blood." So deeply have the conspiracies and evil machinations of the Jesuits disgusted even Catholic governments that every nation in Europe except Belgium has at one time or another passed edicts for their suppression; and to-day America is the only country in the world that welcomes them. Their hand—the hand of iron under the velvet glove, manipulates and controls our politics, elects our rulers and bears the concealed poinard to strike them down when they are in the way, as it struck down Coligny, and William the Silent and our own Lincoln.

Guizot speaking of the political influence of Masonry says in his history of the French Revolution, "We are ignorant and shall probably ever remain so of the share which secret means had in the insurrection of July." According to Lewes in his life of Robespierre, this monster of the Reign of Terror was not only himself a Mason but "sprung from a family of (Masonic) conspirators." It is not strange that Masonry was interdicted by Maria Theresa, and at various times has been placed under ban as dangerous to good government in Russia, Holland, Bavaria, Switzerland and other European countries.

Both falsify history, and for the same reason. They have a record they want to cover up. This is why Romish historians have so little to say about the bloody tragedies which have become inseparably associated with her name. And this is why the story of Morgan died out of American history for fifty years. Rome has on her skirts the blood of martyred millions. What of Masonry? She strikes in secret, and in counting up the multitudes who have come to their death by her means, statistics fail. Thousands were executed without a trial by the "Secret Tribunal" or "Free Judges," who were the "White Caps" of Germany in the Middle Ages. Thousands more in another land and at a later period were murdered in cold blood by the Southern Ku Klux, who kept their masks in Masonic lodgerooms. As for the victims of the Molly Maguires and others secret orders of this country, of the Mafia in Italy, the Highbinders in China, and the "Avenging Angels" of the Mormon church, who but the All-seeing One can know the number of the vast multitude. If Rome, the Mystic Babylon, the mother of harlots,is drunk with the blood of the saints, the beast that carries her does not unite the characteristics of the three most ferocious of beasts, the lion, the leopard and the bear, for nothing.

Another parallel which should not be overlooked is that the idea both Masonry and Jesuitism is essentially military. Rome is now trying to unite all the secret societies she has been arming and drilling in one grand military union; while on the other hand Masonry would make a similar armed camp of the patriotic orders. What could more plainly distinguish the forces of Christ from the forces of anti-christ? What more ominous of evil to our republic? or more suggestive of the great day of Armageddon.

It may be objected that Masonry and the A. P. A. are distinct organizations. They are as much one as Rome and Jesuitism are one. The A. P. A. has been identified with Masonry from its first start as an organizations. In its leadership, in its methods, in its general plan it follows closely the Masonic pattern, and if further proof were wanting, note that its sympathies are with Masonry always and everywhere. A man who should try to show up Jesuitism to an audience of bigoted Roman Catholics would not fare any worse than one who attempted to attack Masonry before a crowd of zealous A. P. As.

No, Mr. Echols, the fight has narrowed down till it is a duel between these twin powers of darkness; and shall a Christian and a patriot deliberate which side he had better take? Shall he not rather see to it that he is on God's side? That is where we want to be. There is the only vantage ground from which we can safely fight these two dragon forces. Never shall we gain the victory by coming down from that height of spiritual power, and foolishly—shall I not say traitorously?—allying ourselves with Masonry in the hope of annihilating Rome, or vice versa. Whichever remains the victor we shall have put ourselves in his power without redress. We have gone down into the valley; we have courted the humiliation, the disgrace, the defeat which is the lot of them who lose their hold on God and go over to the enemy.

Sincerely yours,
Elizabeth E. Flagg.

A REVIEW OF FREEMASONRY.

PART OF AN ADDRESS BEFORE THE OREGON STATE CONVENTION AT PORTLAND, AUG. 27, BY SECRETARY P. B. WILLIAMS.

But we have said it is a religion. Let us examine it. On page thirteen of Cross's Chart we have a prayer sometimes used in opening a lodge. Here it is:

Most holy and glorious Lord God, the great architect of the universe, the giver of all good gifts and graces, thou hast promised that "where two or three are gathered together in thy name, thou wilt be in the midst of them and bless them. In thy name we assemble, most humbly beseeching thee to bless us in all our undertakings, that we may know and serve thee aright, and that all our actions may tend to thy glory and to our advancement in knowledge and virtue. And we beseech thee, O Lord God, to bless our present assembling, and to illuminate our minds that we may walk in the light of thy countenance, and, when the trials of our probationary state are over, be admitted into the temple not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. So mote it be. Amen.

Now the reader will please remember that these persons have assembled as Masons, and Masons only. As Masons they pray; as Masons they quote the promise of our Lord; as Masons they say, "In thy name we assemble." Now we ask all sober-minded Christians, do Masons assemble in the lodge "in the name," or by the authority "of Christ?" For the words quoted were spoken by him to his disciples, and not to Masons.

We undertake to say, they do not. And such a use of our Lord's promise is both a misapplication and a perversion of his words. Christians themselves cannot assemble in the Masonic lodge "in the name of Christ."

But all this proves that Masonry is a religion. And then, too, as Masons they pray to be admitted into the temple "not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." We say as Masons; for whatever is done in the lodge is done as Masons. On the same page there is a "prayer at closing," in which, as Masons, they offer their "humble praises" to the Supreme Architect of the universe" for his "many blessings and mercies;" and conclude by saying, "May we so practice thy precepts that we may finally obtain thy promises, and find an entrance through the gates into the temple and city of our God."

And then they have a benediction or "invocation at closing." "May the blessing of heaven rest upon us and all regular Masons! May brotherly (Masonic) love prevail, and every (Masonic) moral and social virtue cement us." We have thrown in a few words that the reader may more readily get the sense of the quotations made. In the "charge at closing" the lodge is spoken of as "this sacred retreat." We ask, "what has made it sacred?" and then it is added: "Remember that around this altar you have promised to befriend and relieve every (Masonic) brother who shall need your assistance." "These generous principles are to extend farther. Every human being has a claim upon your kind offices. Do good unto all men. Recommend it more especially to the household of the faithful;" i. e. Masons.

Here is another misapplication and perversion of the Scriptures. The apostolic injunction was given to Christians; and they are commanded to "do good unto all, but especially to the household of faith"—"the church of the living God." But Masons reverse the divine rule, and teach that they must do good to but especially to the Masonic household of the faithful. This charge ends as follows: "Finally, brethren, be ye all of one mind; live in peace; and may the God of love and peace delight to dwell with and bless you"—Masons.

Can the reader any longer doubt that it is a religion? If any doubts remain let the reader turn to page 26 of Cross's Chart. Speaking of the "common gavel," they say: "But we, as Free and Accepted Masons, are taught to make use of it for the more noble and glorious purpose of divesting our hearts and consciences of all the vices and superfluities of life; thereby fitting our minds as living stones for that spiritual building, 'that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.'"

Wonderful "gavel!" So you see Masonry is not only a religion, but they expect to be saved by keeping the Masonic precepts. By it they expect to gain admission into the "celestial lodge" above, where the Supreme Architect of the universe presides." "Celestial lodge!" What a name for heaven; for paradise; for the abode of God; a "lodge!" Then there is the "Masonic burial service," all of which is Masonic religion. It is not necessary that we should quote from it to prove our position. The reader can peruse it for himself. And if he is not yet satisfied of the truth of our position we hope to clear away every doubt, and to make the matter plain, that "he that runs may read" its truth.

INTERNATIONAL ANTI-MASONIC CONGRESS.

An interesting feature of this Catholic Antimasonic Congress which met at Trent, Austria, Sept. 26, 30, was a letter from the Pope, which was read at the opening of the Congress. Like everything from his pen it was written in Latin, which accounts for the peculiarity of the style. Speaking of the motives in calling together this Congress from different nations, "that they may consider and study the means of combating the Masonic sect, which is daily showing greater audacity," the letter says:

"Passing over every other reason, there is one special cause why this project should be heartily approved of. It is this—that it indicates clearly that the conviction is growing among the people that secret societies have designed most serious injuries against civilization and religion. These injuries, which have in part actually taken place, and which are partly yet to appear, we have on every suitable opportunity pointed out."

Referring to former letters he had written on the subject he says: "We were not disappointed as to the results of our efforts, and we reckon amongst them the proposal to hold this Congress which we are confident, both in point of numbers and in the influence of those who will attend, will have such success as is demanded by the gravity of the subject and the advantages that are to be expected. In order that the issue may fully correspond with our desires, it is absolutely necessary that those who will be present at the Congress should place their hands on the root of the evil.....It is certain, as we have said on another occasion, that the dogmas which this sect puts forward with audacious impiety, and the wicked arts of which it makes use will produce less evil, and will gradually cease of themselves, if Catholics endeavor with increased energy to unmask Freemasonry, because all its strength consists in lying and secrecy, and when its deceptive mask is torn away it will be easy for all right-thinking persons to discover and oppose its iniquity.

"Moved, therefore, by the love of Christ and of souls, we congratulate you on your undertaking, and we heartily pray God to favor it. We have full confidence that the Congress will give fresh stimulus to Catholics, so that, whilst pardoning the erring, they will not pardon error, and will not permit in any way the violation of those precious privileges which Christ bestowed upon man." Leo XIII Pope.

CALIFORNIA U. B. CONFERENCE.

Tipton, Cal., Sept. 25, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—This conference was said by many to be the very best since the division of the church. One liberal United Brethren present was heard to wonder where all the radicals came from. He wrote up to a liberal friend at Woodbridge offering him to pay his way down if he would attend the conference. The spiritual interest was good all the way through. Rev. Geo. L. Shepherdson, of Los Angeles, was received on his credentials from the Wesleyan Methodists. Rev. James Condray, of Stockton, came from the M. E. church. Rev. J. W. Pulley, of Oregon, took work in the conference; also, Rev. L. G. Cawdrey, of Kansas conference. These will add greatly to the interesting work of the conference this year.

Revs. W. P. Tibbet and L. E. Cole were elected presiding elders. They are good true men, and will do good work on their districts. With faithful itinerants and true elders, the work will move on. Rev. P. A. Black was ordained on Sabbath evening. An excellent communion service was held at the same time. The new church building at Oakdale was dedicated by Bishop Dillon on Sabbath. It is the best church building in Oakdale. It is largely the gift of Bro. Thomas Snedigar. The United Brethren have a good society at this point. The conference was royally entertained. Bishop Dillon baptized three on Sabbath afternoon. During the conference strong resolutions were adopted against secret societies, and in favor of the Cynosure.

Bishop Dillon and Rev. B. A. Bonewell left for Oregon on Monday morning. On Tuesday morning, in company with Rev. W. P. Tibbet and Bros. H. C. Horsman and W. T. Garrison, we started overland for Lipton, Tulare county, one hundred and eighty miles away. We camped out the first night near Merced. The next night we camped on the San Joaquin river near Herndon. The third night we staid with Bro. Haskins near Dinuba, and the fourth night we arrived at Bro. Horsman's near Tipton, where I am billed to speak for a week or more.

We passed some beautiful ranches, fruit farms and vineyards. To-day we passed in sight of the largest vineyard in the State. It has more than one thousand acres. We also passed through Visalia, the house of the famous train robbers and murderers, Sontag and Evans. We saw the house of the latter. This is also the home of Judge Gray, who gave the recent decision in favor of our church, and against the liberals. I must close as I must send this to the office six miles away. P. B. Williams.

BRO. J. P. STODDARD ON THE WARPATH.

Enroute for Richfield Springs, N. Y., Sept. 30, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—New England scenery is at its best. "Berkshire Hills" are perfectly gorgeous in emerald, crimson and gold. A brisk morning shower in Boston has not, as predicted, been succeeded by a hurricane. Plenty of room in the car, delightful sunshine and a good lunch provided by my thoughtful wife, have made the day restful. I am due at the Springs at 6:45 p. m. where I hope to meet and defeat the enemy.

People are thinking in these campaign times. They want something to read, and expect every document to have a connection in some way with political issues. The politician has the "stump" but the colporteur has the home; Christianize and instruct the mothers and the boys and girls, and it will settle financial and all other questions on a religious basis at the ballot box by and by.

Mr. Moody's appearance in Tremont Temple at the Boston Monday noon prayer meeting was greeted by a packed house. He commanded the situation and spoke with vigor, as he always does.

His plea was for an aggressive movement all along the lines, exceeding in energy the political campaign. Dr. Lorimer and Dr. Bates, with others, spoke well at the after meeting, indorsing Mr. Moody's appeal. As I came from the hall a pious young clergyman accosted me, saying in substance: "How is this? We foreigners can't understand you American Christians and churches. Mr. Moody condemns the lodge, and preaches separation, and says, 'Better have three or four with God than thousands without him,' and then stands on that platform indorsing Dr. Lorimer and Dr. Bates, both high Masons, as good men and Gospel ministers. Our people can't understand it." Confronted by the facts, what should I have said? what would Mr. Moody or his admirers reply to such a sincere appeal from a conscientious, self-denying minister of Christ's Gospel.

Recently two Christian ladies were discussing revival services held by Dr. John Robertson, D. D., of Glasgow, in the Temple, one a Presbyterian, the other a Baptist. The Baptist lady expressed surprise that the attendance to hear Dr. Robertson should so far exceed that of the ministry of her eloquent pastor. Whereupon her friend ventured this solution: "Dr. Robertson is a Christian, and preaches the Gospel in the power of the Holy Spirit. Dr. Lorimer is a Knight Templar and high Mason, and there is more or less of the spirit of Masonry in his sermons."

Whether correct or erroneous the suggestion was not well received, but it may nevertheless account in part for the fact that the Tuesday noon meeting led by Dr. Lorimer drew only a fraction of the audience on Monday; and also for the selection of Rev. Knight Templar S. A. Gumbart, D. D., to conduct the services on Wednesday. When such "knighted" dignitaries are constantly kept at the front and indorsed by the world's evangelist, is it strange that our brethren from across the sea should be perplexed by the inconsistencies of our "American Christians and churches?"

If, as seems probable, a series of special services are held in Boston, centered in Tremont Temple, let us all pray that Christ may be exalted, souls saved and evangelists and ministers emancipated from that fear which bringeth a snare, until they shall put their own preaching into practice by having "no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness," and "faithfully reprove them" even as they fervently exhort their hearers to do. Christ actually saved some publicans and harlots in Judea, in spite of the "broad phylacteried" priests in the Temple, which they had perverted from a house of prayer to a den of thieves. Our Jesus, the mighty to save, is the same "Yesterday, to-day and forever."

POLITICS IN THE PULPIT.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 30, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—Miss Frances E. Willard's birthday—the fifty-sixth—was fittingly celebrated Monday evening at the headquarters of the W. C. T. U., by a reception under the auspices of the Y. Branch. The rooms were handsomely decorated and many pleasant things were said of Miss Willard, who must always stand, one of the speakers said, "as a foremost example of what women can accomplish, and a constant inspiration to the younger women of to-day."

Several prominent Washington ministers have put themselves on record on the subject of partisan politics from the pulpit Dr. Talmage started it by preceding his sermon last Sabbath with a short statement to the effect that he never had and would not preach partisan politics, although he had been urged to do so during each of the last six Presidential campaigns. Dr. Radcliffe, pastor of the New York Ave. Presbyterian church, said on the subject: "A clergyman has no right to use the pulpit to express the views of one of the great parties, when there are some representing the other parties in the pews. But when political discussion involves questions distinctly and unmistakably moral and religious, it is not only the clergyman's right, but his duty to express himself." Dr. Johnston, pastor of the Metropolitan M. E. church, said: "I believe that so far as politics in general is concerned ministers had better keep clear of it. The two great parties are always represented in the church, and a minister who offends one of the parties ceases to be of use." Dr. Butler, pastor of Luther Place Memorial church, said: "Preachers are not to be partisans, but concerning the great underlying principles of government the preacher must be outspoken, courageous, and give utterance to no uncertain sound." HOW TO INTEREST THE YOUNG.

Larwill, Ind., Sept. 18, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—The question, "How to interest the children and young people in our cause?" is an easy one, especially if the young people are old enough to know what it means. I make it my business whenever meeting a young man, to stop and enter into conversation the same as if I were going to transact important business with him. I make him feel that it is a matter of the utmost importance that I am going to introduce to him. I tell him, when handing him the the tracts or Cynosure, as the case may be, that in this enlightened day and age of the world, every thing that is noble, good and grand is open for investigation and discussion, and that the papers handed him are a discussion of a subject that is denied public discussion; and that the aim or object of these papers is to get this subject more prominently before the American people so that they can decide whether it is right or wrong.

I next tell them that, especially Christian people, should not give these secret institutions encouragement. By this time they are so interested that I can point out to them the ungodliness and the inconsistency of belonging to such institutions. The children, I think, would become more interested if you would use more cuts of the secret workings of the different orders, which would cause them to be more inquisitive by asking questions concerning the pictures. I would like to know how many different Christian denominations are represented by the officers of the National Christian Association and the editoral staff. Please state also into how many different countries the Cynosure is being sent at present.

FROM THE "OLD LIBERTY SINGER."

Detroit, Mich., Sept. 29, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—A few days ago I said some plain things in a meeting I was called upon to address. I spoke on the evil effects and the dangerous character of oath-bound secret societies, also of their inconsistency and their incompatibility with our republican government. I showed that these orders built up in our midst exclusive, selfish, class organizations, bound and held together by the most revolting oaths. I alluded to the murder of Wm. Morgan by the Masonic order, and how they not only deliberately planned and executed his murder, but archly screened his cruel murderers from deserved punishment, and they have gone "unwhipped of justice" to the present day.

A large, well-dressed woman, who was present at this meeting, took up the defense of Masonry and denied the murder of Morgan. She was still under the delusion of that oft-exploded romantic story hatched by the "craft" and palmed off upon a credulous people soon after the murder, that Morgan was seen by a certain somebody on a certain far away "fairy isle," enjoying the delights of banished seclusion and dumb solitude from wife, children and friends and all the world besides, where he could sing as did the famous Crusoe:

> I am monarch of all I survey;
> My right there is none to dispute;
> From the center all round to the sea,
> I am lord of the fowl and the brute.

I was living in the city of Rochester, N. Y., when the Masons kidnapped, from his home and his family in Batavia, Capt. Wm. Morgan, for discharging what he regarded a duty to his country in exposing and breaking up the secret machinations and plottings of oath-bound clans called Freemasons. I have traveled and lectured and sung through and through that State in the temperance and anti slavery reforms, and especially in all the villages of Western New York, and have been many times over every foot of ground from Morgan's home in Batavia, through the beautiful village of Leroy, where stood for many years the old brick "round-house," where I have had many good meetings, and where the Masonic clans used to gather, and where it was said the conspiracy against Morgan was hatched and completed.

From here he was spirited through Lima, west and east Blooomfield, to Canandaigua, where, under a trumped-up charge he was thrust into the old Ontario county jail. He was soon taken from here in a closed carriage and driven through Victor and Pittsford to Rochester. I could give the names of many prominent men in that city, high Masons, such as Jacob Gould, the Whitneys, Christophers, Eleys, McCrackins, etc., etc., all dead and gone now, who were understood to be in the conspiracy.

From Rochester he was taken north six miles to the Ridge, and thence west over the famous Ridge road running west parallel with and not far from the shore of Lake Ontario. From thence verging southerly he was taken until they reached old Ft. Niagara, where he was again incarcerated until the final arrangements were completed, and the last fiendish act in this horrible drama was enacted by casting lots which resulted in the selection of three men who were to blindfold, gag, bind with cords, attach weights to his body, take him out in a boat upon the boiling Niagara below the old Lewiston Ferry, where I have crossed many a time, and there plunge their innocent victim into the deep surging billows, whence they supposed his body would never again appear to mortal eyes. Henry L. Vallance, one of the three upon whom the devilish lot fell to commit the foul murder, became so conscience smitten that he could not leave this world until he had devulged the whole thing, which he did upon his dying bed. "Murder will out."

The Masons were disappointed and chagrined when that deep gorge which they supposed had forever engulfed their murdered victim now turned him up to the light of day. The great body of water pouring through that vast gorge had formed a deep channel along the south shore of the lake for a long way below the outlet of the great river. This mighty current had swept the body before its decomposition down near the shore and finally stranded it on the beach at the mouth of Oak Orchard creek.

His wife, relatives, friends and neighbors were informed and came immediately and identified the body as that of Wm. Morgan. It was taken to his home in Batavia, where a large concourse of people attended the burial. These with many other facts settled the question of the murder and disposal of Morgan by the Masons. In September, 1882, the National Christian Association, leading the anti-secret society sentiment of the country, erected a beautiful monument to the memory of Wm. Morgan over his grave, and dedicated it in the presence of thousands of people. It stands near and in full view of the thousands who pass and re-pass on the great New York Central railway every day. It points to heaven as a perpetual reminder of their Masonic murder and their abortive attempt to conceal their great crine. And I feel proud of the honor and thankful for the privilege of standing on the base by the side of that grand monument and rendering to that great throng, on that glorious day and occasion, the dedication song.

THE LODGE AND THE SALOON.

THIRD LETTER.

Blanchard, Ia., Sept. 30, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—Soon after this new editor took charge of our paper, our town began to be visited once, twice and often thrice every week by dissolute women, and the lodge editor turned his attention to them and called on the Law and Order League and all good people to fight them and cease persecuting the innocent druggist. There was some effort put forth along this line, but in the end we discovered that these characters were brought in for the purpose of diverting attention from this druggist; and that the agency that brought them and shielded them from justice had its center in that drug store. When the smoke of the battle had cleared away, the drug store and druggist, editor and prostitutes had all disappeared at the same time.

We have already noticed the position of the town of Blanchard, that it was on the State line between Missouri and Iowa. The business street is just half a block north from the State line; hence the alley back of the business houses on the south side of the street was on the State line. When the druggist failed to get a license in Iowa, he applied for one in Missouri, and by fraudulent representations and large money offer, he obtained two lots over the line in Missouri almost directly back of his drug store.

On the corner of these lots the druggist built a little one story house and called it his gasoline house; but as he painted it red, it soon became known as the little red house. He now began to sell liquors on both sides of the State line. The druggist's father assisted him in his business so they could attend to customers in both houses at once. The most sluggish moral and temperance people now began to be aroused.

The writer had the honor of making the first public attack on this "little red house." This was done in an address to the soldiers on Decoration Day. The appeal was made to them, that as they had not been afraid to face the cannon's mouth in defence of their country, they would rise to the defense of our town and help sweep the "little red house" from its back alley. It was like firing a red-hot shot into a powder magazine. The people were aroused. Meetings of the Law and Order League were held every week.

A banker, C. G. Anderson, of the M. E. church, a most conservative man, made a telling speech one evening, leaving the impression that the little red house must go. J. H. Walkinshaw called on all those who were willing to have the little red house removed, whatever it might cost, to rise, and the whole house arose. Samuel McGinnis presided at a meeting when $100 was raised to push matters. Dr. R. J. C. Dodds was president of the Law and Order League and kept the work moving. The M. E. and U. P. pastors were exceedingly active, and the community was stirred to its center. The course of the lodge editor was publicly and severely condemned. Yet, in the face of all this, the druggist and editor kept right on at their work and seemed to show little concern, revealing the fact that they had secret backing even in the town.

The most prominent Mason in the town attacked one of our Law and Order League men once for stirring up strife and bad feeling in the community, but he was soon silenced, and when the point was pressed whether he had ever done or given anything for the moral and religious good of the community, he was forced to admit that he had not. How many lodgemen are willing to make the same confession? We have yet to know or hear of a lodge that was not a curse to the community in which it existed. J. R. W.

A MINISTER'S BAD EXAMPLE.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 21, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—It came to pass on a bright May morning that I wended my way to the parsonage of a Masonic Baptist minister. He was a powerful man physically, but oh, how soon his mental weakness became apparent, when he boastingly proclaimed himself a Royal Arch Mason. I quietly turned on the light of Divine Revelation, and stripped the disloyal Royal Arch of its Masonic mask.

I then said you cannot swear to that statement; you did not see yourself made a Mason; your outward vision was darkened by a hoodwink. You can claim no right to swear to have your body dissected; Jehovah gave your body for a temple for the Holy Ghost, and he calls you to account for maltreating and prostituting it; and for caricaturing the death, burial and resurrection of the Saviour of men in the third degree.

Do you intend, I said, to keep those blasphemous oaths with bloody penalties that you took on your bended knee? He did not answer, and I said, I will reply for you. You do not. So you are a perjured man. The arrow hit between the joints of the harness of this great Goliath of the Masonic fraternity.

Again, I met a bright business man of this city, one who has never known the love and fellowship of our blessed Lord. He testified that he had taken one degree in Freemasonry that was not free and no masonry. The death penalties of this degree were far too much for him; he had no use for the other degrees; and could not understand how a minister could stand up before an infidel saloonkeeper Worshipful Master, and swear that he would not violate the chastity of his wife, mother, sister or daughter. So disgusted was this man with one degree, that he blushed to speak of it, and separated from such associations forever.

Oh, mothers of the W. C. T. U., which example would you want your sons to follow? the treacherous, lecherous lodge minister, or the modest, moral gentleman? A wife asked her dying husband if she should send for his lodge minister? Oh, no! no! he said, I have seen enough of him in the lodge. Hattie Eunice Powers.

HOW TO BE WELL SHOD.

Symmetry and Comfort of the Feet—Sensible Shoes.

Within the past few years there has been a complete revolution in the direction of women's shoes. It is within the memory of most of us today that when we were girls we never thought of buying a new pair of shoes without premonitory mental twinges that foreshadowed our physical experience later on. No woman, not even the most sensible one alive, ever bought a shoe that fitted her properly. Now, however, we have come to see that a small foot on a good sized woman hints as surely at deformity as does a large one on a very small body. Symmetry is beauty always and the shoes of the modern woman show that she has found it out. There are ills that arise from poorly shod feet that are almost intolerable, and to the woman who wants to escape them the way is clear. "Examine your individual foot," modern wisdom says, "see if it is most comfortable in round toe, square toe, or razor point; let it be at least one full size larger than you think you need (and superstitions die hard); have on hand always twice as many pairs as you actually require for daily use; wear them alternately; never allow a missing button to go unreplaced for ten minutes; keep yourself supplied with fresh laces, and you may depend upon it that if the old time saying is true, 'A lady may be known by her gloves and her shoes,' you are sure at least of half of the requirements."

How to Cure the Blues.

If things go wrong and if one feels tired and worried and discouraged, one is prone to become despondent and imaginative and out of sorts with the world, and it is then we have to look for that silver lining. Usually a good, brisk walk will bring it to our notice. The physical exercise and mental distraction one finds in the open air will sweep away the cobwebs of the brain as nothing else can. As a race we Americans are not fond of walking. We exercise too little. We worry too much. We take life too hard. We wear ourselves out in the pursuit of rest. A long, vigorous walk every day is the best tonic for mind and body and an almost invariable panacea for the "blues."

How to Restore Ostrich Feathers.

A series of brisk scrubbings in warm soapsuds on a washboard, a judicious patching together and elimination of ragged places, where Sir Ostrich has preened himself too vigorously, a curling and combing soon make of the ostrich feather a thing of beauty and a joy forever—until it gets wet, when the process of rejuvenation again becomes necessary.

Have a teakettle full of boiling water, shake the feathers vigorously through the escaping steam, taking care that it does not get too damp. This livens up the plume and restores brilliancy if it has become dull and dusty.

Next take a silver fruit knife, and, beginning with the feathers nearest the quill, take a small branch between thumb and forefinger and draw gently over the blade of the knife until they curl as closely as desired. Follow this process up each side of the tip, then take a very coarse comb, comb out carefully, and you have your plume as good as ever.

How to Tell a Real Diamond.

Aluminium will mark a paste diamond, but not the true gem, provided the surface is wet. This fact has now been applied in the production of a mechanical tester which consists of a small disk of aluminium rapidly revolved by an electric motor. The stone to be tested is wet and held against the edge of the disk by means of a spring clamp. When metallic sparks are found on the stone after this treatment, it is rejected as false.

How Rolling Improves Grass.

The effect of rolling is to crush down the bigger plants that flourish among the grass and to injure the grass itself but little. The bigger plants are mostly weeds, which, if allowed to grow unchecked, would soon choke the more slender grass. If a footpath across a field becomes disused, it will be found that the grass which grows up in its place is of far superior purity to that in the rest of the field. Constant pressure has stamped out the roots of the weeds and left only the pure grass. Another advantage of rolling is that it makes the grass grow more thickly. The ground becomes intertwined with a network of plants, and when this has been going on for 50 years or more that rich, velvety turf is produced which can be found alone in old park lands that have lain undisturbed by the plow for many years in succession.

How to Retain Beauty.

A woman beautiful in all else, but wanting mirth, will grow old, sour, thin and sallow, while the merry, fun loving woman will be fresh and sweet despite life's happenings and sorrows. The highest beauty is the beauty of expression, and the cultivation of this requires the crushing out of envy, hatred, malice and all motives and passions. True beauty rests on plain living and high thinking and brains. It is in one sense a relative thing. To dip far into philosophy on the subject is not necessary. The gospel of relaxing, of "letting go," of oneself at times is essential to facial well being. The nervous system, like the violin, must not be kept always at concert pitch. Beauty means harmony balance, the mental fire of sensibility, as well as bodily attractiveness. Banish fretting, trivial perturbation, scowling, whining, wailing, excessive and pointless smiling.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1896.

GRAND ORIENT AND AMERICAN FREEMASONRY.

A Toronto Anti-masonic paper thus clearly points out the relation and affiliation of the atheistic Masonry of Europe with the Freemasonry of this country:

"The British and American Masons sprang from the European parent and the Grand Orient. It has often been stated of late that the ancient affiliation has been termininated; but of that there can be no evidence since all preserve their secrecy. Even supposing they had cut loose, what does it signify? The parent society is still the custodian of the real and original teachings of Freemasonry. An Anglo-Saxon Masonic reform movement, if it had any sincerity in it, would throw off the secrecy that shields the irreligious character of the parent and let light in upon the foul cave it had escaped from. But that has never been the role of British or American Freemasonry. The Anglo-Saxon wing has always played the part of the apologist and the monitor of the parent. It has endeavored to keep it out of the way of popular attention, while in itself it takes on the pretence of some shadowy belief in God as a recommendation to Christian people, whose own religion is unhappily but a shadow. If there were any honesty in the excuses of the British and American Freemasons for the irreligion and socialism of European Freemasonry, a war would long ago have broken out between the two wings."

SUICIDE OF A KNIGHT TEMPLAR MINISTER.

Rev. James B. Morrison, of Laconia, N. H., until within a week one of the most prominent Unitarian clergymen in New England, committed suicide at the Revere House on the night of Sept. 21, by suffocating himself with gas. Mr. Morrison left Laconia suddenly last week on account of grave charges of immoral conduct. It is alleged that several young men made confessions, implicating the pastor, and he consented to leave Laconia without delay if legal proceedings were not instituted. The deceased clergyman was independently wealthy, and was about forty-five years old, and moved in the best society of the town.

Mr. Morrison belonged to Pilgrim Commandery Knight Templars, and only this month was installed as prelate. He wrote to Mr. Charles Sleeper, of Hotel Plaza, on his last night on earth: "It is as a Knight Templar that I appeal to you, and through you to every Knight Templar in Boston, Haverhill and Laconia. I do not wish my body to be taken to Haverhill, but I want it cremated at the earliest convenient time after my death. I would like a Temple burial service. I ask the forgiveness of every Knight Templar for the trouble I am putting them to. All must know that I am treading the wine press alone, and think of that to comfort them on their way."

It is inexpressibly sad that this poor minister failed to find comfort in the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ. His shipwreck of faith and appeal to Knight Templarism, a false and Christ-dishonoring religion, is a fearful warning to all who lean upon such a pagan system for salvation.

FREEMASON'S CONGRESS.

A correspondent of the American Press Association admits that the congress of Freemasons, held in September at The Hague in the Netherlands, has confirmed the worst impressions that have lately been getting abroad concerning the Masonic body. It seems that a prominent European Freemason, named Signor Zola, recently renounced Masonry, and dealt it a staggering blow by showing up its irreligious character and aim.

The Toronto Catholic Register in a lengthy editorial thus comments on this congress and warns of the drift of continental Masonry into atheism and anarchy, as in France at the beginning of this century. The Register says:

"Coming so soon after the utterances of Signor Zola, the declarations of the Freemasons assembled at The Hague were bolder than might have been expected. It is the nature of secret organizations to creep back into the dark places when more light than they can stand has been turned upon them. That is the policy Freemasonry was expected to return to in order to avoid undesirable public curiosity at this juncture. But not so. The Masons at The Hague appear to have come out bluntly and announced their irreligious and socialistic purpose. They want no law and they want no religion. They hate both, and would overturn them if possible. They would bring the race of man back to barbarism and wipe out all the traces of civilization. Other organizations as well as the Freemasons stand upon this platform of the anarchists; but all other socialistic organizations are held in more or less popular abhorrence. Whatever attractions Freemasonry possesses for men would certainly disappear before the growing detestation of organizations of all names whose ultimate end is the overturning of religion and law. So that the declarations of The Hague Masonic congress are severely criticised by some sections of the general body."

WHAT SORT OF CHRISTIANS ARE WE?

A correspondent this week very properly asks the question, "How many Christian denominations are represented by the officers of the National Christian Association and the Cynosure editorial staff?"

The President of the Association, Rev. Samuel H. Swarts, is pastor of the M. E. church at Morris, Ill.; the Vice-president, Rev. W. T. Campbell, D. D., is pastor of the Second United Presbyterian church, Monmouth, Ill.; the General Secretary and Treasurer, Rev. W. I. Phillips, is a Congregationalist, residing at Wheaton, Ill.; the Recording Secretary, Mrs. Mary C. Baker, is a Free Methodist, and resides in this city.

There are eleven on the Board of Directors whose denominational connection is as follows: President C. A. Blanchard, Ezra A. Cook, Rev. E. B. Wylie and Prof. E. Whipple are Congregationalists; Rev. P. W. Raidabaugh is associate editor of the American Friend of Philadelphia, Pa., and minister of the Friends church; Rev. W. O. Dinius is a minister of the United Brethren; Rev. J. A. Collins is a United Presbyterian pastor and co-editor of the Christian Instructor; C. J. Holmes is a Swedish Lutheran; J. M. Hitchcock is an Independent or member of the Moody church; Prof. H. F. Kletsing is a professor and member in the German Evangelical church, and T. B. Arnold is a publisher in the Free Methodist church.

The editor of the Cynosure is a Reformed Presbyterian or Covenanter. He can truly say that it has never been his lot to co-operate with a more radical, devoted, spiritually-minded, harmonious set of men than those above mentioned. They represent the best Christian sentiment in their various denominations.

WHY HE LEFT THE "SONS OF TEMPERANCE."

In 1884, while in New York publishing his "Liberty Minstrel," Geo. W. Clark was urged to join the "Sons of Temperance," a secret order. He had been more than ever opposed to all secret, oath-bound societies since the murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan by the Masons. He was told, however, this was not an "oath-bound, secret order," but was a simple organization for the better promotion of the cause of temperance; and by joining he could have access to many more people and influence many more for good. He accordingly joined, and visited various meetings of the order, to speak and sing for the "cause" (the lodges). At the close of one of his lectures for the "cause," one night in Buffalo, he invited all who would to come forward and "join."

Among a number who came up to enlist in the good work was a nice-looking colored man. To Mr. Clark's surprise and mortification this man was "black-balled" because he was a "nigger!" He said at once, "If you exclude the colored man, you exclude me." He soon found this was a standing rule of the "order." For this reason, and finding it to be virtually a secret, oath-bound order; and finding the "lodges" were doing more for the "order" than for the cause of temperance, he left them, and ever since has steadily opposed all secret "orders," believing them unnatural, un-Christian, unnecessary, anti-republican and dangerous. His views on this subject may be found in one of his works published by the National Christian Association, entitled, "Lyrics about the Secret Lodges."

AN UNPARALLELED RECORD.

The London publishers of the late C. H. Spurgeon's Sermons have just received an order for 1,000,000 sermons from the Spurgeon Memorial Sermon Society, Brighton, formed for the distribution of the sermons as loan tracts. The weekly publication of these sermons, which has continued without a break for forty-one years, is one of the amazing literary successes of the century. Over 2,500 different sermons are now in circulation.

The total number already issued in Great Britain is considerably over 100,000,000, and they are still as popular as ever. The sermons have been translated into almost every known language. The Fleming H. Revell Company keep on hand at their Chicago house the entire 2,500 separate sermons, and offer to send a complete textual and topical index of the entire series to anyone desiring it. These or any other books you may desire can be ordered through the Cynosure.

COLLEGE SECRET SOCIETIES.

The Pittsburgh Weekly Dispatch, of Sept. 24, contains a report of a discussion on the college fraternity question in the United Presbyterian Synod, assembled at Youngstown, Ohio, Sept. 23. The report says:

"To-night before the First Synod of the West the report of Westminster College was offered by Dr. A. G. Wallace, of Sewickley, and immediately there was a lively controversy, in which the ministers became greatly excited and called things by names not to be mistaken. All the trouble arose over that section of the report which follows:

" 'At the very beginning of the fall term dissatisfaction on the part of a number of students became manifest, because of the alleged existence of Greek-letter fraternities in the college. The matter threatened to become serious. A meeting of the board was called. The board assembled and labored earnestly and faithfully, but were unable immediately to remove the difficulty. A number of the dissatisfied students left and went to other colleges. However, the effort to suppress the evil was continued with gratifying results as will be seen by the following, which is laid before the synod by the direction of the board at a recent meeting.'

" 'In the absence of Rev. R. M. Russell, D. D., who was to report on college fraternities, the board received with great satisfaction the announcement from the president of the college that the fraternities alleged to be secret have been disbanded. From the report of President Ferguson, on the affairs of the college, and from inquiries from the board, the board is satisfied that secret fraternities in the college have been disbanded.'

"One of the trustees promptly announced he had not received notice of the meeting in time to attend, and intimated very broadly that there had been underhand work. This in turn was sharply denied by the president, and the synod was soon in an uproar. Some of the ministers offered a defense for secret societies, while others sharply criticised such organizations. 'Falsifying' was a word used rather frequently, but the clause was adopted after a debate lasting two hours.

"Those participating in the discussion were Revs. R. H. Park, of Valencia; W. J. Cooper, of Butler; R G. Wallace, of Sewickley; J. A. Bailey, of Mount Jackson; R. A. Gilfillan, of Wyoma; J. W. Witherspoon, of Allegheny, and W. H. Robinson, of Pittsburgh."

TRAINING MEN FOR BLOODY REVOLUTION.

The most fearful influence of the secret lodge system is to train men for deeds of bloody cruelty. It does this by its fearful oaths with their cut-throat penalties. "Our late war," said Jonathan Blanchard, "was a holiday sham fight to the Revolution in France, where prisoners were drowned in her rivers for safe keeping till their channels were choked with corpses, and reddened with gore. Old men, women and children were thus disposed of; and girls, seeing their lovers drowning, were seen to leap from the banks into the water, and they sunk in death clasped in each other's arms.

"How are we to account for this? Are Frenchmen human monsters? and born in a country which produced Fenelon and Lafayette? No, they are not monsters. They are the politest people on earth; and 'politeness is benevolence in trifles.' The explanation is this: Those revolutionists were Freemasons, initiated by popish priests and sworn to receive and enforce penalties by manglings, which President J. Q. Adams forcibly said a humane butcher would not inflict in slaughtering a hog."

Prof. John Robison, in his book on "Freemasonry a Conspiracy against all Religions and Governments," quotes the following illustration of how men were trained for the horrible butcheries of the French Revolution. The quotation was from a book published in 1796 by Latocnaye.

"A candidate for reception into one of the highest orders, after having heard many threatenings denounced against all who should betray the secrets of the order, was conducted to a place where he saw the dead bodies of several who were said to have suffered for their treachery. He then saw his own brother tied hand and foot, begging his mercy and intercession. He was informed that this person was about to suffer the punishment due to this offense, and that it was reserved for him (the candidate) to be the instrument of this just vengeance, and that this gave him an opportunity of manifesting that he was completely devoted to the order.

"It being observed that his countenance gave signs of inward horror (the person in bonds imploring his mercy all the while) he was told, that in order to spare his feelings, a bandage should be put over his eyes. A dagger was then put into his right hand, and being hoodwinked, his left hand was laid on the palpitating heart of the criminal, and he was then ordered to strike. He instantly obeyed; and when the bandage was taken from his eyes, he saw that it was a lamb that he had stabbed. Surely such trials and such wanton cruelty are only fit for training conspirators."

JOHN P. HALE IN PUBLIC LIFE.

During his sixteen years of service in the Senate he was known to the whole country for his knightly courage in facing the embattled hosts of slavery. He was equally well known by his sallies of ready wit and his abounding good nature, without which he would not have been able to stand in his place as the representative of a hated cause. They softened the asperities of debate, and perhaps averted personal assaults. He kept down the ire of his enemies by compelling them to laugh at the moral grotesqueness of the attitude in which he placed them. He was anything but a fanatic on the slavery question; he never gave countenance to any scheme of disunion or any form of revolutionary action. His whole public life was guided by his strong common sense. He had no desire to be singular. He loved the approbation of his fellows, and would have lived in peace with all men. But he had convictions and followed them, and for the sake of those convictions he would have been ready to lay down his life.—"A Presidential Candidate in 1852," by George W. Julian, in the October Century.

ASK GOD FOR WHAT YOU WANT.

"I do not advise you to attempt to say long prayers," writes Ruth Ashmore in October Ladies' Home Journal. "Ask God for what you want, believing that you will get it, and do not pray yourself, as is possible, into a state of religious conceit. Think sometimes just before you go to bed of this verse: 'Stand in awe, and sin not; commune with your own heart and in your chamber, and be still. I will lay me down in peace, and take my rest; for it is Thou, Lord, only, that makest me dwell in safety.' He does not want you to come to him with loud wailing, but with a repentant spirit and in quietness. Be generous and ask that he give his patronage and comfort to all those who are in sorrow. Ask for the poor a competent support, a contented spirit and a hope for the treasures in the hereafter. For all that travel by sea or land freedom from perils of all kinds, and that they may reach the haven where they would be. For those who grieve for some who are asleep may there be given a knowledge of the goodness of God and a willingness to take up the burden of life and to carry it joyfully until the end is reached. For all those who are disconsolate ask for light from heaven, timely deliverance, and God's grace and comfort."

PERSONAL MENTION.

—H. Curtis, a veteran in the anti-secret reform, has returned to his old home in Olathe, Kan.

—Rev. Wm. Pinkney is pastor of the Wesleyan Methodist church at Kishwaukee, Winnebago county, Ill., this year.

—Bro. J. W. Wood is now at Sumner, Wash., living neighbor to Rev. Henry Cogswell, an old-time friend of the cause.

—Rev. H. H. Hinman, of Beloit, Ala., is a delegate this week to the State Prohibition Convention at Birmingham.

—J. W. Beaton, of Cross Roads, Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, sends his renewal and adds: "The Cynosure is our favorite paper and we must have it."

—Would an anti-secret convention in your vicinity be a benefit and help to offset the many lodge meetings? Can you not open the way for one?

—Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, the noted W. C. T. U. evangelist, is quite broken down in health and is spending the fall and winter in the Battle Creek sanitarium.

—Rev. B. A. Ives is now settled at Normal, Madison county, Ala. He is one of the most prominent pastors of the A. M. A. church in the South and is strongly in sympathy with our work.

—Prof. Barton S. Fox, for several years professor of languages in Wheaton College, has recently requested that his Cynosure be sent to Alverton, Pa., by which we learn that he has settled at that place.

—Bro. J. P. Stoddard writes, Oct. 1st, from Richfield Springs, N. Y.: "I have engaged room and board with the chief of police, and entered upon a week's campaign for Christ and souls in this city. I need your prayers."

—Bro. J. A. Reed, of Morrisville, Vt., writes: "We agree with you perfectly on the question of secret societies, and preach against the system everywhere. I do not believe a man can be a Christian and belong to the oath-bound societies."

—Bro. W. D. Lowrey, of Senecaville, Ohio, writes: "I was pleased to see the picture of Bro. Phillips in a late Cynosure. I have taken the paper now about twenty-seven years. It is a good paper and should be taken by all that love righteous government."

—Bro. Alexander Schaap, editor of the Christian Israelite, published at 108 Park Row, New York, is a Cynosure subscriber and in hearty sympathy with our work. His paper is the organ of the Augustana Jewish mission and is entitled to the support of all interested in Israel's restoration.

—The Morgan monument on his grave at Batavia, N. Y., was dedicated Sept. 12–14, 1882, at a National Anti-secret Convention composed of more than 250 delegates. There were more than 2,000 persons contributed for the expense of the monument. They resided in Canada, Ontario and twenty-six of the United States and Territories.

—Rev. W. B. Stoddard writes from Washington, Oct. 1.: "I expect to-morrow to start north to get things in line for the Pennsylvania Convention, and hope to report next week. This city was visited by a terrific windstorm night before last. Several buildings were blown down, houses unroofed and trees piled in the streets. A part of the roof of our building went with the rest. We are not prepared for the rain that threatens to-night. The papers say the damage of the storm to this city will exceed half a million dollars. I have not learned of any killed. Many were injured; some will not recover from their injuries."

—We have published several times the following request of Bro. Wm. Adams, of Salem, Oregon, and deem it important to repeat it again. It is, that friends of the anti-secret cause in all parts of the land ascertain as quickly as possible what proportion of their present officers are members of the Odd-fellow and Masonic orders, none others need be mentioned, and how many of them are nominated in the different parties for the coming election, and report to the Cynosure at once. Bro. Adams says: "I believe it will startle and open the eyes of the most indifferent friends of reform, and show them and the orders themselves that the good old rule, 'by their fruits ye shall know them,' is good here and now, and we need not join them to find them out."

—Rev. J. E. A. Doermann is pastor of the Grace Lutheran church, corner of 13th and Corcoran streets, Washington, D. C. He is a reader of the Cynosure and in full sympathy with our work and is much beloved by his people. The Daily Post recently gave an interesting history of his congregation and a report of the cornerstone laying last week of his new church, which will be an elegant building, costing $18,000. The sermon and principal address were by Prof. Geo. H. Schodde, Ph. D., professor of theology in the Capital University of Columbus, Ohio. The Cynosure is always happy to hear of the prosperity of churches that bear a faithful testimony against the secret lodge.

—Rev. W. O. Dinius, one of the active members of our Board of Directors, has been preaching almost daily the past two weeks or more in Wisconsin, at Basswood and other places within the bounds of that U. B. Conference of which he is secretary. We understand that the Annual Conference was held at this time, and strong resolutions on lodgery were adopted as well as on other moral questions. This indeed was to be expected where such men were present as brethren Becker, Bender and Dinius. It was in this vicinity that Secretary Fenton sowed good seed not many months ago for Christians to cultivate. Bro. Dinius will spend some time now preaching in Huntington, Ind. When in Wisconsin he met our good friends Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Dawson, who believe in letting their light shine, and in getting their light from Him who is the light of the world.

—Rev. E. Thompson, of Senecaville, Ohio., writes: "I am glad to learn through the columns of the Cynosure that Joshua Levering, candidate for the presidency of the Prohibition party, is not a member of any secret society, which is at once to my mind very much in his favor. His non-connection with any of these orders should commit him to the favorable consideration of all anti-secret men, who expect to cast a vote at all, on that day. I am usually more or less chagrined when I know of any prominent candidate in the Prohibition ranks sustaining connection with the dark worldly orders, a thing wholly unbecoming a Christain reformer, being wholly out of harmony with the Christian profession or name. No true reformer should ever be found there. Can the Cynosure give us reliable information touching the whereabouts of Charles E. Bentley in this regard? He is said to be a minister of the Gospel, which fact ought to be sufficient to forever prevent any one from forming alliance with such orders, yet many such have very unwisely entered these worldly combinations to their shame and reproach. I hope he has not."

—Rev. C. N. Pond, at Oberlin, Ohio, is Northern Secretary of the Industrial Missionary Association of Alabama, located at Beloit, Dallas county. This is the association in which Bro. H. H. Hinman is one of the instructors and superintendents. In comparing it with the colored universities of Talladega, Tongaloo, Straight and others, working for the elevation of the colored race, Bro. Pond says: "They deal with the young; we with all ages. They train scholars; we, home makers and keepers. They draw youth from families; we set up the poor in families. They buy a little land, use and keep it; we buy a good deal and rent and sell it. Their center is the school with illimitable treasure flowing into it; our center is the home with divine currents of life running from it. We wish and speak and pray for the success of the other class of institutions. They are rearing scholars, writers, orators and statesmen to illume the republic and bless the world. We are giving stamina and righteous characters to the common people, the rank and file of our country's glory and the hope of the church universel in all lands and times."

THE UNEMPLOYED.

TRACING THEIR EVOLUTION DOWN TO THE END OF FEUDALISM.

An Interesting Condensation of Historical Incidents Bearing Upon the Labor Question—First Installment of an Able Treatment of This Vital Subject.

[Special Correspondence.]

The question of the unemployed is the one question in relation to labor which well to do philanthropists and students of charities are not able to pass over in silence. The sick, the aged, the destitute, children are factors in charity which show a less direct dependence on the wage question, but the problem of the tramp is one that steadily confronts these students and will not be put aside, for the ablebodied paupers fill our workhouses or almshouses and police or mission or slum lodgings in such numbers that the philanthropists are forced to try to find some solution of the problem. At present they are seeking an answer in the direction of a more or less costly machinery of trade schools for the younger element, of state farms, escape from which shall be a penitentiary offense, of stricter laws and of a stricter enforcement of the law. They do not even yet see clearly that to shut these tramps and vagrants out in one city or state is merely to send them on somewhere else. Turned from the closed police station lodgings in our cities, the vagrants crowd the slum lodgings and sleep hidden in the tenement house hallways and cellars. In New York the self committed people (ablebodied paupers) who are no longer admitted to the workhouse since the division of the department of charities and correction, now swell the almshouse census. Nor do these students of charities in the least realize the mockery of their elaborate and expensive scheme of state farms, designed to force a man to work who has very probably been reduced to his present degraded and hopeless condition by the failure to find employment, when he earnestly sought it before weeks of tramping the road in a vain search had taught him only too well how easy it was to live without work. These philanthropists hold that every ablebodied pauper is a pauper either because he was born lazy or was early contaminated by bad surroundings, or because he drinks. They tell you with truth that the question of the unemployed is not of modern origin, and to prove their assertion, so far as the English speaking race is concerned, they point to the early legislation against paupers and vagrants and to the poor law of Elizabeth, which, in its essence, endured far into our own century.

In this connection it may not be amiss to recall the history of the evolution of the English pauper and vagrant as we find it told in "Six Centuries of Work and Wages," by Thorold Rogers, supplemented by facts presented by another writer whose accuracy and care in statement have gone unquestioned amid the fiercest attacks upon the deductions he makes. The writer is Karl Marx, and the book is "Capital."

The fifteenth century was the golden age of the English laborer. High wages and cheap food left a wide margin between the workingman's earnings and his necessary expenditures for food, clothing and shelter. Serfdom had disappeared as a practical issue at the end of the fourteenth century. Free peasant proprietors formed the great majority of the population. The agricultural wage laborers consisted partly of peasants, who utilized their spare time by working on the large estates, partly of an independent special class of wage laborers. These, together with the rest of the peasants, enjoyed the usufruct of the common land, which gave pasture to their cattle and furnished firewood and timber. The towns also were markedly prosperous at this time. The capitalist artisan was just beginning to de velop as a social factor. Hitherto the usual custom had been that the farmer landowner or noble should provide the material raw and in bulk and pay the craftsmen wages.

This desirable condition of relatively high wages and relatively cheap food had not come about and been maintained without a struggle on the part of the laborer. The black death, which appeared in England late in the summer of 1348, swept away probably one-third of the population. The pestilence was followed by a rise in wages. "The rise in agricultural labor is," says Rogers (chapter 8), "all kinds of men's work being taken together, about 50 per cent, and of women's work fully 100 per cent. When taken together, the rise in the wages of artisans' labor is almost exactly the same as that effected in the case of the husbandman."

But it seems that agricultural produce experienced no rise, while everything to which labor added its principal volume rose proportionately in price. So the laborer and the artisan became for a time the masters of the situation. The landlord found a stationary or retrograde market for the produce he wanted to sell and a rapidly advancing market for what he wanted to buy. In this dilemma he went begging and bullying to king and parliament. The result was the famous statute of laborers, which remained the law of England until repealed by Elizabeth. The statute contained eight clauses ("Six Centuries of Work and Wages," chapter 8):

First.—No person under 60 years of age, whether serf or free, shall decline to undertake farm labor at the wages which had been customary in the king's twentieth year (1347), except they lived by merchandise, were regularly engaged in some mechanical craft, were possessed of private means or were occupiers of land. The lord was to have the first claim to the labor of his serfs, and those who decline to work for him or for others are to be sent to the common jail.

Second.—Imprisonment is decreed against all persons who may quit service before the time which is fixed in their agreements.

Third.—No other than the old wages are to be given, and the remedy against those who seek to get more is to be sought in the lord's court.

Fourth.—Lords of manors paying more than the customary amount are to be liable to treble damages.

Fifth.—Artificers are to be liable to the same conditions, the artificers enumerated being saddlers, tanners, furriers, shoemakers, tailors, smiths, carpenters, masons, tilers, parquetters, carters and others.

Sixth.—Food must be sold at reasonable prices.

Seventh.—Alms are strictly forbidden to ablebodied laborers.

Eighth.—Any excess of wages taken or paid can be seized for the king's use (toward the payment of certain taxes lately granted).

The statute provides for the difference between summer and winter wages and guards against the emigration of the town population to country places in summer. Coalition of the laborer is treated as a crime from the fourteenth century to 1825, when the laws against trades unions were repealed.

This statute of laborers was constantly reacted, with accumulated penalties and precautions. It proved impossible to enforce it. Parliament is always complaining that the law is evaded or disobeyed. As a matter of fact, it was passed only in the interest of a single class, the feudal landlords, and pretty much everybody else in the community, the lawyers, bailiffs and agents excepted, found it to his interest to disregard its provisions. The peasant farmer was prospering under conditions which went near to ruin the feudal landlords, because—though he, too, must sell in a cheap market and buy in a dear one—he found his own labor on his own holding and hired none, and he could, when his work was over, hire himself and his children out at high wages, or he might perhaps double his own holding on easy terms, for the lords were seeking tenants, not tenants seeking lords. Things went better with him than they had ever gone before; so the peasant farmer, the laborer and the artisan tried conclusions with the statute of laborers and with the landlords. The old system of capitalist cultivators began to give way, and the land was pretty generally leased to tenants for long terms of years. Ineffective as were the attempts at enforcing the statute regulating wages, they produced much irritation among the people and were, it is probable, intended to produce it. At last the feudal landlords, finding that the law failed to help them, took matters into their own hands and sought to reverse the customary commutations of money for labor by force. Wat Tyler's insurrection was the defiant reply of the people to this attempt, and parliament, frightened into giving way at last, tacitly dropped the cause of the landlords. The custom of commuting the old labor rents for money payments became universal, and the serfs became copy holders. High wages and cheap food remained for some 125 years the general rule under which the English working people lived. The long struggle was over, and feudal serfdom had passed away.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Oct. 11. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

Topic.—God or Mammon.—Math. vi, 19-24. (A temperance meeting suggested.)

The contest for rule in the human heart between God on the one side and the world in some form or the other is a very old one. It is as old as man himself. Yet it is ever new, for it is engaged in by every newcomer upon the stage of life.

Two worlds are placed before us in the Scriptures—the present one and the future one, earth and heaven. It is not to be wondered at that the present life so often seems to us the more important one. It is more real to us. We see it before our eyes every day and every hour. The other is distant. It is not so real; at least it does not appear so real, and men usually rely much upon appearance when they make a choice. Therefore it is necessary for the Scriptures to warn us against centering all our affections upon this world. It seems more real, but it soon passes away. The wealth, the pleasure, the honor, the attainments of this life are ours for but a very short time. Then they are gone as if the thief had broken in and stolen them. In the world to come it is different. Its pleasures and its treasures are eternal. Therefore we should choose heavenly wealth in preference to earthly possessions.

There is another reason why we should prefer God to Mammon. We cannot serve both. "No man can serve two masters." We cannot make two principles the ruling motives of our lives. One will gain the mastery. One must be chief and the other subordinate. "The chief end of man is to glorify God and to enjoy Him forever." There are other ends. Man must preserve his life, continue his kind, provide, in the present and for the future, for those dependent upon him and fulfill all obligations devolving upon him as a member of society and of the home and the state. But these are all subordinate aims. The chief end is to obey God, and He simply warns us against the mistake of making the subordinate aims the chief aim.

Does it pay to serve God instead of Mammon? God says it does. The experience of men proves that it does. To live for God and the future instead of for self and time may seem to some to be a waste of life. But time will prove that he is the one who wastes life, who prefers the flesh pots of Egypt to the blessing of Canaan.

Endeavor Prison Work.

This noble tribute to the value of the Christian Endeavor society in prisons, says The Golden Rule, is from Mr. C. L. Curry, warden of the Western Kentucky Branch prison at Eddyville: "Since the organization of the prison society some six months ago my punishment reports, I am glad to say, have been greatly reduced. The general discipline of the prison is greatly improved, and a decided improvement is noticeable in almost every phase of the prisoners' lives. Many of the convicts in this prison are, in my belief, living upright Christian lives, and all the result of the good influences of the Christian Endeavor society. The entire population of the prison is permitted to attend the Sunday services, and out of a total of 600 prisoners I have seen 300 in attendance at one time. This is remarkable when you take into consideration the fact that all our prisoners are given the liberty of the yard on Sunday, and the attendance is purely voluntary. The presence of one guard is all that is necessary in the chapel to maintain the best of order."

Never Satisfied.

The reason that he who is striving for wealth or renown for his own personal good or aggrandizement is never satisfied is because there is a want in his nature that is never met and never will be until he opens his purse or seeks to bless others. That man alone is truly blessed and happy who seeks to gain that he may bestow on others. And finally the great lesson taught us is that God Himself only lives and labors to save and bless all His creatures, and that His happiness and the perfection of His purpose will not be attained until every creature will be saved from sin, misery and death.—Conversation.

Humility.

Humility is a grace of God. It is not a natural growth. Self conceit is of the devil. We are warned against it as dangerous to the soul. "Pride goeth before destruction and a haughty spirit before a fall." He that is lifted up with pride is in danger of "the condemnation of the devil." It lies at the root of all rebellion against God, and it leads to the contempt of the rights of others and disregard of just obligations to them. But wisdom is with the lowly.—Christian Instructor.

One of the Mysteries.

Why any man should glory in his ignorance of a thing that deeply interests the public mind is one of the mysteries we cannot understand. — American Friend.

TINY CABINETS OF GLASS.

An Adaptation of the Popular Glass and Ribbon Box Idea.

Those who admired the glass and ribbon boxes much in vogue a few years ago will be ready to attempt some new things in that line which are now seen. These are glass cabinets. They are made of ground glass and clear glass, the panels joined by ribbon or by the better and not more expensive way of having an intelligent carpenter join them with wood. Either ground or clear glass, or both combined, may be used. The ground glass can be decorated — the rough side being out in every case— with conventional scrolls and simple landscapes in gold and aluminium paint.

Photographs may be tacked behind the clear glass or the glass left to disclose the contents of the cabinet.

Several shelves may be placed inside these cabinets, the height of these little houses or pagodas varying from 13 to 25 inches.

By cementing cut glass jewels in the scrollwork designs and gilding the woodwork a rich effect is secured.

Mourning Costumes.

The mourning period for the widow, one young enough to expect to lay aside her black, lasts two years. During the first year she is limited to gowns of henrietta cloth trimmed with crape, writes Isabel A. Mallon in The Ladies' Home Journal. The next six months she may wear eudora cloth with lighter trimmings of crape, and for the next six months eudora cloth, crepon, serge or any all black material she may select, without crape decorations. Mourning for a parent requires a dress of henrietta or eudora cloth rather simply trimmed with crape and having on the bonnet a crape veil that reaches just below the belt. For a brother or sister a gown of black serge, with collar, belt and cuffs of crape and very short crape veil, is proper. The bonnet worn by a widow is really nothing more than a foundation for holding the veil. The milliner fits a frame to the head, covers it plainly with crape and then drapes the veil over it. This veil hangs below the knees in front and is about the same length behind. Almost all widows wear white crimped ruching inside their bonnets.

Is Paper Furniture Coming?

Just at present an experiment is being made at building all the furniture of unpretentious form of compressed paper. This does for the living rooms what aluminium has done for the kitchen—literally decreases the weight to a point where a child is able to move the largest piece. It is not proposed in this process to detract in the least from beauty of shape or grace and elaborateness of ornamentation, but to lessen the price as well as the weight. The first products in the way of paper furniture were finished in enamel paint, and a double colonial bed of paper, with all its clothing—its pillows and mattresses—was lifted about by a 16-year old girl. "But will this new material wear?" is the query sure to be asked by housekeepers who are hopefully testing the new pressed paper and aluminium bathtubs and finding them much to their liking.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Influence of Women's Clubs.

Mr. Walter Damrosch, the distinguished musician and composer of New York, says of the women's clubs of the west: "The especially interesting features of the artistic life in western towns are the women's clubs, and in these the culture and intellectual life seem to be centered. They have a tremendous influence, and it is through their efforts that fine concerts are given and that the artists are persuaded to come there. We know very little in New York of what happens in other cities of the country, but it would surprise New Yorkers to see the activity with which the club women advance the interests of culture in western towns."

A Pretty Teacloth.

A teacloth a yard square is made from pale blue linen ornamented by renaissance lace braid in cream white. These braids are laid on the stamped design and sewed down along the edges. The design itself is a wide band in conventional figures that extend diagonally across the cloth in leaves and flowers. The same design is used in the corners. Each side the band there is appliqued a wide band of torchon lace in a beautiful open pattern. The same lace is used as a frill around the cloth. The design would be pretty for a bedroom stand cover if worked on pale green or canary colored linen.—New York Post.

Will Wear a Police Star.

Mrs. S. V. Root of St. Paul has been appointed by Mayor Moran as a special police officer, possessing full power to make arrests. Mrs. Root will not patrol a beat, yet she will wear a star. She desired the appointment to aid her work in connection with the Rescue home, an institution for the reformation of fallen women, with which she has long been connected.

HIGHLY SPICED BREATHS.

Women Should Avoid Them In Choosing Partners For Life.

A peculiar breach of promise suit was brought in Manchester, England. A maiden appeals to the court for damages now that a certain innkeeper refuses to take her in marriage after encouraging her to hope. It is proved that he had the delirium tremens in her house several times. She gets a verdict of £10. Why any woman wants to marry the delirium tremens we know not. She deserves congratulation at escape from such a man instead of £10 for the loss of him. No woman can afford to take a man if she has to have delirium tremens thrown into the bargain. A man is very well, but better no man at all than such an accompaniment.

Let women be cautious how they marry men with highly spiced breath, the spice put in to hide whisky odor. Better pay £10 to get rid of him than sue him for £10 because he does not marry you. If a man makes for himself unhappy connubial relations, he may run away and so get rid of them, but for a woman wrongly affianced there is no escape. The young man may have glossy hair and bright eyes and immaculate broadcloth, but if he drinks, even moderately, make up your mind that before 35 he will do one of two things—either stop drinking entirely or else go to perdition, and if he does the latter he will probably take his wretched wife along with him.—Christian Herald.

CRIME AND DRINK.

Most of the Inmates of Prisons Are Addicted to the Use of Alcohol.

The report of the Wisconsin state prison at Waupun, for the two years 1893 and 1894, shows that of 300 prisoners in 1893 there were 44 claiming to be temperate, 169 were moderate drinkers, and 87 confessed to intemperance, making 85 per cent who confessed to the use of liquors. In 1894 of 395 prisoners 47 claimed to be temperate, 254 moderate drinkers and 94 intemperate, so that 88 per cent confessed to the use of drink.

The report of the Connecticut state prison for the year ending Sept. 30, 1895, shows that of 395 prisoners 209, or 52.9 per cent, confess to the use of drink as the cause of their crimes, and 53 more, or 13.4 per cent, make the cause to be bad company, which probably means drink.

The warden of the penitentiary at Anamosa, Ia., reports for the year ending June 30, 1895, that of 640 prisoners only 195 do not use liquor, making 70 per cent who indulge in drink.

Oregon state penitentiary report for 1895 states that "about 80 per cent acknowledge to have been more or less addicted to the use of intoxicants," and that "about 60 per cent attribute their downfall to the use of intoxicants." The average number of convicts was 360.—Exchange.

Rum Darkened His Life.

One gentleman told us that his father was an inebriate, says a writer in The Banner of Gold, and when the mother died there weren't clothes enough to dress the children to attend the funeral. All his childhood was imbittered by the curse. He had always been a total abstainer, taught his children that way, and yet two weeks ago his son was killed while drunk. What a pitiful sight! An old man of 80 years, with a childhood shadowed by rum, and now, at the eventide of life, the same dark shadow comes again.

Labor and Liquor.

The liquor traffic takes directly and indirectly $2,000,000,000 from legitimate industries and cuts the amount of wages which go into the people's pockets almost in four and reduces the number of those employed by such capital by about 78 per cent.

In addition to all this, it crowds the labor market by forcing woman and child labor upon it and demoralizes it by the ruinous competition which drinking men everywhere bring to sober labor.—American Issue.

The Temperance Banner.

We'll lift the temperance banner high
And wave it o'er the land
Till sober men and quiet homes
Abound on every hand;
Till men no more their fellow men
With alcohol inflame,
To wrong their neighbor, curse their God
And blight their lives with shame.

We'll lift the temperance banner high
And summon to our aid
The loving mother, faithful sire,
The stalwart youth and maid,
Till mothers' tears shall cease to flow
And fathers' hearts to break;
Till youth and maid hear wisdom's voice—
"The mocking wine forsake!"

We'll lift the temperance banner high
In sight of those who sink
Oppressed by fetters forged for them
By the great archfiend, Drink.
We'll bid them come and join our ranks,
Assail their mighty foe,
Till he no longer stalks abroad
Dispensing death and woe.

We'll lift the temperance banner high
Where gather in their might
The undismayed minority
To battle for the right.
We'll rally in the name of God
And fight without a fear
Till hearts and homes and native land
Are filled with temperance cheer.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON III, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, OCT. 13.

Text of the Lesson, I Kings iv, 25-34. Memory Verses, 29, 30—Golden Text, I Sam. ii, 30—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

25. "And Judah and Israel dwelt safely, every man under his vine and under his fig tree, from Dan even to Beer-sheba, all the days of Solomon." For a little while he seems to have reigned peacefully over all the territory promised to Abraham. Compare verse 21 with Gen. xv, 18. It was a faint foreshadowing of Jer. xxiii, 5, 6, when the Lord shall raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. In His days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely, and this is His name, whereby He shall be called "the Lord, our Righteousness." Then there shall be war no more, and Israel shall walk in the name of the Lord their God forever and ever.

26. "And Solomon had 40,000 stalls of horses for his chariots and 12,000 horsemen." Compare chapters x, 26-29; xi, 1-6, with Deut. xvii, 15-17, and in the light of those passages this verse of our lesson will make one tremble for Solomon. "Woe to them that go down to Egypt for help and stay on horses and trust in chariots because they are many and in horsemen because they are strong, but they look not unto the Holy One of Israel, neither seek the Lord" (Isa. xxxi, 1). Better to say, "Some trust in chariots, and some in horses, but we will remember the name of the Lord our God" (Ps. xx, 7). Israel was chosen to be separate from and unlike all other nations, the great distinguishing feature of their national life being the presence in their midst of the living and true God as their King and Lawgiver, Protector and Deliverer, in whom alone they were to trust.

27. "And those officers provided victual for King Solomon, and for all that came unto King Solomon's table, every man in his month. They lacked nothing." It must have been a great company to provide for and must have required much wisdom and forethought to have sufficient for all. But the God of Israel fed millions supernaturally for 40 years, and they lacked nothing. The Lord Jesus fed more than 5,000 one afternoon in an emergency, and He had only a few loaves and fishes to do it with, but all were filled and an abundance over. When He sent the disciples, without purse or scrip, they testified that they lacked nothing (Luke xxii, 35).

28. "Barley also and straw for the horses and dromedaries brought they unto the place where the officers were, every man according to his charge." This also must have been a great care, but our God careth for all creatures which He has made. "The eyes of all wait upon thee, and thou givest them their meat in due season. Thou openest thine hand and satisfiest the desire of every living thing" (Ps. cxlv, 15, 16.) Even Darius ordered from his royal bounty all that Israel had need of day by day without fail (Ez. vi, 9.) How much more will our God supply all the need of all His creatures (Phil. iv, 19.)

29. "And God gave Solomon wisdom and understanding exceeding much and largeness of heart, even as the sand that is on the seashore." This compared with verse 20, as mentioned in last week's notes, indicates wisdom sufficient for every difficulty that might arise in all the nation. God careth for each individual, and no child of God should hesitate to say, "He careth for me," "He thinketh upon me." The wisdom and understanding of Solomon were the gift of God. He could take no credit to himself for it, and it was that God, the God of Israel, might be honored, and not Solomon.

30. "And Solomon's wisdom excelled the wisdom of all the children of the east country and all the wisdom of Egypt," because it was the wisdom of God and not of men. So was it also with Joseph in Egypt and Daniel in Babylon, for each was filled with the wisdom of God. The apostle Paul is careful to tell us that his speech and preaching were not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power, that their faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God (I Cor. ii, 4, 5.) He also tells us that Christ is the wisdom of God, and the power of God (I Cor. i, 24.) A study of these two chapters is bracing to the simple minded.

31. "For he was wiser than all men, and his fame was in all nations round about." For the reason already stated, Solomon's wisdom excelled all others, and the fame that spread abroad was "the fame of Solomon concerning the name of the Lord" (chapter x, 1). The most interesting part of this record is the fact that He who gave Solomon such wisdom is also made unto us wisdom (I Cor. i, 30, 31), not, however, that we might glory in ourselves, but in the Lord, our wisdom. His thoughts and ways are as far above ours as heaven is above the earth. Therefore it is surely wisdom to let all our thoughts be brought into captivity to Him (Isa. lv, 8, 9; II Cor. x, 5).

32. "And he spake three thousand proverbs, and his songs were a thousand and five." Many of his proverbs we have and will have a study therein next week. Of all his songs we have the one called "The Song of Songs," which is all concerning Him who is altogether lovely. And yet some of the wise people of Chicago decided that it was not fit to form a part of a new Bible which has been specially prepared for the youth of that city. Truly the wisdom of men is foolishness with God. David said that his psalms were spoken by the Spirit of God (II Sam. xxiii, 2), and doubtless Solomon would acknowledge the same, for it is written very plainly that his wisdom was the gift of God.

33. "And he spake of trees, from the cedar tree that is in Lebanon even unto the hyssop that springeth out of the wall. He spake also of beasts and of fowl and of creeping things and of fishes." Thus he would seem to have been a great student, and next to the law of God what could he study with more profit than the works of God? All study must, however, be to the glory of God, and that we may the better know Him, for all must be subject to Him who in all things must have the pre-eminence (Col. i, 18).

34. "And there came of all people to hear the wisdom of Solomon, from all kings of the earth which had heard of his wisdom." So it was with "a greater than Solomon," and so it will be in the coming days when Jerusalem shall again be the throne of the Lord and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem. May it be our daily delight to sit at His feet and hear His word, thus giving Him pleasure and bringing the greatest possible profit to ourselves for time and eternity (Jer. iii, 17; Luke x, 39).

A petition has been filed at Columbus, O., which shows that Allen G. Thurman was badly in debt when he died.

J. H. Switzer died at North Chicago from drinking wood alcohol.

Registration at Boston for the state and national election shows a total of 94,500 names enrolled.

A malignant fever has been raging in Turkestan for the last two months. Ten thousand persons, mostly children, have died.

The Peruvian government has ordered the prefect of Cuzco to close immediately the English college there which was opened by American missionaries.

The fact that the dreaded bubonic disease has obtained a strong footing in Bombay is established beyond question, and the outbreak is attributed to rats, which are known to have been infected with bacillus from Hong Kong.

The Connecticut Populist state convention Saturday appointed a committee to arrange for a fusion with the Democrats.

The London board of trade reports of railroad accidents during 1895 show that eighty-three passengers were killed and 2,100 wounded on British railways, but only five of the deaths were due to smash-ups; 929,770,909 passengers were carried exclusive of holders of season tickets.

STRIKE GETTING MORE SERIOUS.

Ottawa, Ont., Oct. 3.—The Canadian Pacific telegraphic strike is getting more serious. The men on the Montreal and Ottawa section of the road who have so far been at work joined the strike last night and left their keys.

Montreal, Oct. 3.—The wires of the Canadian Pacific railway have been tampered with in two places where they were tied together with piano wire. A reward of $1,000 has been offered for evidence to convict any one of tampering with the wires. The Dominion government has shown its interest in the strike of the Canadian Pacific telegraphers by asking the company for a statement of its case, to which Vice President Shaughnessy has replied by wire to Ottawa, saying there is no qusetion involved except whether the company shall ignore its rules and deal directly with its employes, without regard to the executive officers.

Assistant General Manager Tait has wired to all points that the train dispatchers and operators who had stopped work have now had two days in which to consider the magnitude of their blunder, and that if they desired to resume the places they had voluntarily given up they must do so before 5 p. m. yesterday or their places would be filled by new men. The message also stated that many men on the Ontario and Quebec division and on the main line east of North Bay have already gone back to work, and that the company can fill every existing vacancy with good men without delay.

Great Damage Done at Syracuse.

Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 1.—The severest gale ever known in this city raged between the hours of 3:30 and 5:30 yesterday morning. Thousands of dollars' worth of damage was done. No lives are reported lost. The telephone, telegraph, street railway and fire systems were demolished. Trees were uprooted, houses were unrooted, chimneys were blown over and chaos prevailed for a time. The big grand stand at Kirk Driving park was completely demolished.

Dangers in Food Supplies.

A lecturer on cooking the other day made the surprising statement that the asylums are being filled with country people in much greater proportions than city people, mainly because they were more careless in regard to their food While a diet of fat meats may be more characteristic of people living in rural districts there are other dangers just as insidious to which the residents of the big cities are subject. Scientific research is every day emphasizing the fact that man is what he eats.

Probably there have been no more active advocates of pure food than the manufacturers of Royal Baking Powder. The vigorous campaign against adulterations carried on by them was no doubt due in a large part to the fact that in scarcely any other division of food supplies are harmful ingredients used lavishly as in the compounding of baking powders. The absolute purity of the Royal has become in the nature of an axiom, and its proprietors are naturally disposed to spread broadcast the doctrine of pure food. It has been claimed, without contradiction, that no other article of human food has ever received so many emphatic endorsements from the highest authorities.—Journal of Health.

EMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST TO OUR OWN PEOPLE.

ome of the Principal Happenings of the Week Reported by Telegraph and Placed for Convenience of Our Readers—Matters of Interest.

Springfield, Ills., Oct. 5.—The forty-ird annual state fair closed Saturday nder most favorable auspices; the eather was perfect and the attendance he largest Saturday ever experienced y the associaton. The receipts of the eek will fall far short of 1895, owing ntirely to the inclement weather of he first three days, yet they are as rge as any year previous to 1894. The xhibits were three or four times more umerous than any previous fair held y the board. The great improvements ade last week in erecting additional arns, stalls, etc., consumed a large ortion of the receipts; had it not been or this the board would have come it many thousand dolars ahead.

Saturday was Christian Endeavor nd Bicycle day. The delegates to the tate Christian Endeavor convention ere given the freedom of the grounds s guests of the board. They held a ass-meeting on the grounds and assed scathing resolutions denouncng the Midway and other side shows s highly immoral, and concluded by tating that they would remain away rom another year's fair if the shows ere not eliminated.

The bicycle races were nine in number, for diamond, gold and silver edals; bicycles, watches, umbrellas nd other articles. Some two hundred ntries were made, and each event was f interest. Smelzer, of Peoria, won he mile-novice; Peabody, of Chiago, he half-mile open; Ingraham, of Dixn, the mile professional; Peabody, the wo mile state championship; Ingraam the 2-mile professional handicap.

PRAIRIE STATE ENDEAVORERS

Determine to Try to Influence Legislation on Reform Lines.

Springfield, Oct. 5.—The last day's session of the state convention of the Christian Endeavor union began with a sunrise prayer meeting at 6:30 a. m. at the Central Baptist church. The pulpits in most of the Protestant churches were occupied at the morning services by Christian Endeavor visitors. A state Christian citizenship league was formed and an executive committee elected.

The New league will have the co-operation of the Christian League, the Epworth League, the Baptist Young Peoples' Union, the Young Men's Christian Association and similar organizations. It will have representatives present at the sessions of the legislature to work against all bills detrimental to Christian sentiment in the state, and some special legislation on reform lines will be attempted.

The convention closed last night with three great mass-meetings, the principal one being held in representative hall. Governor Altgeld made a short address.

Gold Democrats File Their Papers.

Springfield, Ills., Oct. 3.—The gold standard Democrats through C. A. Ewing, of Decatur, the chairman, and C. A. Williamson, of Chicago, the secretary, of the state committee, yesterday filed with the secretary of state the nomination papers of the party under the name of "Independent Democratic." There were 30,437 names on the petition. Five thousand more names were added yesterday. Secretary of State Hinrichsen accepted the papers and placed the file mark upon them. He said that the state board of review would have to decree whether the ticket would be placed upon the official ballot.

TROUBLE ON THE GREAT LAKES.

Wild Wind Kicks Up a Big Sea and One Boat Goes Down.

Chicago, Oct. 1.—The storm of Tuesday night and yesterday kicked up a terrific sea on the great lakes, but up to this writing but four lives are reported lost—those by the foundering of the barge Sumatra, loaded with railway iron, which went down like a shot off the government pier at Milwaukee. She had been constantly leaking and the crew had hard work to keep her from sinking all night. Off Milwaukee she got in the trough of the sea and her hatches were washed off. She whistled for help and the tug Simpson was sent to her.

Before the tug could get alonside the Sumatra went down, carrying to death Arthur Burnsted, Charles Hemmer, Patrick Peterson and Peter Anderson—all of West Bay City, Mich. The life saving crew had the hardest and most perilous kind of work to save the remainder of the crew.

At Chicago a schooner broke from her moorings in the harbor and did a good deal of damage to a dozen or so yachts by being driven in among them and into collision with them.

WORKMEN BEG FOR BREAD.

Let Those Who Believe Labor Has Nothing to Complain of Read This.

Eight hundred men gathered in the vacant lot adjoining Indiana avenue and Front street yesterday and clamored for bread. They were not the habitually idle nor the voluntary tramp. Each had a stake in the community in the shape of residence and citizenship. Many had given stronger hostage to fortune and were the breadwinners of families, the rent producers of small homes which up to 1893 they had been able to maintain in comfort. The sudden stress of business and industrial depression of that time had exhausted savings of years and had brought many of them to the verge of want, some to absolute starvation.

The wisdom of experience led to the appointment of a committee, which came to be known as the Kensington Aid association, which in its organized function was able to obtain the needed assistance and distribute it in a way that precluded all suspicions of interested motives of the parties concerned. Happily the period of distress was brief, and by Thanksgiving day of that year the association was able to ask discharge, all the duties of its voluntary service having been rendered. Hundreds had enjoyed the benefits of the funds this committee distributed and had been able to save their self respect from the degradation of asking alms personally.

Again the wolf is howling at the door of the textile operatives of Kensington. A Press reporter yesterday found hundreds of them on the sidewalks or seated in knots on the boulders left by the excavations in the adjacent lots. They had not gathered there merely for the meeting that was to come. Sitting on the rocks and chatting on the corners have been almost their sole occupation for the past six months. The men leave their homes as early as they needed to when each day meant dollars earned. Old habits of early rising are persistent. The days, however, begin with a weary round of inquiry when manufacture is to be resumed, and then with a more tiresome quest for anything to do which can earn a few pennies for the family sustenance.

A limited tour of calls at the little houses in the vicinity gave ample confirmation of the stories told by the men, be it said, with an unwillingness that seemed genuine and bred of dread of being classed as paupers. Houses that a few years ago had all the comforts and a few of the luxurious trappings of modern living were barer than the dormitories of almshouses. Parlor furniture had long ago gone to the second-hand shops. The space was turned into lodgings for rent, which, if let, were hired by tenants with whom the sublessors had to be as patient as the landlords are with them themselves. A table, three or four rickety chairs, bare floors, and in most cases larders as bare, were the rule. Back of all this was the awful vision of distraint for rent long overdue and winter at hand.

Here is an instance of the straits to which some have been put:

A comparatively young man was arrested a day or two ago for stealing some potted plants which stood in the doorway of a residence and selling them. He was arraigned before Magistrate Kochersperger and questioned. The poor fellow admitted his guilt, saying: "I have been out of work and unable to provide for my family. I saw a chance to take those plants. I did so and sold them. I took the money and gave it to my wife, who bought food for the children with it."

The wife was called and said that she supposed her husband had worked for the money. The magistrate turned to the prosecutor and asked him if he wanted to press the charge. He replied in the negative. Then, with tears in his eyes, the man who had committed the theft turned to the owner of the articles and promised to pay him for them as soon as he obtained employment.

There are thousands of men in the same predicament. Those of the mills not already closed down are working on such short time that the employees receive barely enough to procure the necessities of life. To make matters worse, the real estate owners feel that they are unable to house the occupants of their dwellings unless some rent is paid. Many householders are months in arrears with their rent and have no hope of paying what they owe. It is said that property owners anticipate holding a meeting, the result of which will be that unless they receive their rent the tenants must be evicted.—Philadelphia Press.

Who Are the People?

A terse but logical reply would be "everybody," but there are people and people, and, strange as it may seem, those who are of least consequence in the earth are considered by a custom ridden and misinformed community to be the people.

All human life is sustained by labor. Without labor there is no means for man to live.

If all men were mere idlers, or lawyers, or bankers, or money lenders, or politicians, or clergymen, or employers, there would be no wheat, no cotton, no iron, no houses, no cloths, no papers, and neither would gold nor silver be used as money. If man will live, he must labor.

It is acknowledged, however, that many of those who labor the least enjoy the most of the fruits of the earth. As a matter of fact they are but parasites. They live on labor, not by labor.

Unless the immutable laws of the universe shall be changed, without labor man would cease to incumber the earth.

Civilization advances in a corresponding ratio with man's ability to labor most effectively. It must, therefore, be apparent that the people are in reality those who labor, or, in other words, those who through applied effort force the earth to yield up its fruits for man's use.

Nonproductive effort is dependent absolutely upon the productivity of the manual laborer.

I therefore say, without fear of contradiction, that the people of most account, and those who should be of first consideration under any and all circumstances, and those who are alone vitally necessary to the sustenance of life and to the maintenance of our complex society or civilization, are the workers.

They are the people, and sophistry and verbal jugglery cannot gainsay it. —George G. Childs in Boston Globe.

Free Labor Cheaper Than Convicts.

A. Priesmeyer of St. Louis is one of the largest and oldest contractors of convict labor. His firm is engaged in the manufacture of boots and shoes, and at the present time employs about 160 convicts in the penitentiary. He says the cheapness of outside labor has left little or no margin for the contractors of convict labor, and few of the firms will make anything this year. This may seem a little odd in view of the fact that the contractors pay but 50 cents a day for each ablebodied convict, but Mr. Priesmeyer has been in the business so many years that he ought to be the very best of authority on the subject.—St. Louis Republic.

221 West Madison Street, Chicago, Ill.

James G. Birney, Candidate of the Liberty Party for President, was a Freemason, "but never entered a lodge after he joined the church, and, as his sons grew up, he cautioned them against joining any secret order."—Gen. Wm. Birney.

Lewis Tappan, private journal, 1814: "Dr. Dixwell gave me lectures on Masonry at his house." "In September left the lodge." Letter, Jan. 21, 1829: "I am free to say that I henceforth renounce Freemasonry, considering it a useless and profane institution."

Disraeli, Lord Beaconsfield: "In conducting the governments of the world there are not only sovereigns and ministers, but secret orders to be considered, which have agents everywhere—reckless agents, who countenance assassination, and, if necessary, can produce a massacre."

Thurlow Weed: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the Anti-masonic excitement by a sincere desire, first to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of secret societies."

Charles Sumner, in a Letter to Samuel D. Greene: "I find two powers here in Washington in harmony, and both are antagonistical to our free institutions, and tend to centralization and anarchy—Freemasonry and Slavery; and they must both be destroyed if our country is to be the home of the free, as our ancestors designed it."

A. M. Sullivan, Irish Leader: "I had not studied in vain the history of secret, oath-bound associations. I regard them with horror. I knew all that could be said as to their advantages in revolutionizing a country, but even in the firmest and best of hands they had a direct tendency to demoralization, and are often on the whole more perilous to society than open tyranny."

JAMES MADISON, Letter dated Montpelier, Jan. 24, 1832: "I never was a Mason, and no one perhaps could be more a stranger to the principles, rites and fruits of the institution. From the number and character of those who now support the charges against Masonry, I cannot doubt that it is at least susceptible of abuses outweighing any advantages promised by its patrons."

Horace Greeley: "Many persons were brought to trial on account of the murder of Morgan, but no one was judicially found guilty of murder. It was established by seceding Masons that the oaths—at least in some of the highest degrees—that were administered, and taken by those admitted to Masonic lodges, disqualified them from serving as jurors in any case where a brother Mason of like degree was a party, and his antagonist was not."

JOSEPH RITNER, Governor of Pennsylvania, 1837: "If it be true as the lamented Colden (himself one of the initiated) declared, that many a Mason became a great man but no great man ever became a Mason, how nearly does it concern the youth of our country to pause and reflect before they commit their present standing and future reputation to the keeping of a society, which for its cold-hearted and selfish purposes could immolate even the fame of Washington at the shrine of its abominations."

GEORGE WASHINGTON, to Friends in 1794, Quoted by Myron Holley: "The real people occasionally assembled in order to express their sentiments on political sentiments, ought never to be confounded with permanent, self-appointed societies, usurping the right to control constituted authorities, and to dictate to public opinion. While the former was entitled to respect, the latter was incompatible with all government, and must either sink into general dis-esteem, or finally overturn the established order of things."

JOHN ADAMS: "The use of my father's name f[or] the purpose of which Mr. Sheppard would now appl[y] it, is an injury to his memory, which I deem it my duty, as far as may be in my power, to redress. . . . While Mr. Gridley lived, he was the intimate friend, personal and professional, of my father. He died in 1767. My father often resorted to him for friendly counsel, and, as he was Grand Master of the lodge, once asked his advice, whether it was worth his while to become a member of the society. In the candor of friendship, Mr. Gridley answered him—NO,—adding that by aggregation to the society a young man might acquire a little artificial support but that he did not need it, and that there was nothing in the Masonic institution worthy of his seeking to be associated with it. So said at that time the Grand Master of the Massachusetts Masons, Jeremy Gridley; and such I have repeatedly heard my father say, was the reason why he never joined the lodge. The use of the name of Washington, to give an odor of sanctity to the institution as it now stands exposed to the world, is in my opinion as unwarrantable as that of my father's name."—Letter of John Quincy Adams, Aug. 22, 1831.

FURIOUS TEMPEST.

FRIGHTFUL HAVOC IN FLORIDA.

Eleven Killed at Savannah, Ga., and $1,000,000 in Property Wiped Out of Existence—The Raging Storm Sweeps Over Pennsylvania and the Loss of Life and Property Is Heavy—National Capital and Vicinity Feel the Force of the Gale.

Memphis, Oct. 1. — The Commercial-Appeal has the following special this morning:

Jacksonville, Fla., Oct. 1.—It is a conservative estimate to say that fifty people have lost their lives from Tuesday's hurricane, and the number may run much higher. News from that portion of the state where the storm first struck is very slow in coming, for the wires are down and the railroads are impassable. Wrecking parties which went out yesterday morning have not returned, and it will be some hours before the full extent of the damage is known. The hurricane struck Florida at Cedar Keys, and reports show that it passed in its path of destruction over twenty towns and villages, and that between thirty and forty people have certainly been killed. Cedar Keys is about 100 miles southwest of Jacksonville. The hurricane which had been churning the water of the gulf first struck this place, a village of 1,500 inhabitants.

Cedar Keys Entirely Swept Away.

The only report which has come concerning Cedar Keys is that the town has been swept away and many lives have been lost. This report comes from Gainesville, which is fifty miles away. Nobody has been able to get anything direct from Cedar Keys. Moving northeasterly, the storm struck Williston, where eleven houses were blown down, one person was killed and several so badly hurt that it is expected that they will die. Near here is a large turpentine farm where state convicts are employed. Twenty of these were huddled together in a cabin. A heavy tree was blown across the cabin and six of the convicts were crushed to death. In Alachua county the storm did frightful work. In Gainesville the Methodist church and about twenty residences and business houses were destroyed, and while a unmber of people were hurt no fatalities are reported.

A Dozen More Deaths Reported.

At LaCrosse fifteen buildings were destroyed, and Rev. W. A. Barr, Mrs. F. F. McIntosh and her baby are reported killed. Near there four laborers who were in a cabin at a turpentine farm were crushed by falling trees. Newberry in West Alachua is totally wrecked. C. J. Eastlin, Mrs. Nancy Mosa. Frank Olmstead and David Jones were killed. At High Springs, Melissa Harden, Jane Morris and Sallie Nobles, colored women, are reported to have been killed. At this place a number of people took refuge in a box car which was in the path of the cyclone. It was blown along the track and then off it a distance of fifty feet, and every person in it was badly injured. Steve Mason and George Johnson have since died. At Gracy, a small place, twelve houses were razed, a woman was killed, but a babe at her breast was unhurt, although it had been carried some distance by the force of the wind.

Other Details of the Horror.

At Lake Butler, Welborn, Art Lake City and other points twenty other persons were killed and many wounded, while four or five towns have been entirely blown away. Many of the dead are women and children. The money loss in this state is estimated at $2,000,000, but this may be excessive.

THE DESTRUCTION AT SAVANNAH.

Loss of Life Reaches Eleven and of Property One Million Dollars.

Savannah, Ga., Oct. 1.—The hurricane which swept over Savannah Tuesday cost nearly a dozen lives and entailed a financial loss of nearly $1,000,000. Each report received is worse than at first. It was thought that only one death would be the result of the hurricane, but the number has increased until there are eleven persons reported dead. The following is a list of the dead: J. W. WallaceJohnston; Capt. C. E. Murray, of the tug Robert Turner, and the followin,all colored—Mary Waring, Eliza Betty, Fannie McFall, Ruby Williams, Julie Jackson, two deck hands of the Robert Turner, an unknown man and an infant.

A great many persons were injured. The most seriously hurt are: Fannie Jackson, back broken; W. F. Thompson, back broken; Ab Farnham, leg broken; James Smith, seriously hurt struck by faling timbers; S. Roddy Pritchard, hurt by falling bricks; Ben West, colored, struck by falling barn; Joseph Hamilton, colored, struck by falling barn; John Wilson, hit by falling chimney; John Sheehan, struck by falling timbers.

Many prominent buildings and hundreds of residences are badly wrecked, and the most beautiful trees in the city are down. The loss to shipping will amount to over $100,000. The most serious casualties were the capsizing in mid-stream in the Savannah river of the Norwegian bark Rosenius; the grounding of the Morgan boat Cab; drifting of the Norwegian bark R. D. Metcalf, and the total loss of the tug Robert Turner. The steamer Governor Safford, of the Beach & Miller line, is aground in Copper river, and small craft has suffered much, many naptha launches and small sailing vessels having gone out to sea. The Tybee railroad is badly damaged, many bridges being out of plumb. Tybee, Thunderbolt, Montgomery and Isle of Hope, all prominent resorts near this city, were hurt by the blow.

The wind began to rise at 11:30 and at 12 o'clock was blowing at forty-eight miles an hour. At 12:15 a velocity of sixty-six miles had been reached and the air was literatlly filled with flying debris. At that time the instrument at the observer's office was blown out of working order. A few minutes afterward the wind had reached a velocity of eighty miles an hour or over. At noon the barometer had dropped to 29:20 and at 12:30 it was 28:95. After that further reports from it could not be secured. The storm was over in two hours and the sun shining brightly.

RUIN ON THE WINGS OF THE GALE.

Summary of the Tempest Havoc Played in the Keystone State.

Lancaster, Pa., Oct. 1.—Late last evening telegraphic and telephonic communication had been established with the surrounding counties and the later reports confirm the earlier advices of the wide extent of yesterday morning's cyclonic storm. Every section of the country has been heard from, and the story is that ruin rode in the wake of the gale. While an estimate of the total loss is necessarily speculative there does not seem any doubt that it will easily reach $1,000,000, and many largely exceed that amount. In this city the individual losses are, as a rule, comparatively small; but there are hundreds of them, which will make the aggregate great.

The storm outside the city was scarcely less severe and of course the destruction of the Pennsylvania railroad bridge across the Susquehanna at Columbia overshadowed all else in relative importance. The bridge, which comprised twenty-seven spans, and cost nearly $1,000,000, was completely demolished. It was insured for $300,000 and everything was carried away except the stone piers, the single iron span and one of the shore spans. It is settled that there was no loss of life, as search of the bridge has failed to reveal the bodies of two men whom it was feared were on the bridge when it was swept away by the hurricane.

Five miles above Reading the cast house of the Temple furnace at Temple station was blown down by the wind and nearly a dozen workmen were buried in the ruins. The men were pinned down by the heavy timbers, and it was some time before they could be reached. Two men were killed —Edward Rismiller and Samuel Trout —and five severely injured. At Natalie the storm shook down a stove in a tenement, set the house on fire and burned six tenements. With these houses were burned six sleeping children whom it was impossible to reach in time to get them out.

NEAR THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

Much Damage Done to Suburban Property in That Neighborhood.

Washington, Oct. 1.—Reports from the suburban towns about Washington show that great damage was done throughout the surrounding country by Tuesday's storm. At the Roman Catholic university, just outside the city, the domitory in process of construction was demolished. At Brookland, a few miles out, the town hall was partly desroyed and many other buildings were unroofed and otherwise damaged. On the outskirts of the city few localities escaped. The train shed at Alexandria was blown down and the debris is across the tracks. In this city the papal legation was unroofed and the Chinese legation was damaged about $1,500. Communication by telegraph and telephone with the outside world is absolutely stopped.

The White House was slightly injured by the storm, a portion of the copper roofing being stripped off and other damage done. The tall flagstaff from which the signal is given to the city that the president is in town disappeared completely. In the beautiful grounds surrounding the houses twenty-five of the splendid trees—elms, sycamores, walnuts, and magnolias—some of great age and of historical associations, were completely leveled, while fully fifty of the surviving trees suffered the loss of their tops and principal branches and are permanently defaced.

The storm was the most generally destructive known in this vicinity for years. It played havoc with property at Alexandria, Va., killing four persons; blew down and otherwise damaged a number of buildings at Rockville, Md., swept over Richmond, Va., doing an immense amount of damage, and its force was felt in of damage, and its force was felt in every town in its course, leaving behind it more or less ruins of buildings and crops. It was reported by the signal service on the 26th inst., as a tropical cyclone moving northwest from the Carribean sea and the report has been verified in every particular.

GRAND STAND COLLAPSES.

Accident Mars the Opening of Iowa's Semi Centennial.

Burlington, Ia., Oct. 2.—The semi-contennial exercises yesterday were marred by an accident which happened to the reviewing stand erected near the Union station for the convenience of Vice President Stevenson, Governor Drake (Iowa) and his personal staff, and some forty other prominent people reviewing the parade. Just as the head of the parade reached that point, with almost no warning, the entire stand collapsed, throwing its distinguished occupants to the ground, a distance of fifteen feet. The majority of those on the stand were bruised more or less.

The following are the more seriously hurt: Vice President A. E. Stevenson, jarred and shaken, but othewise unhurt; Governor F. M. Drake, of Iowa, slightly jarred; ex-Governor Sherman, of Vinton, bruised and shaken by fall; ex-Governor Newbold, Mount Pleasant, Ia., hand sprained; Hon. Lafayette Young, editor of the Des Moines Capital and orator of the day, hurt about the back and shoulders, but not prevented from delivering his address in the afternoon: Rev. D. S. M. Fellows, of Fayette, bruised; Auditor of State C. G. McArthey, Des Moines, bruised about the head; City Commissioner S. H. Jones of Burlington, ankle sprained; Lieutenant Colonel James D. Rowan, of Des Moines, ankle sprained; Major W. C. Wyman, Ottumwa, hurt internally; County Treasurer E. S. Burrows, of Burlington, compound fracture of leg —worst of all the injured.

It was about noon when the accident occurred; the morning parade had passed through the principal streets of the city, and the governor and staff, escorting the vice president, had just left the line of march and entered the stand to review the procession. The stand had been hastily erected at the last moment for the convenience of Vice President Stevenson, Governor Drake and staff and his party of friends and guests. Heavy rains had so softened the soil on which it was constructed that the supports sank into it and carried the structure to the ground. Several persons had warned the people not to crowd on the stand, as they did not consider it safe, and a number had just stepped off when it gave way. Vice President Stevenson was almost in the center of the stand, and was thrown pell mell into a wildly struggling mass of people.

Governor Drake was near him and grasped his arm, and both the distinguished gentlemen asisted each other in extricating themselves from the debris. Terrible excitement ensued, and there was danger for a few minutes of a general panic, but a number of cool heads managed to still the fears of those standing by, and the work of rescue of the unfortunate ones was quickly begun. Vice President Stevenson was dazed for the moment by the force of his fall and the struggle, but wa s soon able to enter his carriage and be driven to the Hotel Delano, where after a short rest he completely recovered his equnanimity. He took the accident good naturedly, and only seemed concerned about the injuries of those who fell about him.

Governor Drake was not injured in the least, and after the injured ones had been removed and the excitement had subsided he and the uninjured members of his staff and friends reviewed the procession, which had halted at the disaster. He was then driven to the hotel, and had dinner, after which he proceeded to Crapo park, where the celebration was held in the big Coliseum, and took the part in the exercises assigned him as if nothing had happened. The reviewing stand was a temporary affair of two-by-six scantling, hatily constructed, and stood over a sort of depression in the ground, into which its occupants were promiscuously tumbled. Ex-Governor Sherman was caught beneath a pile of rubbish and struggling people, and but for the instant assistance of a big by-stander who removed a heavy plank from across his neck he might have been fatally injured. As it is he sustained only slight injuries. Governor Drake's daughter, Mary, and her friend, Miss Carpenter, of Des Moines, were on the stand, but escaped injury aside from a bad fright.

Burlington, Oct. 3.—Another heavy rain fell Thursday night, greatly interfering with the attendance on Pioneer da yof the state semi-centennial festival. A long procession of militia, bands, pioneers and floats representing the early days and progress of Iowa occurred at 11 a. m., followed by addresses by pioneers in the morning at the Coliseum. Yesterday afternoon Governor Drake adressed the pioneers and a number of short talks by old settlers followed. An Old Folks' concert took place last night.

Negroes Are Doing It Now, Perhaps.

Clarendon, Ark., Oct. 5.—A gang of whitecaps, said to be composed of negroes, has undertaken the task of driving undesirable negroes out of Jackson township, Monroe county Many have been visited and whipped, one dying from his injuries, and another shot to death.

Kearney and Haines Released.

Rotterdam, Oct. 5. — Kearney and Haines, two of the Irish suspects, have been conducted across the Dutch frontier. The failure of Scotland Yard men to secure the extradition of Tynan made their arrests of no importance.

Russell Sails for Home.

New York, Oct. 5.—Baron Russell of Killowen, lord chief justice of Great Britain, sailed for home Saturday with Lady Russell and their daughter.

General Secretary Phillips expects to attend the Iowa State Convention at New Sharon, Nov. 18, 19.

Let the friends of anti-secrecy in Iowa who cannot attend their State convention at New Sharon, Nov. 18,19, write to the president, Rev. T. P. Robb, Linton, Ia. Letters of cheer and suggestions for the work are always welcome, but are especially inspiring when read to a convention.

As an evil that is killing the spirituality of the church and draining its life-blood, no other can be compared to the lodge system. How strange that any intelligent evangelist, truly concerned for the salvation of souls, should not be in fullest sympathy with our work in laboring to remove this great barrier to the salvation of men.

"Strengthen the things that remain that are ready to perish," is a practical maxim in these perilous times. Some years ago we wrote several pleading letters to a brother who proposed to launch another reform paper. We quoted to him the above text and rung the changes on it; but our advice was unheeded. He launched his paper and now after a desperate five years' struggle it goes down the flume. What the reform cause needs is not more papers, but that those we have be better sustained.

Bro. Williams writes from Tipton, Cal., under date of Oct. 5: "I have had very good congregations here the past week. I preached every night until Saturday and last night. I then lectured on the secret society question, and they took it with good effect. I believe there is a good interest here. The meetings will be continued by the U. B. pastors, E. Dewitt and L. G. Cowdrey, and I expect to hear good reports from here in the future. I go to-night to Los Angeles, and will hold a brief revival meeting and lecture some at Clearwater, Los Angeles Co., Cal. Pray for me."

ELDER S. C. KIMBALL.

Our readers will be glad this week to see the picture of one who has long stood in the front rank of New England reformers. He was born in Hopkinton, N. H., July 21, 1838. His father was Hazen Kimball; and his mother, Mary Ann Baker. He fitted for college at Hopkinton Academy, and graduated at Dartmouth in the class of 1860. He afterwards graduated at the Theological school then located in Concord, but now connected with the Boston University. He was ordained to the Gospel ministry by the Free Baptists at North Weare in 1865, and was pastor of churches in North Weare, Newmarket, Wells, Me., Gilford, Strafford and Barrington for about seventeen years.

Elder Kimball was instrumental in organizing the New Hampshire Christian Association opposed to secret societies in 1875, being chosen its first secretary, which office he still holds. He severed his connection with the Free Baptists in 1882 on account of their subservience to the secret lodges. From 1880 to 1896 he published the Christian Witness in the interest of pure religion and in opposition to lodgism. For nine years he was principal of the academies at Contoocook, North Weare and Strafford. Among his students were Elder J. Franklin Browne and Rev. Edgar B. Wylie. During the past twenty years he has written and lectured much against secret lodges. He has been interested in the Cynosure and the National Christian Association almost from their commencement, and has been a corporate member of the latter. We expect good work by him for many years.

Our readers in Pennsylvania will note in this issue the call for their State Convention, which meets at Oaks, Montgomery Co., Nov. 18, 19. We earnestly request every friend of the cause in the State to write Secretary W. B Stoddard at Oaks, Pa. Write letters that will cheer and inspire those who will attend. Write such suggestions as you think are needed in the work, and above all do not forget to send a contribution to defray the expenses of the convention.

We are glad to note the united effort that is being put forth for the redemption of the Jews in our large cities. Numerous missions are being started. It is somewhat significant, and yet as would be expected, that those who are taking the lead in this work are connected with anti-secrecy churches. We note among these Revs. Alexander Schaap, of Brooklyn, N. Y., A. R. Kieldell, of Allegheny, Pa., and M. Stolpe, of New York. All of these brethren are Cynosure readers and tried reformers. With such leaders, and the blessing of God that must follow, we shall look for grand results. Let all who can lend a helping hand.

God has ordained the church as the organization to preach and practice righteousness. It has proven unfaithful in a large measure in every age. But true to his promise God has raised up a standard in each age against the flood of iniquity. In Old Testament times God raised up such men as Gideon, Elijah, Elisha and their school of the prophets. In our own times God raised up such men as Garrison, Phillips, Gerritt Smith and the Abolition societies. Still later God raised up such women as Lady Henry Somerset, Miss Willard and the W. C. T. U., and such men as Philo Carpenter, Jonathan Blanchard and the National Christian Association. God has undoubtedly put the stamp of his approval upon each of these organizations.

Evangelists usually begin their work in a community by charging the churches with low spiritual life, and with having a large per cent of unconverted members. But they sometimes please these worldly church members by condemning Christians for engaging in the work of the W. C. T. U. and the National Christian Association. We heard of an evangelist recently who told his audience that it was the devil and not God who stirred up Christians to go into such movements, and that the place for all Christian work was in the church. We admit that if every church would faithfully warn its membership against all partnership with the lodge and saloon there would be no need of the above-mentioned reform organizations. But when the agitation of these questions is excluded from most churches, so that even these evangelists dare scarcely allude to these evils, then the only hope is for Christians to work through these movements. And to condemn them, and at the same time the low spirituality of the churches, which is the disease these movements are designed to remedy,—this is the height of inconsistency.

MORGAN IS A MARTYR'S NAME.

Eternal Source of light and love,
Send us thy spirit from above;
And let thy truth, O Lord prevail
Against the craft and might of hell.

Great God, we thought our land was free!
We thought, throughout, from sea to sea,
There was no place where man might not
Give honest utterance to thought.

But this tall shaft speaks other things;
Of hidden leagues, and priests and kings;
Dark powers, which, like the Syroc's breath,
Breathe on our blood-bought freedom—death.

Behold! O Lord, thy church in chains!
See how the power of darkness reigns
In church and state, in hut and hall,
Confounding and corrupting all.

Arise, O Lord, the cause is thine;
Put forth thine awful power divine;
Thy blessed light, that shall consume
All evils which its beams illume.

And let our monument proclaim
That Morgan is a martyr's name;
Till heart and home, from sea to sea,
Shout, from the dark lodge bondage—free.

TRUE MEN.

BY PROF. W. H. DAVIS.

True men are those who, with steady purpose, do something for humanity. The most pitiful of all are those who assiduously labor to do and be nothing, nor wish to help others. The Lowly One said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." It is more blessed to do for others than that they should do for us. The Divine Law cannot be reversed. Men of all denominations should love the church to which they belong, and be and live and do for it.

If we do not and cannot be satisfied with it, seek a people with whom we can labor, or do independently what our hands find to do. But do not queeze into and hope to absorb a meagre good from the church. This seems about what some are trying to do. If they but squeeze into the church, and be carried by it, and finally by rope and pulley be hoisted into heaven, how glad they will be not to have even a tear to brush aside.

Well, we cannot do without the church, indeed. We ought to make it equally as emphatic that the church cannot do without us. If we are true disciples it cannot, for we are "co-workers with God." And the great scheme of redemption is successful in proportion as true hearts bear sympathy with Christ and his church, and true hands bear aloft the banner of the cross.

PATRIOT'S WARNING TO HIS COUNTRY.

BY GEORGE WASHINGTON CLARK.

After the murder of Morgan, Masonic charters were thrown up or returned; lodges were broken up and abandoned all over the country, except at a few places in the "lower regions" and dark abodes down South. An abnormal condition of society was restored, peace and tranquility to a good extent prevailed, and the people hoped and believed that Masonry had received its death-blow; that it had not only committed murder but suicide, and could never be resuscitated in this country.

But strange to say, they too soon forgot the wise old maxim, "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." While the people slumbered and slept in supposed security the "little foxes" were playing the mischief with the vines by getting in their "innocent secret temperance orders." But if innocent, harmless and useful, as claimed, why in the name of common sense and Christian philanthropy should they be secret? Does reason, common sense or religion commend lighting a candle and putting it under a bushel? All innocent, good and useful institutions are to be as a city set on a hill, whose light cannot be hid.

Our Saviour taught us in very plain and most positive language that we are to let our light so shine that others seeing our good works may be constrained thereby to glorify our Father in heaven. No man on earth can reconcile secret oath-bound societies with the precepts and positive commands of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Notwithstanding the sad and lamentable experience we have had on account of secret societies, and the warnings and counsels we had from our wisest and ablest ministers of the Gospel, philanthropists and statesmen, and from the most eminent men who had been seduced into the lodges, but had their eyes opened and had renounced them; I repeat, notwithstanding all this, the United States have become, in the language of Senator Morton, "honey-combed with secret societies." Their name is legion, and their power for evil incalculable and alarming.

So with the all-dominating power for evil of these legions of sworn secret lodges among us. And when we consider the mercenary and merciless liquor traffic, legalized and fastened upon us by our government, with all its corrupting, depraving, crime and misery-producing effects, and the ignorance, indifference, and the unprincipled political partisanship and divisions, strifes and wranglings everywhere manifest, we may well feel and say, as Thomas Jefferson did in view of the legalized existence of slavery among us, "I tremble for my country when I remember God is just, and that his justice will not slumber forever."

SHOULD GOVERNMENT OWN AND MANAGE RAILROADS?

BY PROF. E. WHIPPLE.

Turning to the objections to government management of railroads, we find the following urged prominently:

1. It would be a long step toward socialism. This is true, but not necessarily an objection. We have already the postoffice, public schools, municipal water works, lighting plants, etc. Many cities in Europe have gone much further in undertaking enterprises that are monopolistic in character, and everywhere with success. If we take this step we need not go any farther on the road to socialism unless we find it advantageous to do so.

2. It would greatly enlarge the functions of government and might lead to vastly increased political corruption and boodling. Civil service reform, now largely an accomplished fact in the national service, minimizes this danger. The more important the functions of government become, and the more closely it affects every man's everyday life, the easier it will become to secure the interest and attention of "good" citizens to their political duties. Whether the old saying, "That government is best which governs least," is true or not, depends upon whether the government is a monarch or an aristocracy governing for his or their own interests, or a "government by the people and for the people."

The history of government management of business enterprises shows clearly that there is not nearly so much corruption and boodling in connection with government enterprises as grows out of the attempt of government to "control" business of a monopolistic nature. Witness the results of the water supply of Chicago, which is managed by the city, in comparison with the constant stream of corruption having its source in the relation of the gas and street railway companies to the city council of the same city.

3 Italy built roads and leased them to private companies with bad results. In regard to this, two remarks may be made. Every case of partnership between the government and private companies is of doubtful utility, and usually leads to poor results. It is doubtful if the people of Italy have sufficient intelligence and virtue to constitute a successful self-governing community.

4. It is said that our railroads charge only about seventy-three per cent as much as European roads do; let them pay their employes higher wages and furnish better facilities.

To which it may be replied that we do many other things better than the Europeans do. We enjoy better facilities and have more comforts and conveniences in almost every respect. Wages are higher in all lines of business here. We are more progressive and enterprising; our people have more money to travel with, and travel more than Europeans do; we are more inventive, and get more and better results with less labor in every way than Europeans do. Nevertheless it is not wise to imagine that we are so wise and smart that we can not learn anything from our neighbors.

5 When railroads were first introduced, several States, especially Pennsylvania and Michigan, attempted the plan of government ownership, with disastrous results. To this it may be replied, that quite generally the first private companies that went into the railroad business met with the same ill success, because the business was new and the conditions for its successful prosecution were not known.

In conclusion we may say that no one can certainly foretell how the plan of government ownership will work in this country, but the indications are that we shall be forced to try it, and the probabilities are that we shall find it a great improvement over the present method.

ANOTHER SACRIFICE FOR KANSAS FREEDOM

Our fathers to their graves have gone;
Their strife is past, their triumph won;
But sterner conflicts wait the race
That rises in their honored place;
A moral warfare with the crime
And folly of an evil time.

The first Lawrence knew of succor at hand was the next morning, Sept. 15th, when they beheld, on the eminence overlooking the town, the United States flag and troops. Early that morning Geary, with an escort of United States troops, started to the camp of the invaders. Upon reaching their outpost he inquired who they were and their object. They replied:

"We are the Territorial militia, called into service by the governor of Kansas, and are marching to wipe out Lawrence and every —— Abolitionist in the Territory." Geary said:

"I am the governor of Kansas and your commander-in chief, and you will summon the commander of this force to escort me to the main line and conduct me to the center, that being my position."

Surprised and disappointed they reluctantly obeyed the order. Geary was received by a dozen officers, among whom were Atchison, Jones, Whitfield and Stringfellow, of course, and Col. Titus, whom Lane and Sam. Walker had previously whipped and captured near Lecompton. He found them prepared for an immediate attack on Lawrence, in total disregard of his orders sent the previous evening. He addressed the officers at length, severely reprimanding them, and especially Senator Atchison, to whom he said:

"From your high position as Vice-president of the United States, you have fallen so low as to be the leader of an army of men of uncontrollable passions, determined on slaughter and destruction."

At the close of his speech his proclamation, together with his order to disband, was read. This "Territorial militia called into service by the governor of Kansas" consisted largely of Missourians, who plundered the Free State settlers on their return. After Geary was gone the piping voice of Sheriff Jones and other murderous officers were still for war. About the only Territorial militia was the resident Pro-slavery gang of "Kickapoo Rangers," which returned by way of Lecompton. When within a few miles of that place a squad, leaving the main force for purposes of plunder, came upon a lame man plowing in a field near the road, by the name of Buffum, whom they robbed of his team and then shot in the abdomen, mortally wounding him.

Shortly afterward Gov Geary and Judge Cato passed that way and went to the murdered man, who with his dying breath related the occurrence to the governor and expired.

"I never witnessed," said the governor, "a scene that filled me with such horror. There was a peculiar significance in the looks and words of that poor dying man that I can never forget, for they seemed to tell me that I could have no rest till I brought his murderer to justice....."

The next day Geary held an interview with Judges Lecompte and Cato, and urged upon them the necessity of holding court at once for a just and speedy trial of the prisoners who were suffering in confinement. Then he took a detachment of United States troops and went to Topeka on the 17th, and arrested such of Whipple's men as he could find for participation in the Hickory Point fight, bringing them to Lecompton.

To his surprise and chagrin Lecompte had appointed court at Leavenworth three weeks later. Geary prevailed on Judge Cato to hold court at Lecompton at once. Then he sent United States deputy marshals to search out the murderer of Buffum, with posses of United States troops to insure their safety. They found plenty of Free State men to arrest, but not the murderer of Buffum, thus harassing the innocent. A reward was offered and the arrest was finally made early in October. He was tried and found guilty of murder in the first degree. Free State men came now and complained of constant harassing by Pro-slavery officers. Geary assured them of his intention to meet out justice to all, referring them to the arrest and conviction of the murderer of Buffum.

While thus talking a man entered and announced that the murderer had just been brought before Lecompte, "and on the bond of a man notoriously worthless" (Sheriff Jones) had been admitted to bail. United States Marshal Donaldson refused to serve a duplicate warrant on him, and resigned; and Col. Titus, now special aid-de-camp of Geary, secured his arrest. The murderer was held a short time till the temporary absence of Geary, when he was brought before Judge Lecompte on a writ of habeas corpus and again set at liberty. S. C. Hart.

LODGE OFFICERS FINED.

SENTENCE OF THE WALTHAM (MASS) DISTRICT COURT FOR INITIATING FRANK A PREBLE INTO THE ROYAL ARCH PURPLE DEGREE OF THE ORANGE ORDER.—A STATEMENT OF THE RISE AND PROGRESS OF THE ORDER, AND OF THE LATE COURT TRIAL.

The English Revolution occurred 1688–1690. James II. was on the throne, but while he outwardly pretended allegiance to the state church, yet had his Romish masses in the private chapel of the palace, and practiced in secret the pagan worship of the Church of Rome.

The English people, alarmed at this hypocrisy of their monarch, and fearing that their country would again be brought under the iron heel of the papacy, deputed a number of their most influential men to go over to Holland and invite and urge upon William, Prince of Orange, who married James II.'s daughter Mary, to come over to England, take charge of the destinies of the country and hurl James from the throne.

William readily obeyed, and soon landed with a large retinue at Torbay, in the south of England. He marched from there to Exeter, where he was met and heartily received by the chief men of the realm, and a declaration of principles drawn up and the Revolution started.

About the last battle fought is generally known as the "Battle of the Boyne," in the north of Ireland, where James' army was completely routed, and he himself fled to Dublin and thence to France, never to return; and thus ended in England the reign of the Stuarts. Of course it will be understood that the contest from first to last was between Popery and Protestanism—between James Stuart and his Catholic subjects and allies on the one hand, and William of Orange and his Protestant supporters on the other.

The religion of the Reformation was triumphant. James II. was ingloriously defeated, and William III. and Mary his wife, the daughter of James, were soon after crowned King and Queen of England.

But Protestants and Catholics hated one another all the same, and whenever an opportunity offered, slaughtered one another "for the love of God;" and thus matters ran along until about the beginning of the present century. About that time a battle took place between the Catholics and Protestants at a little village in the north of Ireland called "The Diamond;" and immediately after this "Battle of the Diamond"

THE "ORANGE ASSOCIATION" WAS FIRST ORGANIZED.

It took its name from William III., Prince of Orange, who was at once adopted as the hero-god of the initiation, as Hiram Abiff was of Masonry, and in recent years, Pythias of the "Knights of Pythias."

It will be remembered that Freemasonry was started on its mission in 1717; and being antagonistic to the papacy, there was nothing more natural than that the Freemasons of Antrim and other counties in the province of Ulster, in the north of Ireland, should lend their assistance in organizing the new institution, and stamping upon it as much of the Masonic system as was necessary and justifiable at the time. Soon the Orange Association flourished over the north and east of Ireland, especially in those counties where Protestants were in the majority.

When the Orange society was first organized it was for purely selfish reasons. It was necessarily a secret oath-bound society, as it is to the present time. Passwords, grips and signs were invented as modes of recognition in a rough crowd of papist antagonists, and being organized and manipulated by the Freemasons of County Antrim and the city of Dublin, degrees and a ritual were manufactured. At first there was but one degree—the "Royal Arch Purple;" the initiatory ceremonies of that degree being largely borrowed from the Master Mason's and Royal Arch degree of Freemasonry.

In 1830 Ogle Robert Gowan came to Upper Canada from Dublin, Ireland, and brought Orangeism with him. It very soon obtained a strong and abiding foothold in that province; but in order to conform to the new condition of things, other degrees were invented, new passwords, grips, signs and other modes of recognition were soon formulated, and so the Orange order in all Canada got to have five degrees—the "Orange," the "Small Purple," the "Blue," the "Royal Arch Purple" and the "Scarlet."

The first degree makes you an Orangeman, just as the first degree in Freemasonry makes a man a Mason. In being initiated the candidate is neither stripped of his clothing, blindfolded, nor otherwise maltreated in any way; and neither is he in the second and third degrees—the "Small Purple" and the "Blue."

In receiving the "Royal Arch Purple," however, it is quite the other way; and in view of the following newspaper correspondence, the reader is especially requested to note the difference. The document from the Boston Journal of Aug. 20, 1896, was published in the Cynosure of Sept 3 and the other from the Springfield (Mass.) Daily Republican of Aug. 22 1896, is as follows:

To the Editor of the Republican:

In your issue of the 20th considerable space is given to the publishing of the proceedings of a very peculiar case in the district court at Waltham in which a certain Frank A. Preble seeks redress for alleged cruelty practiced upon him by the officers and members of an Orange lodge in Waltham on the occasion of his initiation into the Orange order.

The statements made by him in the witness-stand are known by every member of the order to be confounded and malicious falsehoods of the deepest dye. As a representative member of the Orange order I here distinctly state that Preble was not stripped of one single garment on receiving his initiatory degree into that society; and furthermore, that he could not possibly have been abused by "whips," "clambering over blocks," "climbing up ladders" and being "bounced about in a blanket," as no such paraphernalia is used in making an "Orangeman."

With reference to his statement about being "branded with red hot irons," a more malicious falsehood could not be invented. Everybody knows that if a man gets branded with a red-hot iron the scar will remain for a period exceeding ten days. Why weren't the "brands" exposed in court?

He also states that the reason he was so cruelly treated was because some one had black-balled him. Now the greenest member of any society knows if he had been black-balled he never would have been initiated at all. Another thing he states he was blindfolded from the time he left the ante-room until after the ceremony was completed, yet at the same time he swears that six brothers (giving their names) were the persons who ill treated him How is that for veracity?

With all these facts before the judge he actually imposed a fine of $35 each. I have no doubt, however, when the case comes before a higher court the gentlemen will be honorably acquitted, and that Mr. Preble will be condemned to the ignominy he so richly deserves.

It is easy seeing the motive of the case, as the complainant states on the witness-stand that a Brother Nickerson told him he ought to be granted some compensation for what he had suffered.

For the benefit of your readers and in justice to the Orange institution, I beg to state that no ill-usage or abuse is practiced on candidates entering that order. All our ceremonies are of a perfectly legitimate and honorable character, which even the most fastidious could not object to. It is strange that out of over 900 000 Orangemen in the United States of America such cruelty has never been before exposed. Thanking you in anticipation of insertion, I am yours respectfully, Robert McKeown,

Worthy Master Unity L. O. L., No. 375 Springfield.

Springfield, Mass., Aug. 21, 1896.

The reader will notice by turning to our issue of September 3 that a Mr. Frank A. Preble and a Mr Edward Arch had received a certain degree in Orangeism, and Mr. Preble thinking that he had been grossly ill-used and needlessly assaulted, in passing through the initiatory ceremonies of that particular degree, brought suit against the officers of Waltham Orange Lodge and had them fined $35 a piece.

Robert McKeown, however, Worthy Master Unity L. O L No. 375, Springfield, Mass., comes boldly to the rescue and denies in toto every allegation made by Preble and Arch, though the latter gave their testimony under oath.

Now in order to settle the question and to set the matter as right as can be, let me say right here that every statement made by Preble was literally correct, and the writer of these lines knows whereof he affirms, for he has been there himself. I took five degrees in Orangeism, was Worthy Master of my lodge, conferred the "Royal Arch Purple" or assisted in conferring it, time and time again. I knew the Orange and "Royal Arch Purple" ritual by heart, and know it yet from stem to stern, and I declare right here that Preble's statement is true in every particular, and that the denial entered by McKeown is false in whole and in part, as regards what Preble was speaking about; and furthermore McKeown knows that it is false.

But now mark the quibble: Preble is speaking of the "Royal Arch Purple" and the rough treatment he received in passing through the initiatory ceremonies of that degree, while McKeown is speaking, or at least pretends to speak, of the first or Orange degree, and the mild, harmless manner in which candidates are treated there. When Mr. Robert McKeown was made an Orangeman he was simply conducted into the lodge-room just as he was; no blindfold, no clothes removed, and nothing but the most respectful treatment.

But my dear brother Robert, how was it when you went up to receive the "Purple Mark" degree? Did they not treat you as bad as Preble was treated, if not worse? You know they did; and you boast of it to-day among your brother Orangemen, as nearly all the rest of you fellows do; and where is the use in lying about it?

You say in your letter of refutation above quoted: "As a representative member of the Orange order, I here distinctly state that Preble was not stripped of one single garment on receiving his initiatory degree into that society," etc., etc. Now, Robert, in making that statement, are you not acting the wily, scheming Jesuit? You are speaking of the first degree, while poor Preble had his rough experience in the fourth degree. You are speaking of when a man is made an Orangeman. Mr. Preble is speaking of what he went through when being made a "Royal Arch Purple" Orangeman.

And now, Robert, tell us this: When you were made a "Royal Arch Purple Marksman," did they not roll your pantaloon legs up above your knees? did they not take off your shoes and stockings? did they not take off your coat, vest, collar and necktie? and did they not take your left arm entirely out of your shirt sleeve, thus making your left arm and left breast entirely bare? Did they not put a hoodwink over your eyes? And were you not conducted in that condition around the lodge-room, walking in your bare feet over rough pieces of cord-wood, bricks, stones or some other "rough and rugged" materials? and as you were led around did not the boys whip you on the bare shins with rods or whips? Did they not then bring you to a short ladder placed against the wall, which you were taught to ascend by two and one-half steps—meaning the tribe of Judah, the tribe of Gad, and half the tribe of Manasseh? and did they not then throw you backwards from the top of that little ladder onto a large canvas or blanket, where you were jerked up and down at the sweet will of the members and the orders of the Worthy Master? Were you not then conducted towards the Secretary's table where the question was asked: "How did sin first enter into the world?" And the answer, "Because the serpent beguiled Eve." "What would you do with the serpent if you found him?" "I would bruise his head." "Then search for him; you may find him." You groped around blindfolded, and one of the brethren, setting fire to a fuse which hissed to represent the hissing of a serpent, struck your hand or breast with the burning fuse when the next question was asked, "Did you find the serpent?" "No, but it found me."

Don't you remember all that, brother Robert? and then don't you remember, furthermore, how the seal of the lodge was heated, and how it was suddenly pushed against your "naked left breast?" and then at last when the hoodwink was removed, don't you remember how you stood against the wall, the warrant over your head, three little burning tapers before you, and the brethren standing with swords pointing to your throat, breasts and bowels?

Don't you remember all that, Robert? And yet you would publish such a letter as you have in the Springfield Daily Republican! And you would go through all that tomfoolery and devilment, in order that Orangeism may better withstand the inroads of popery on our public school system, or that you may properly resist the encroachments of the papacy on our free institutions!

No, my brother, falsehood will never work good for any righteous cause or good institution. Popery is bad, wicked and devilish, a shallow mockery and a huge counterfeit; but any institution that resorts to the above methods in its initiatory ceremonies into the "Royal Purple" degree, in this enlightened age of the nineteenth century, is not a whit better, and ought, for all the good it has ever done, or can do, be blotted out of existence.—From the September Lodge Lamp.

OPEN LETTERS.

TO CARDINAL GIBBONS AND MR. ECHOLS, PRESIDENT OF THE AMERICAN PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION.

LETTER IV.

Sirs:—Romanism and Masonry are alike in the fact that their very names are glaring falsehoods. Rome is not catholic, and it is one of the grossest of her pretentions that she should lay claim to a title belonging by right only to the church universal, the true bride of Christ. As for Masonry, she meets us on the very threshold with a lie; binding her victims with the cabletow of unquestioning obedience, yet daring to call herself free.

A Romanist may be a saloonkeeper or a man of immoral habits. He will not on that account be excommunicated by his church, and Masonry has the same lenient fashion of dealing with her members who happen to be vile or unchaste men. As was recently proved by the Griswold case in Connecticut, a man may even violate the laws of his country and get into jail without losing his standing in the order. And furthermore, Masonry, as is being proved daily in our courts of law, holds her obligations above any regularly administered judicial oath, nor will Rome unlock the door of the secret confessional to reveal anything that has passed within, at the most imperative demand of justice. There is a great deal said about anarchy now-a-days, but is it not the essence of anarchy that it puts itself above regularly constituted law?

A Mason is bound by his oath to keep all Masonic secrets and obey all Masonic requirements whatever they may be, whether those secrets are told him, and those requirements laid upon him to-day or fifty years hence. In the Catholic World of Aug., 1871, we read that "a Catholic must not only believe what the church proposes to his belief, but be ready to believe what she may hereafter propose." Neither Masonry nor Romanism take in the possibility that they may err in their commands or their teachings, or that a man may have conscientious convictions tomorrow that he did not possess yesterday.

The Jesuit law of "mental reservation" by which a Romanist is allowed to profess ignorance of what he knows perfectly well, is paralleled in Masonry, which by obliging the candidate "ever to conceal and never reveal" its secrets, swears him to lie. Only this doctrine of mental reservation can explain the conduct of a Masonic minister who flatly denies his relationship with the order, or the testimony regarding it of multitudes of Christian men who have been caught in the Masonic snare, but came out and exposed it for conscience sake. In the A. P. A the candidate is told, at a certain stage in the initiation, "You now belong to the order of the Amoreans" This is so that when asked if he is an A. P. A., he may, if it is for his interest to deny it, say audibly, "I am not," and silently to himself, "I am an Amorean." If this is not Jesuitism pure and simple, what is?

But while Rome and Masonry have the same origin, and are doomed alike to destruction, they are in many respects widely divergent, and seem to be diverging more and more;—rival realms in Satan's kingdom of darkness, Egypt and Babylon. Now we are told in Bible history that at one time the Jews, to escape being under Babylonian rule, set their hearts on going down into Egypt, and when the prophet Jeremiah warned them faithfully of the disastrous consequences of such a step, denounced him as a traitor to his country, and a friend of Babylon. So there are good people to-day — patriotic but misguided Americans—who are acting just like those ancient Jews. They are so afraid Rome will yet rule this country, that to escape Babylon they are ready to go down into Egypt; and they bitterly denounce as enemies of the country and friends of Rome, every man and woman who believes (and is not afraid to say so) that all secret societies, even the A. P. A., are wrong in principle, dangerous in their workings, and capable of becoming even more of a menace to our liberties than the papacy itself.

But under no circumstances is a Christian justified in either going down into Egypt or seeking an alliance with her Babylonian rival. The warning cry, "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partaker of her plagues," waxes louder as the hour of her doom draws nigh;—she who sits on many waters, the scarlet woman, the bedecked and bejeweled mother of harlots. And still, terrible as the thunders of Sinai, that curse rolls down the ages, "Woe unto them that trust in the shadow of Egypt," the great anti-Christian world power, the beast; "that receive his mark on their foreheads or in their hands."

For Masonry is anti-Christ. By her contemptuous rejection of the Redeemer's name in her prayers, she denies the Son, and by denying the Son she denies the Father also. Rome is not anti-Christ. With all her idolatrous worship of Mary and the saints, she still has room for the cross and the manger; and in spite of her superstitions, her unscriptural dogmas, and the blasphemous pretensions of him who sits as the vicegerent of God on earth, many a devout soul born in her communion, and knowing no other, has groped its way to heaven.

Mackey says, "The great mission and object of Masonry is worship," but it must be charitably hoped that the great multitudes who bow at her shrine know not what they worship. We are told that divine honors will be paid to the beast—anti-Christ: "All that dwell upon the earth shall worship him whose names are not written in the Lamb's book of life. Doctors Jamison, Fausett and Brown, in their comment on Daniel, seventh chapter, seventh verse, says: "Anti-Christ promises the same things as Christ, but in an opposite way. A caricature of Christ offering a regenerated world without the cross." Could there be a better description of Masonry? A caricature of the Gospel promising the new birth without the spirit; salvation without any atonement; and heaven, but by another way than that of the cross of Jesus.

While Rome decreases, Masonry is to increase. On the growth of the republican idea and the discontent of the masses, the Masonic anti-Christ will ride into power. Nothing in the sacred Word is more clearly revealed than this:—that there will come a time, even now close upon us, when the governments of the world will be dominated by the beast. That beast is Masonry, earthly, bestial—never anything else; whereas Rome bears a woman's form, showing that even in the darkest depths of her apostacy she has not lost completely all resemblance to what she once was. Something of the heaven from which she fell is about her yet:—in prayer and chant, heritage of her purer days; in the gentle ministry of many a devout Sister of Mercy in the hospital and on the battlefield.

Masonry boasts that in Italy, Mexico and France, where she has seized the reins of government forced from the unwilling hands of the papacy, the intellectual progress and larger liberty that has come through the curtailment of the church power is all due to her. Let this be acknowledged. It is all in agreement with the sure word of prophecy. Anti-christ will have the eyes of a man and the heart of a beast. Masonry is brazenly infidel wherever she dares to be, and secretly infidel where she don't dare; she has the heart of a beast with the God-worshiping instinct left out, and united to it that which gives her such monstrous God-defying powers for evil, a human intellect, quick and keen, "the eyes of a man." Masonry is, therefore, not inimical to a high civilization of a certain kind, but it is an infidel philosophy, a materialistic science, and a pagan, sensuous literature, which will flourish where it is the controlling force in government or society.

This it is fast getting to be. Nearly all the sovereigns of Europe belong to the order, including, it is said, the Sultan of Turkey. In our own country should McKinley be elected we shall have a spectacle never seen before in its history, of the two highest positions, in the gift of the nation, held by Knight Templar Masons. Talk of our government being Romanized! There is far more danger of her being Masonized. Masonry is not only seizing all our high offices, but there is not a single political movement of any importance that she does not manage to capture by making it the basis of another of her myriad secret organizations. When, by her subtle diplomacy and secret craft, she gets control of the world's governments so that they agree to give their kingdom unto the beast, then Rome, by the shutting up of her schools and convents, the confiscation of her vast wealth, and the exclusion of the hierarchy from all political power, will be made, in the language of Scripture, "desolate and naked," if she is not, as the words "eat her flesh and burn her with fire" would seem to imply, subjected to a literal persecution and forced to drink the same bitter cup which she pressed to the lips of God's saints of old.

And now for the conclusion of the whole matter. Divine revelation shows that the beast, the Masonic anti-Christ, will not have long to enjoy his victory over the apostate church of Rome, for her death-knell hardly dies away before the trumpet sounds for the great battle of Armageddon, and the beast is destroyed, "and his body given to the burning flame."

God is the judge of both these great systems of iniquity. The angels, with the saints and souls of the martyred dead, are spectators. Then where is our place but on the witness-stand. We are to testify boldly, fearlessly, careless of boycotts, careless of being called cranks, careless even of prison and death if it comes to that, and it may.

No, my Catholic friend; when we anti-secretists co-operate with Rome we shall stultify our witness against her, so that it will not be received by God or the world. No, my A. P. A. friend; when as patriots we co-operate with Masonry we shall receive the mark of the beast, the mark of the sealed lips, and we shall be dumb when we ought to cry out against it. In either case we shall have shame and confusion of face.

It is an old temptation to do evil that good may come, but we fling it back in the face of the tempter with this one word of divine command: "Behold, ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord."

Sincerely yours,

Elizabeth E. Flagg.

RICHFIELD SPRINGS' LODGES AROUSED.

THEY INTIMATE THAT BRO. STODDARD MAY SHARE THE FATE OF MORGAN.

Richfield Springs, N. Y., Oct. 5, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—The springs make this a place of note. Remarkable cures are reported. The town of some two thousand population shows enterprise and efficient attention to sanitary conditions. Fine summer residences overlook the valley part of the town, of which the home of Mr. McCormick is conspicuous. Not being occupied this season by the owner, it is rented to a widow of means at $500 per month. There is a Masonic block with a lodge on Main street with the usual precautions to conceal their works of darkness.

There are numerous hotels, ranging from low to high grade accommodations, and one Catholic and four Protestant churches, which with the lodges furnish ample accommodations for all classes of worshipers. My first acquaintance was at the "Richfield House," where I found shelter from the rain, a good bed and well prepared food. The rear is mortgaged to the devil for a dram shop, and the place does not deserve Christian patronage.

Applying to the Chief of Police, he kindly took me to his home, where I am enjoying ample hospitality at a very reasonable price. My first day was mostly with the ministers, and in clearing the ship for action. The evening was spent at a small but helpful prayer meeting at the M. E. church. On Friday I left 2,148 tracts in packages of seven each in dwellings, stores and hotels, and on Saturday completed a systematic visitation of the town. "The lot is cast into the lap" and fruits are beginning to appear. Your colporteur, if not the subject of his mission, is freely discussed. Some have spoken kind and encouraging words, but they were not the "fraters."

While going quietly about my work I have met four persons who remember the Morgan episode, but who are too aged for active work. My methods have not been wholly satisfactory to the "craft," though one, an M. D., advised me to keep on, as I "had a good job and was doubtless well paid." As I am looking for a partner, I offered him a position with an equal share in the profits, but he declined. Another said, "If a man wants to make an ass of himself there is no law against it." He gave the very best possible evidence of his sincerity by practicing what he preached.

Another crossed the street to ask, "Are you a Mason, sir?" I replied, "I am so taken and accepted among brothers and fellows, though I have never been entered, passed and raised in a regularly constituted lodge of Master Masons, chartered by a Grand Lodge." Looking me sharply in the eyes he turned away without saying a word. Passing a store a man rapped on the window and beckoned me in. Entering, I handed him some Lodge Lamps, which he refused, saying, I have read enough of your trash. Several questions followed which I tried to answer respectfully, but so unsatisfactorily that he intimated a possibility that I might share the fate of Morgan, and with curses and imprecations ordered me from his store. I remarked on leaving, When a man vomits after taking a prescription, it is proof of virtue in the medicine, and what he throws up shows what is in him. Presumably, since he was a Mason, he was neither an "atheist or a fool," but he certainly appeared to be a very "mad man."

Sabbath morning I heard an excellent discourse by the pastor in the M. E. church, remaining for the Sabbath-school and teaching a Bible class by request. In the evening I preached to a small but attentive congregation in the same house. Hitherto the Lord hath helped us.

THE PENNSYLVANIA CONVENTION.

MANY INDICATIONS OF A GOOD MEETING.

Philadelphia, Pa., Oct. 9, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—I am glad to report that the time is set and arrangements under way for the Pennsylvania State Convention. You no doubt have the call from the president ere this. The attention of the people is much taken now with the political discussions; but the outlook for a rousing convention is all that could be expected. Many of the friends see in the present depressed and unsettled state of affairs an opportunity for doing much good. The ears of thoughtful people are open as never before to the consideration of unpopular truths.

There are causes for the effects we see. Where did they originate? Can they be discovered? Is the ship of state to be driven upon the rocks, and go down amid anarchy and bloodshed? What can be done? Let him that hath wisdom speak. There are multitudes anxious to hear. There will be no trouble in securing many able and tried speakers. The responses to my invitations in this line indicate a live and growing interest.

My respected father, who has so long and successfully contended with the foes of light, will, D. V., be our general all-around man. He is expected to fill any vacancies, and be always on hand. Bro. Stephen Merritt, the seceded Mason of high degree, who needs no introduction in this part of the country, hopes to meet with us. Friends who know him will be glad to learn that there will be an opportunity of hearing him again.

Rev. James Parker, Ph. D., of Jersey City, promises an address. Subject, "The Sole Blight of the Lodge." Those who have heard Bro. Parker know that his arrows of truth hit every time. Rev. W. W. Barr, D. D., will open the discussion regarding the minor lodges, his subject being, "Christians and the Minor Secret Societies." The doctor's research and long experience as a pastor make him the man for the presentation of this subject.

"Secret Societies Versus the Republic," will be presented by our honored President, Rev. J. C. McFeeters. "Freemasonry and the Bible," will be the theme of Rev. J. H. Leiper's address. Bro. Leiper is a well known lecturer and reform worker. These are but a few of the many who will address us. As the reader will see at once a rich treat is in store. Vice President Myers at whose church we meet assures of a hearty welcome.

Bro. Gotwals, who has for many years been a respected elder in this congregation, in speaking of entertainment said, we can take care of seven. The hearts and homes of this people are large. Will not the friends hoping to attend this gathering send a card to Rev. J. T. Myers or myself, addressing Oaks, Montgomery Co., Pa. Assignments for entertainment will then be made.

Green Tree Brethren church in which we meet is about one half mile from stations on the Pennsylvania and Reading R. R. The station on the Pennsylvania is called Per Kiomen; on the Reading, Oaks. The Brethren selected the 18th and 19th of November as the time most suitable. This is the time of full moon. All know what that means to meetings in the country. Of the details I shall write more later. May there be a praying for and looking forward to this gathering.

W. B. Stoddard.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM NORTHWESTERN IOWA.

HOW A PASTOR WAS AROUSED.

Ireton, Ia., Oct. 6, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—For some time past I have been a reader of your paper, and while I am heartily in sympathy with your work, and have been for many years, yet I was slow to believe that the secret lodge system was as bad as you had represented it to be. I read of the orders murdering men now and then, of their boycotting business men who dared to oppose them, of their sending men to the grand lodge above, yet ignoring Christ who is the only Saviour, of their burning the town of Blanchard, Ia., a short time ago, but these facts did not come to me with their full weight until I had come into contact with the wicked system, and smelt the brimstone of the lodge.

Several months ago our little city of Ireton was favored with an exposition of Masonry and Odd-fellowship by Pres. Blanchard, and while he opened the eyes of many to the evils of the lodge, and showed how many were being deceived by these false religions, which were good counterfeits of the true, his work also taught me several very important lessons, which you will pardon me for here bringing forward.

1. There is a sympathetic chord running through the secret societies, so that if you touch one order you will discover that you have, in a measure, touched many others. If a man belongs to any "one-horse order," and you expose Masonry or Odd-fellowship, you had best prepare for war.

2. Many secret society men, who belong to the church, will allow you to speak slightingly of their church, but will put on their "war paint" when you say anything against their order.

3. There are men, living in enlightened America, who do not know that the secrets of Masonry and Odd-fellowship have been made known years ago. Truth is often stranger than fiction."

4. Many good men and women do not wish to know the true character and workings of the secret orders, and many have not the moral courage and grace to "resist the devil."

5. The devil's tactics are much the same as in Christ's day. "Let us alone; what have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God?"

6. Let a saint enter and proceed far into some of the orders, so popular in our day, and it would require a miracle of grace to save him from giving Satan a mortgage upon him for time and eternity.

7. That the most ignorant, drunken lodgeman does not hesitate to set himself up as an authority, and to assert that Presidents Finney and Blanchard know nothing about the secrets of the orders.

8. That the lodge and the saloon at times are yoked together when the overseer has a very important and disreputable piece of work to be done.

9. That it is hard for an angry man to see or tell the truth, especially when sworn to "ever conceal and never reveal."

10. If you "love the praise of men more than the praise of God," or are in search of popularity, or after some office, better not stir up this "hornet's nest" by turning on the searchlight of investigation, or exposing it to the light of God's Word.

May God bless you in your great and much-needed work of opening the eyes of men and women to see the folly, silliness and sin of the secret lodge system.

IS JESUITRY TO RULE THE CATHOLIC CHURCH?

Washington, D. C., Oct. 7, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—Many good Protestants are worrying themselves because of rumors which have followed the virtual removal by the Pope of Bishop Keane from the rectorship of the Catholic University, a position he has held since the university was established, and the arrival in Washington of a new personal representative of the Pope. According to these rumors Bishop Keane has been deposed because he was considered too liberal in his religious ideas and in his dealings with members of other religious denominations, and the principal duty of the Pope's new American representative is to be the inauguration of a more aggressive and Jesuitical policy, not only for the Catholic University but for the Roman Catholic church of the United States.

I have no means of knowing the intentions either of the Pope or of his new representative, but have no hesitation in saying, speaking solely for myself, be it understood, that if any such change is contemplated by them it is the Catholics and not the Protestants who ought to be worrying about it. Every intelligent traveler and extensive and thoughtful reader knows that the Catholics of the United States have been for years and are to-day more liberal and broadminded, as a class, than are the Catholics of any other country, and there is little doubt that this liberality and broadmindedness has been a strong factor in making it the powerful denomination it is to-day in the United States. The spirit of toleration and freedom in one's religious views is too thoroughly a part of the average American's being for any church to gain accessions by attempting to go against it, either in spirit or by action. The Roman Catholic church has everything to lose and nothing to gain by an attempt to introduce Jesuitical methods into the United States, and if the Pope has any such ideas he will soon find that he is the victim of bad advisers.

INTERESTING MISSIONARY REFORM TOUR.

LETTER FROM OUR GWENN DALE INDIAN MISSIONARY.

Gwenn Dale, Ind. Ter., Oct. 5, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—This writing finds me just returned from a month's mission among the wild tribe of Kickapoo Indians, as well as the whites of that section of Eastern Oklahoma. For five weeks I had the pleasure of preaching the everlasting Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ to both whites and Indians. The meetings were held principally in the Kickapoo tabernacle under the auspices of the Friends, who for a number of years have been giving themselves to the work of evangelizing this tribe of wild redmen. The mission is under the direct supervision of Miss Elizabeth Test. Associated with her are the elect ladies, Mrs. Dr. Kirk and Miss Lina Lunt. Never did we have better and more faithful co-workers in revival effort than we found in these excellent Christian women. From the first we had the manifest presence of our God, and when the meetings closed some fifty souls perhaps had expressed faith in our living Saviour.

During the meetings I was ably assisted by our good brother, C. E. Roberts, who for some years has been laboring in Oklahoma. He is quite expert in the management of the magic lantern, and a number of these illustrated services were held among the Indians in their town and camps. It was very interesting to note the interest shown by these "wild sons of the forest" in the pictured story of Christ. Several of these Indians have found in Jesus a Saviour; the most notable case being a middle-aged man by the name of Par-thee, whose dear, kindly face will never fade out of my memory. How interested he is in the story of the cross. Through the interpreter, Mr. Thomas Alford, a Shawnee, he told me he wanted to know more about Jesus, and was anxious to learn to read the Bible so that he could convey the good news to his red kindred. I would especially request the readers of the Cynosure to pray for this saved redman, that he may be anointed with the power from on high and become a flaming torch among his people. It is the design of Miss Test and Miss Lunt to spend a large portion of their time in direct contact with this tribe, and teach them the English language as well as learn themselves to speak the Kickapoo tongue more fluently.

During the month past I preached a number of times in the streets of McLoud, two miles south of the mission. The first service I held, the leading rumseller, Lorrimore, sent me an invitation to come and preach in his saloon the following Saturday. I accepted the invitation. When I came to town the next Saturday the streets were well filled with people who had come out of curiosity to hear a sermon in a gin hell. The proprietor called me to one side and begged me not to say too hard things about his business, and then, because there was not enough room in the bar-room, he carried a case of beer bottles outside and had me use that as a pulpit. Thank God, that was one instance where I had got "hell under my feet." Hallelujah! Oh, what a precious season I had preaching the Word. The rumseller himself was a victim to tears, as well as most of the congregation, and several decided for Christ at that wonderful service.

I asked the privilege of preaching there the next Saturday, and it was granted; but when I came round to the saloon he refused to let me hold the service there, saying to a friend, that he had lost a lot of dollars as a result of the former meeting, and that I had better go down the street and hold the service. Borrowing a store-box, I held forth in front of the building next door, and gave the rum traffic a blast that, I trust God, will not soon be forgotten. Alas, alas! the rum business flourishes like a green bay tree in fair Oklahoma, and the most fiendish feature of it is, that the Indians are being made a tribe of drunkards. How long, O Lord, how long! is the cry of my soul, until this evil shall be banished from the land? Not till Jesus comes. Let the saints of God everywhere pray, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." There is no hope in either of the old political parties, and the prohibitionists are "but a little flock."

Lodgery runs wild in the Territory. Ministers of the Gospel (so-called), of nearly all denominations, leading members of the churches, along with whoremongers, infidels, deists, Universalists, free-lovers, spiritualists, and all sorts of "unclean birds," have confederated together under oath to Judaize and paganize even the very elect, if possible, and bury under the rubbish of lodge religion the true Gospel of Jesus Christ. My heart has been pained beyond expression in taking a survey of the true condition of the professing church, and witnessing its ruined and apostate state. May God Almighty deliver those who have been brought into bondage by these cunning devices of the devil. I am more than ever determined to preach the whole truth. It is needed, sadly needed in these days of spiritual declension. Oh, that our God may raise up a band of fearless testimony-givers in this great field who will "purge the floor" without fear of the face of man. It is needed, needed, needed, here and everywhere.

The Orphanage is still running on schedule time, although some of our stops at way-stations have been a little tedious and trying. Testings do come in all work of this kind, but our Lord gives us the victory. Bless his name.

Yours in service for the Master,

J. E. Wolfe.

THE LODGE AND THE SALOON.

FOURTH LETTER.

Blanchard, Iowa, Oct. 5, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—"Intemperance is the only curse ever known upon earth which at one and the same time assails a man in all his interests, in all his endearing ties and relations, and in all his capacities for bliss and all his susceptibilities of woe. It hews him down on every side, pursues his body in every step and his mind in every thought, and overwhelms all of present possession and of future hope in its remorseless and horrible perdition."

This quotation is from Horace Mann, whom the world, both Christian and un-Christian, delighted to honor. The curse that he speaks of in this quotation is a curse that I hate with every fibre of my being; and every true man, be he Christian or non-Christian, ought to do the same. Ought to, do I say? Yea, verily, every true man will do the same. And yet this is the curse that we had to fight in this enlightened age and in this enlightened community of Blanchard, Iowa. And what is worse still, there were found men not only to perpetrate this curse, but also men to uphold those who perpetrated it, and who are ready, after our hard-earned victory, to apologize for it and abuse those who fought the Lord's battles; and these men are principally lodgemen.

We speak of the saloon being entrenched in the political parties. But what is it that controls the political parties? The lodge! I prophesy that so long as we have the lodge we will have the saloon. They are Siamese twins, and must live and die together.

The picture we have drawn here describes the situation at the time referred to at the close of my last letter. Matters were getting warm. The hosts were marshaling on either side and a conflict was inevitable. The saloon element was becoming more bold. The executive committee of the Law and Order League was acting cautiously and the good people were becoming impatient. The community had arranged for a grand celebration of the Fourth of July, and all looked anxiously forward to it. It was evident to many of us that there would be a struggle that would decide whether our town was to stand for temperance or intemperance. But we must reserve the scenes of this day for another letter, and ask the reader to wait as we had to wait. J. R. W.

FALLING OF IN CHURCH MEMBERSHIP—WHY?

Wellington, Ohio, Oct. 3, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—The annual conference of the M. E. church for Northern Ohio was in session here last week, presided over by Bishop Fowler, once of Evanston. Of the five hundred and eighty-six preachers in attendance, two-thirds of them are Masons, as I am informed by a long-standing, intelligent Methodist, and a leading Mason who is not a Methodist. Most of them are good men who, after joining the lodge, never give it much attention or study its principles, but accept its benefits and attend its banquets, all free to them; and being good Christian men, are used as decoy ducks to lead thoughtless young men into the lodge, and are never able afterward to lead them from the lodge into Christianity.

Bishop Fowler, by his arbitrary orders and rulings, his manifest favoritism in his appointments has earned the title of dictator. He is doubtless a Mason. The Mason who has been pastor here two years was made a presiding elder, and the presiding elder, who presided over this district was given a popular pastorate in Cleveland. He is a Mason. Elder Mather, of the Wooster district, threw a firebrand into the conference in his report of a falling off of membership in his district, and gave as a reason the increase of secret societies. Our local paper reported him as follows:

Rev. Geo. Mather, presiding elder of the Wooster district, attributes the lack of interest taken in church matters in many instances to the unusual number of secret orders in the field that must be sustained. He reported a falling off in membership in his district, due, as he explained, to the pastor's correcting records. Owing to financial struggles and the multiplication of secret societies, he said, it was impossible for many parishioners to meet the calls of the church for financial aid. Speaking of certain country charges the elder said: "It is expecting too much of successive pastors to serve such societies, who do not pay, perhaps, one-quarter of their reasonable share of support, and yet demand annually protracted meetings, at which the mere excitement is to religion as 16 to 1, and the number of professed converts who remain steadfast to those who do not, is as 1 to 16." This reference made a decided hit, and a round of merriment followed.

It is not strange that ignorant, superstitious Methodists should be captivated by the old heathen rights and mysteries. They appeal to their emotional nature which is the major part of their religion. But it seems strange to me that intelligent, educated ministers should lend themselves to the promotion of secret societies, which are unquestionably the greatest hindrance to the spread of Christianity, except, possibly, the liquor traffic. Go into the churches and prayer-meetings everywhere and two-thirds or three-fourths of the members are women, going to heaven through the merits of Jesus, while it seems as if their husbands and sons expect to reach heaven through the lodge. E. S. Tripp.

NO COMPROMISE WITH THE LODGE.

REPORT ON SECRET SOCIETIES ADOPTED BY THE ILLINOIS FREE METHODIST CONFERENCE AT MORRIS, OCT 5, 1896.

Your committee on oath-bound secret societies begs leave to submit the following report: Oath-bound secret societies in their nature and practice are contrary to the plain teaching of the Christian religion. They are a device of the devil to keep the worship of Belial in existence, and an enemy to the true worship of God. Masonry, the mother of them all, claims the authority of salvation for her members. The Free and Accepted Mason says: "I want no other religion than that found in my lodge;" thus standing in the way of his salvation through Christ, and counting the blood of the Covenant an unholy thing.

These oath-bound organizations, instead of bringing their members into a state of moral purity, only make them two-fold more the children of the devil; teaching principles that lead the individual to trust in something contrary to the law of God. The only institution of salvation is that provided through the atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, who said: "In secret have I said nothing." Oath-bound secret societies are becoming so numerous that the moral condition of our nation has become corrupted by them. We can look no longer to the officials of our country for justice. They are all bound by secret oaths to protect the lawless class of society with but few exceptions.

Not only do these oath-bound secret organizations affect the moral condition of our fair nation, but they have crept into what was once the "sanctuary of God;" and the churches that were once "fighting the good fight of faith" are "cable-towed" and "tongue-tied." The Gospel ministry, that ought to be a herald of the truth, has become a mere tool of the lodge. The influence of the lodge is to draw away from the church to some extent. Especially is this so in finances; the wealth of the lodge is remarkable. Take for example the great wealth of the Masonic Temple in the city of Chicago and other valuable property they possess, drawing largely from the church treasury means that ought to be used for the upbuilding of Christ's kingdom on the earth, in the salvation of souls.

We thank God, however, that there are some exceptions to this general rule, and a possibility of our keeping the enemy at bay. No doubt he is seeking an admittance among us. He will, if he can, put in the entering wedge and destroy our usefulness in the kingdom of Christ as he has done other denominations; but we say, by the grace and power of God, "Never." We rejoice that our little Zion, in the length and breadth of her borders, still takes her stand unconditionally against all classes of oath-bound secret societies.

HOW SHRINKAGE IS PRODUCED.

Wool Fiber Dissolved by Hot Water and Acid.

The explanation commonly given of this, which is as follows, is quite inadequate: Wool has a surface covered with sawlike teeth, all pointing, in each hair, in one direction. This is what gives it the important quality of felting—i. e., of being formed into a compact substance by interlocking of thousands and thousands of the teeth. In the best wools these teeth are numbered by thousands to the inch in each hair. They cannot be seen except by the aid of the microscope, but may be felt by drawing a lock of wool through the fingers from tip to root. The resistance is then much greater than when the wool is drawn from root to tip. The shrinking of wool in washing is generally attributed to the interlocking of these teeth. But shrinking is found to take place when wool is wetted, even when there is no pressure which would cause the teeth to catch against each other.

"A woolen fabric exposed to warmth and moisture shrinks in every direction in a manner which interlocking does not explain." A better explanation is suggested by the fact that "the introduction of acid into the water in which the fabric is dipped greatly quickens the process and increases its extent." This fact and the increase of shrinkage caused by the addition of heat makes it appear probable that the wool fiber is partially dissolved, especially that part which contains the original cells still retaining their contents. The walls of these cells bursting through the heat, etc., and their contents being discharged, shrinkage naturally take place.

How to Preserve Oilcloths.

Cut into pieces half an ounce of beeswax, put in a saucer, cover entirely with turpentine and place in the oven until melted. After washing the oilcloth thoroughly with a flannel rub the whole surface lightly with a bit of flannel dipped in the melted wax and turpentine. Then rub with a dry cloth. A polish is produced, and the surface is lightly coated with the wax. When the floor requires to be cleaned, the wax is washed off, together with the dust or dirt that may have gathered, while the oilcloth is preserved.

How Rocking Puts a Child to Sleep.

Rocking, in common with other monotonous movements, such as patting and the movement of walking, seems to cause sleep by the same process as hypnotism. Mesmeric sleep is induced by fixing the subject's attention on a single object, such as the "passes" of the operator, some bright object held near the eyes or a distant light, and some mesmerists produce sleep by stroking the subject's face, the "passes" being frequently repeated so as to cause a similarly monotonous effect, and it is supposed that the concentration and consequent exhaustion of the mind is the cause of the phenomenon. The sleep induced by a lullaby, the sound of running water and even the monotonous tones of a preacher is also probably often hypnotic in character. Only certain so called neurotics are subject to hypnotic influence, but the majority of young children may be included in this class, and there are some children who are not soothed to sleep by rocking.

How to Cure Insomnia.

The utility of heat as a remedy for sleeplessness can scarcely be overestimated, particularly in the form of hot water. Insomnia is frequently overcome by the persistent use of hot footbaths and simple hot water as a drink at bedtime. Sleeplessness is commonly caused by overfulness of the blood vessels of the head. The bathing of the feet draws the blood from the head; the hot drink distributes the gases of the stomach and gives one a sense of general comfort.

How Eyeglasses Are Made.

The pieces of glass which are to be made into lenses for spectacles, for microscopes, small telescopes and the like are first ground into shape roughly by being held against a cast iron tool like a grindstone. This, of course, is curved to give the lens the concavity or convexity desired. From this tool the glass passes to a fine tool, so called, of similar construction, but made of brass and covered with a fine powder of sulphate of iron, calcined and ground. Jewelers call it rouge. Then a third tool, like the second, but covered with cloth which is thoroughly powdered with rouge, is used for polishing. After both sides have been treated thus the lens is cut to the required shape, oval or round, with a diamond glass cutter and steel pinchers, and the edges are ground smooth on metal wheels.

How to Make Pistache Cream.

Pound 2 ounces of blanched pistachio kernels in a mortar and run them through a sieve. Work into them half a pint of double cream; add a few drops of vanilla and an ounce of castor sugar. Melt half an ounce of amber gelatin in a little milk and add. Pour the cream into a wetted mold. Turn out when set.

How to Polish Linen.

Melt together an ounce of white wax and 2 ounces of spermaceti with a large spoonful of salt. Dissolve these ingredients over a slow fire and pour into a wet cup to cool. Make boiled starch in the usual way, cooking it slowly for 20 minutes, and for every tablespoonful of dry starch used add a lump of the above preparation about as large as a cherry. Use no cold starch and do not sprinkle. When the starched pieces are dry, lay them in a wet towel for two hours and bring up the gloss by rubbing evenly with the heel of a polishing iron. The great secret in glazing starched goods is to use the polishing iron properly.

CALL FOR THE PENNSYLVANIA CONVENTION

To the friends of the anti-secrecy cause in Pennsylvania, greeting: It has been thought wise to hold our annual convention this year in autumn rather than spring as heretofore. You are hereby invited to assemble in the Green Tree Brethren church, Oaks, Montgomery county, Nov. 18th, at 2 P. M, to listen to addresses, engage in discussion and transact such business as may come before the convention. The convention will continue its sessions through the following day and evening. Rev. W. B. Stoddard will arrange and report details. Let all come who can. Come in the fear of God and in prayer, believing that he will be present in the mighty operations of his spirit, and the wonderful manifestation of his truth. We request earnest supplication, by all the friends who read this call, for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon this convention. We go forward believing that our Lord will be present to work mightily for his own cause, and assured that he will not disappoint our expectation. "According to your faith, so shall it be."

(Rev.) J. C. McFeeters, Pres.

Philadelphia, Oct. 9, 1896.

OUR LECTURERS IN THE FIELD.

Reader, can you think of any class of Christian workers more entitled to your sympathies, prayers, support and co-operation than our N. C. A. lecturers? Only think of the work they are doing; they preach on Sabbath as the Lord opens the way for them; they preach a reform Gospel which your pastor cannot preach without losing, in many cases, the support of some of your congregatiom. They preach the most radical reform Gospel—a Gospel that strikes at the very tap-root of the cancer that is consuming the vitals of our republic.

With preaching on Sabbath they combine the work of lecturing during the week, and also the work of circulating the most needed reform literature; thus they are most efficiently using those three mighty engines for moulding public sentiment—the pulpit, the platform and the press. In addition to these they also combine the work of house to house visitation and individual solicitation and interview. How the angels might envy a man possessed of such glorious opportunities for the dissemination of divine truth.

Think too of the sacrifice involved in this work. These lecturers are most of the time away from home and among strangers. They are poorly paid. They are constantly brought in contact with the most deep seated and bitter prejudice. They are frequently on a strain of anxiety in regard to meetings and conventions, having to bear so much of the responsibility alone. Nothing would prevent them from breaking down under the burden of this responsibility but the cultivation of a calm, unwavering trust in the Lord.

Now reader, can you not do something to help on these devoted, self-sacrificing home missionaries? Write to the one nearest to you. Tell him the situation on the lodge question in your place. Study how you can arrange a meeting for him. Invite him to come, and provide him a good home while with you. Call a parlor meeting and consult with a few friends. Pray much over this matter and the Lord will reveal what you can do.

HAZING MAY PROVE FATAL.

The barbarous treatment inflicted by full-grown men and college students upon those who are initiated into secret fraternaties is a fearful example for the youth in our schools, who seem to be born with a disposition to imitate their parents in these barbarities. A dispatch from Wheeling, Va., dated Sept. 21, says:

"The results of a brutal hazing by boys of the Madison District Public School were made public to-day. There are two school buildings in the ward, and the boys from the upper grade have made a practice of 'initiating' boys sent up from the lower. Last week Eddie Bowie, a delicate boy of nine, went to the upper grade school. Several boys seized him by the legs and arms and bumped him against a tree. The little fellow would not cry, and the same treatment was given the next day. That night he was seized with fever and spasms, and a doctor was called. He diagnosed the case as concussion of the brain and severe injury to the spine.

"Since then young Bowie has hovered between life and death, and is now in a critical condition. The matter has been turned over to the commissioners of the district, and they are making every effort to bring the boys implicated to punishment. Since this case has been brought to light, it transpires that many of the small boys have been subjected to very severe treatment, and that others have received dangerous injuries. The practice of hazing in the public schools will now be broken and any boys indulging in it will be dealt with severely."

A POINTER FOR TEMPERANCE WORKERS.

Father Mathew Herald, in a late issue of the Catholic Review, tells us where to use the lever in the great lift for temperance. He says:

"A great deal of the energy that is now being spent—in some instances wasted—in the endeavor to persuade an adult to quit drinking, and, for the purpose of encouraging others, join a total abstinence society, might be directed to the youth with profit. If temperance workers would study human nature more they would again learn what they may have forgotten, that the young mind is easily influenced, and that as the twig is bent so the tree grows.

"While they reason and argue with one man addicted to drink, they could by proper methods enroll—we do not know how many children in the total abstinence ranks. For twenty-six years the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America has labored with the adult with praiseworthy results, however, which are but an evidence of what ought to be accomplished by directing its efforts to the young. After a generation of existence the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America numbers some 75,000 members.

"Is it a wild, reckless calculation on our part to say that this great union with its twenty-six years of experience could not within one year, aided by the clergy generally, enroll within its ranks 75,000 of the Catholic youths of America? We think it is neither a dream nor a delusion. By laboring with the children for the next twenty-six years we could look ahead and see a generation of total abstainers where we now see a generation of tipplers."

AUTHOR OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

No one can read that remarkable book written a century ago by Prof. John Robison, of the Edinburgh University, on "Freemasonry a Conspiracy Against All Religions and Governments," without being convinced that Freemasonry was the secret and powerful agent in working up the French Revolution. Prof. Robison, himself a Freemason, having traveled extensively and visited many European capitals and investigated a wide range of literature, quotes many witnesses on this subject. One is Prof. Lesranc, author of a book on the French Revolution, in which he proves that the lodges in France were the schools of anarchy and assassination.

Prof. Lesranc says, "That this shocking perversion of Freemasonry to seditious purposes was, in a great measure, but a late thing, and was chiefly brought about by the agents of the Grand Master, the Duke of Orleans. He was, however, of opinion that the whole Masonic fraternity was hostile to Christianity and to good morals, and that it was the contrivance of the great schismatic Faustus Socinus, who being terrified by the fate of Servetus, at Geneva, fell on this method of promulgating his doctrines among the great in secret. This opinion is but ill supported, and is incompatible with many circumstances in Freemasonry. But it is out of our way at present.

"Mr. Lesranc then takes particular notice of the many degrees of chivalry cultivated in the lodges, and shows how, by artful changes in the successive explanations of the same symbols, the doctrines of Christianity, and of all revealed religion, are completely exploded, and the Philosophe Inconnu becomes at last a professed atheist. He then takes notice of the political doctrines which are in like manner gradually unfolded, by which 'patrotism and loyalty to the Prince are declared to be narrow principles, inconsistent with universal benevolence, and with the native and imprescriptible rights of man; civil subordination is actual oppression, and princes are ex officio usurpers and tyrants.' These principles he fairly deduces from the catechisms of the Chevalier du Soleil, and of the Philosophe Inconnu.

"He then proceeds to notice more particularly the intrigues of the Duke of Orleans. From these it appears evident that his ambitious views and hopes had been of long standing, and that it was entirely by his support and encouragement that seditious doctrines were permitted in the lodges. Many noblemen and gentlemen were disgusted and left these lodges, and advantage was taken of their absence to improve the lodges still more, that is, to make them still more anarchical and seditious. Numbers of paltry scribblers, who haunted the Palais Royal, were admitted into the lodges, and there vented their poisonous doctrines.

"The Duke turned his chief attention to the French guards, introducing many of the privates and inferior officers into the obscure and even the more respectable lodges, so that the officers were frequently disgusted in the lodges by the insolent behavior of their own soldiers, under the mask of Masonic brotherhood and equality—and this behavior became not unfrequent even out of doors. He asserts with great confidence that the troops were much corrupted by these intrigues—and that when they sometimes declared, on service, that they would not fire on their brethren, the phrase had a particular reference to their Masonic fraternity, because they recognized many of their brother Masons in every crowd. And the corruption was by no means confined to Paris and its neighborhood, but extended to every place in the kingdom where there was a municipality and a Mason lodge."

ANTI-MASONIC ORGANIZATION IN THE UNITED STATES.

The Catholic Review of New York, the leading Catholic organ in this country, in its issue of Oct. 10, quotes several columns from the Cynosure, showing the encroachments of the lodge upon our American churches and the influence of the lodge to undermine morality. In a leading editoral it says:

"If Catholics will interest themselves in opposing their really powerful and dangerous enemy they will get the support, the full, earnest and efficient support of all sincere and true Christians, of all those whose desire is to defeat the enemies of Christ, the enemies of all forms of Christianity.

"The 'National Christian Association' has in its service earnest and competent workers, some of whom have held high rank among the Masons. They have held the responsible positions of Masters and of Grand Masters.

"These men have been organizing Anti-masonic conventions in nearly every State in the Union, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. They find their strongest, their most active and successful opponents to be ministers, who have been drawn into the lodges by those who pretend that they never solicit anyone to become a Mason.

"According to Grand Master Vrooman there were in 1890, in the State of New York, 75,000 Masons in good standing, and among them more than 700 ministers. With their phenomenal increase in the last fifteen years the Masons in the State now exceed 100 000, and the ministers perhaps more than 1,000, for the ambitious find it necessary to join the order if they wish to gain popularity and promotion.

"The late Dr. Hall of Brooklyn was a distinguished member of the order; the Rev. Dr. Thurring, also of Brooklyn, is a Grand Prelate of the Knights Templar, and Bishop Potter of New York is a Supreme Grand Prelate of the Supreme Grand Lodge of the State.

"In February last a contemporary stated that among the secret societies the 'first in respect to membership come the Odd-fellows, with an enumeration of more than 1,000,000.' This means, of course, that of every sixty people, young and old, that the reader meets, one is an Odd fellow. The Freemasons have nearly a million, then the Knights of Pythias have half a million, the United Workmen less than half a million and the Knights of Maccabees about a quarter of a million. The journal referred to says:

"'It is a peculiar thing about these organizations that by far the larger number have been established during the past fifteen years, and since that time the increase in the membership has been relatively even larger than the increase in the number of separate organizations.'"

LODGE FIGHT AT BLANCHARD, IOWA.

The letters in the Cynosure for some weeks past reporting the battle in an Iowa town against the saloon and lodge are interesting reading. We know of no battle-ground where these evils have made such a desperate fight for existence as in the little town of Blanchard.

The writer took charge of a congregation in that neighborhood in the spring of 1878, two years before this town started. It was lonesome in those days, with no railroad nearer than Clarinda, Iowa, or Maryville, Mo. But we managed to keep busy preaching on Sabbath, lecturing in schoolhouses and writing articles for the papers. The weekly visits of the Cynosure and American Freeman were an inspiration. The latter was a radical anti-secret paper published at Albany, Gentry Co., Mo., by Geo. W. Needels, a well-to-do farmer. For several years he was obliged to hire a Mason to set his type and run the paper, for no Anti-mason would risk the persecution.

About 1876 he secured as editor John D. Nutting, a graduate of Wheaton College. He made a good editor, and the paper gave radical ringing editorials on the anti-secret issue. Physically, he was a little fellow and young and boyish in appearance, but he wielded a brilliant, incisive pen, which soon began to strike fire in that conservative lodge-ridden town. One day he was publicly cowhided in the postoffice by a burley lodgite, whose ire had been raised by something published in the paper. The sharp cracks of the whip, the wild yells of the crowd and Bro. Nutting dancing violently to the music was a scene calculated to raise the blood and the young editor felt it keenly; but there was no redress for him in the courts or anywhere but to bide God's time. He afterward left the Freeman, studied theology at Oberlin, and is now a successful pastor in Salt Lake City.

After this, M. N. Butler, then a student of Avalon College, Mo., took editorial charge of the Freeman and ran it with good success for a number of years. His heart was in the work and his good editorial enterprise gave the paper a large circulation. The mobbing of Elder Rathbun at Kellerton, Ia., June 21, 1881, aroused an interest in the cause in Iowa and Missouri, and the Freeman was introduced into a large number of homes around Blanchard. But a few years afterward, when the Freeman was merged into the Washington American, the question came, who will keep the anti-secret banner unfurled on this Missouri slope?

Rev. Rufus Johnson, a fearless and radical United Presbyterian minister, was then publishing the Blanchard Record. It was a good local paper of high moral tone. Though not assailing the lodges, yet their members found that the editor would not publish their doings in the paper nor list the lodges along with the churches. A number of prominent Freemasons had attempted from the first to run the town, and almost the first institution started was a Masonic lodge, and the conflict with the lodge began by Elder D. P. Rathbun working the degrees in the United Presbyterian church.

What characterized this lodge fight from the beginning was the effort of the lodges to control the local press. The town could with difficulty support but one local paper. The lodge men first withdrew their support from Bro. Johnson because he protested in his paper against the Fair Ground Association allowing the grounds to be used on Sabbath for horse racing. To the shame of these lodges be it recorded their influence was ever thrown on the side of immorality; and strange to say, some of the church members joined with them in boycotting those who took a stand for good morals. To a large extent the secret empire has the press of the country by the throat. The lodges do this by standing by their principles and withdrawing support from every paper they cannot control, while in most cases Christian people join in supporting the lodge press without question.

The lodges brought a Masonic editor to the town and started a rival paper for the purpose of driving out Bro. Johnson. This led him to change the Record into a general reform paper, including the anti-secret reform. He struggled hard for three years and was compelled to do job work to keep the paper afloat. Often when the town was asleep at eleven o'clock at night were his office windows aflame, while he toiled at his job press. When he finally gave up the fight it was taken up by the late Rev. Henry W. Johnson, who published the paper for several years in the neighboring town of College Springs, under the name of The Crank. He was a devoted reformer, and kept the paper on the high plain of anti-secrecy.

For several years there has been a lull in the anti-lodge agitation at Blanchard, and the anti-liquor fight resulting in the burning of the town is doubtless because the words "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," have not been acted upon.

REV. C. E. BENTLEY, AN ANTI-SECRETIST.

Numerous enquiries have come to the Cynosure office asking if Rev. C. E. Bentley, of Nebraska, candidate for President on the National Prohibition party ticket, was a member of any secret order?

We are glad to inform our readers that Mr. Bentley not only has no connection with any secret order but that he is opposed to them.

Rev. J. I. Frederick, formerly editor of the New Republic, the Prohibition organ of Nebraska, visited our office last week. He is intimately acquainted with Mr. Bentley and informed us that he was a member of no secret order.

Carrie M. Tarbell, of Ames, Neb., says: "C. E. Bentley once remarked when a guest in my home, that he had never belonged to any secret society, and if his boys followed their father's advice they never would."

"THE LARGER CHRIST."

A book bearing this title is just now having a prodigious sale. Its author, Rev. Geo. D. Herron, a young Presbyterian minister, after a successful pastorate of some years in Minnesota, has settled down as professor in Grinnell College, Iowa. Like Josiah Strong, he is deeply exercised over the problem of how to apply the religion of Christ to society, and the nation. His book is in a terse, original style, and is deservedly popular, because it meets a felt want in a multitude of Christian hearts. So many feel that Christianity is a salve for every political sore, and yet the hurt of our nation is not healing. It must be because of some defect in the application.

Dr. Herron says: "The state must find Christ. It is not sufficient that the state has Christian citizens. We have the spectacle of men Christian in their private spheres who are atheist in politics. And political atheism is the prelude of political anarchy. No historical nation has ever existed for material ends, mainly for the promotion of trade and protection of property, for the levying of taxes, distribution of rewards, and regulation of tariffs, without disrupting its life. The state is by birth a divine organism; it is the offspring of God. It is as truly the business of the state to have no motive but righteousness as it is God's business. The governments of men have no other moral reason for existing than the reason of the Word's being made flesh. A congress, a legislature, a municipal council, has no moral right to sit for any other business than that for which God sits on his throne. Nor can the state evade its mission by handing it over to the will of the majority. Majorities are no substitute for God. The rule of a majority may be just as vicious and intolerable as the tyranny of Herod, or King John. The state has fallen from its divine origin. The 'soul of the state,' whose existence Shakespeare declares has been seduced by the subtleties of covetousness, and needs regeneration. Except the state believe on Christ it cannot be saved any more than a man. It must repent and be converted, and receive the baptism of the Spirit, before it can become a witness for righteousness. Only as the state walks in the light of the throne, and accepts the judgments of the Lamb. can it be the minister of justice and peace among men."

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Elder J. F. Browne called again at our office last week on his way to Georgia.

—Rev. R. Hargrave of Northwood, O., visited us this week enroute to Sterling, Kan.

—Rev. J. Beck, pastor of the Lutheran church, Richmond, Ind., was a welcome caller at our office last week.

—Rev. J. W. Dill, of Clarinda, Iowa, and Rev. J. I. Frederick, of Lincoln, Neb., were welcome Cynosure visitors last week.

—Rev. John Harper, pastor of the U. P. church, Smithville, Ill., visited the Cynosure last Thursday on his return from New York.

—Rev. E. D. Bailey, of Washington, D. C., we are sorry to hear is prostrated with fever. His great work has been as an evangelist and city missionary in the nation's capital. He was also for a number of years the N. C. A. lecturer and agent for New England.

—Mrs. Emily C. Bridges, widow of the late Thomas B. Bridges, died at the residence of her son-in-law, P. L. Hanscom, Oak street, Oct. 6th, aged eighty-five years. Mrs. Bridges was a sister of Deacon Philo Carpenter, one of Chicago's best known early pioneers and Congregational Abolitionists.

—I am advised by Mr. J. C. Yoder, of Lancaster, Pa., that he has begun work in his county under the direction of Secretary W. B. Stoddard. He sends, under date of the 8th, three subscriptions to the Lodge Lamp, and asks for tracts for distribution, which have been sent him. Bro. Yoder is a man of ability, and I hope for good work. He has seemed to me very contentious in the Huntington matter, but I belive now that God will use him to His glory if he "seeks peace and pursues it." P.

—Bro. F. P. Hassman, of Rhinelander, Wis., writes: "I am glad to hear that I am not the only one that is against Masonry and other lodges. For almost two years I have kept the secrets of Masonry for fear I would lose my life and good company; but a short time ago I became a Christian, and last Monday evening I spoke to my pastor about Masonry, and he gave me two of your Lodge Lamps and warned me not to tell that I had them from him. But I feel it is my duty to fight against the enemies of Christ, and I am now ready to die for my Saviour, and come to you for help. I want to post myself and then go out in public. But I am only twenty years of age; am in this country four years, and learned the blacksmith trade in Germany three years ago, and worked at it ever since. Last winter I attended the Wisconsin Business University in La Crosse. Now I wish you would send me what would do me the most good, and I shall remit the money to the amount of three dollars, and will do so gladly."

—Rev. Wm. Fenton of St. Paul attended the Baptist Association in that city this week. He writes: "On my way to the meeting, a Royal Arch Mason and two Star women entered the car. The Royal Arch man took a seat by my side. They were at once supplied with Anti-masonic tracts. He belongs, he said, to a Presbyterian church. When I told him that we had books published by the Masonic fraternity, he declared that a man that is not a Mason could not know any thing about it. I told him that we had "Ecce Orienti," and the Cabala. He said that we could not read them. I admonished him that some were given over to believe the lie, and referred to the Masonic lie about the resurrection of Hiram, and asked him if his pastor had not instructed him in God's Word? He said that his pastor is a Mason. Alas, for the Presbyterian denomination, she has gone in the way of Balaam. This state of things seems to be in the order of development spoken of in God's Word: "With all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion that they should believe the lie. That they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." 2 Thess. 2: 10–13. If the resurrection of Hiram that the Masons substitute for the resurrection of Christ be not "the lie," what worse thing is there that it can be?

THE UNEMPLOYED.

TRACING THEIR EVOLUTION FROM FEUDALISM DOWN TO TODAY.

The Injustice and Cruelties of the Past Are Found In Slightly Changed Forms at Present—Concluding Paper of Mrs. Oppenheimer Full of Interest.

[Special Correspondence.]

The golden age of the English laborer in the fifteenth century came abruptly to an end. Sudden as the change was, however, when wages at last went down and prices went up the causes which led to it had been long preparing in the social depths. "The prelude to the revolutions that laid the foundations of the capitalist made of production," says Marx (chapter 27), "was played in the last third of the fifteenth and the first decade of the sixteenth century." The breaking up of the bands of feudal retainers flung a considerable number of people on a labor market incapable of absorbing them, in which they were very probably by their habits of life and previous training largely unfitted to be absorbed. While the struggles of the royal power to obtain complete sovereignty as against the nobles hastened the dissolution of the bands of retainers, it was by no means the only cause of it. The old nobility had mostly perished in the great feudal wars, and the young generation of nobles met the new conditions with new ideas.

In conflict with both king and parliament these feudal lords turned large masses of peasants upon a labor market which was already in less degree being overstocked by the houseless feudal retainers who had so long everywhere uselessly filled house and castle. They drove the peasantry forcibly from the land with a total disregard of the feudal rights which the peasant shared together with the lords, and they usurped the common lands. The motive which impelled the nobles to this revolutionary action was the rapid development of the Flemish wool manufactures and the corresponding rise in the price of wool. Transformation of arable land into sheep walks was everywhere the cry. Rogers says that acts of parliament in the sixteenth century complain that inclosures of arable and common fields are made for the purpose of laying them down in pasture and that there is a considerable increase in sheep breeding, accompanied by a serious enhancement in the price of sheep and wool.

The complaint about inclosures dates back to the fifteenth century, when the land hunger of the age led to encroachment on common pastures and the forcible extinction of rights over common land. In his history of Henry VII, Bacon says, quoted by Marx, chapter 27: "Inclosures at that time (1489) began to be more frequent, whereby arable land, which could not be manured without people and families, was turned into pasture, which was easily rid by a few herdsmen, and tenancies for years, lives and at will—whereupon much of the yeomanry lived — were turned into demesnes. This bred a decay of people, and by consequence a decay of towns, churches, tithes and the like."

As the era of laissez faire had not yet begun, parliament interfered by various acts and regulations designed to take away depopulating inclosures and depopulating pasturage. Some of these regulations endured—in part, at least—for a long time. As late as the first half of the eighteenth century complaint is made if the cottage of the agricultural laborer has not an adjunct of one or two acres of land. This law aroused the wrath of Arthur Young in 1770, probably on the principle stated by later writers that "a few acres to a cottage would make the laborers too independent."

To these two classes of the unemployed, the bands of feudal retainers and the much larger mass of dispossessed peasants, there was added a third. The Catholic church was at the time of the reformation, says Marx, "feudal proprietor of a great part of the English land." The suppression of the monasteries sent their inmates into the ranks of the working classes. The estates were largely given away to royal favorites or sold at nominal prices to speculating farmers and citizens, who drove out the hereditary subtenants and inclosed great quantities of ground for the feeding of sheep. "The property of the church formed the religious bulwark of the traditional conditions of feudal property. With its fall these were no longer tenable" (Marx).

Rogers, who does not by any means share the philosophical views of Marx, also dwells upon the hardships caused to the agricultural laborer by the extinction of his immemorial rights of pasture and fuel and by the unjust dealings of the sheep masters who succeeded the monks. He calls attention to another, a minor, factor in the part which the suppression of the monasteries played in creating pauperism or at least in bringing it into the public view. The duty of aiding the needy was universal, and the monasteries were renowned for their almsgiving. "Themselves the creatures of charity, they could not deny to others that on which they subsisted." Perhaps these institutions may have created the mendicancy which they relieved, but it cannot be doubted that they assisted much which needed their help. In that day of most imperfect surgery it is an open question whether the crippled and deformed were not a larger element in proportion to the population than they are now.

Rogers also discusses at length the debasement of the currency which began in 1543 under Henry VIII, regarding it as a contributory cause of the increase of poverty. He says, "Henry and his own had at last, though unwittingly, given effect to the statute of laborers." It is Rogers' idea that the pauperism and degradation of the English laborer were the result of a series of acts of parliament and acts of government which were designed or adopted with the express purpose of compelling the laborer to work at the lowest rate of wages possible and which succeeded at last in effecting that purpose. He gives great importance to the statute of Elizabeth's time (5 Eliz., cap. 4) empowering the local magistrates to fix the rate of wages in husbandry and in handicrafts. This is the famous statute which in some shape continued in legal sanction till 1812, and by a sufficient understanding for long after that date wages which had defied the statute of laborers in force for over 200 years; did, in fact, conform to the assessments of the justices. Rogers says it was because the position of the workingman had been weakened, as "he had been constrained for fully a generation to submit to a base currency and to undergo other losses." Marx takes the position that the acts of parliament were merely the expression of existing social conditions, not their cause.

With these various classes of the dispossessed is the feudal household retainers, the monks and nuns, and the peasantry driven from the land thus flung upon the labor market, we find the unemployed quickly developing, legally at least, and probably, in fact, to a considerable extent into vagrants and paupers. There was at the end of the fifteenth and throughout the sixteenth century a bloody legislation against vagabondage, beginning under Henry VII. In 1530, under Henry VIII, sturdy vagabonds are to be tied to the cart tail and whipped until the blood streams from their bodies; then to swear an oath to go back to their birthplace or to where they have lived the last three years and "to put themselves to labor." In a later statute of the same reign, on a third arrest for vagabondage the offender is to be executed as a hardened criminal and enemy of the common weal. A statute of Edward VI (1547) ordains that if any one refuses to work he shall be condemned as a slave to the person who has denounced him as an idler. He is to be branded on the forehead or back with the letter S. The master can sell him, bequeath him, let him out on hire as a slave, just as any other personal chattel or cattle. All persons have the right to take away the children of the vagabonds and to keep them as apprentices, the young men until the twenty-fourth year, the girls until the twentieth. If they run away, they are to become up to this age the slaves of their masters, who can put them in irons, whip them, etc., if they like.

With all this savage legislation in the forty-third year of Elizabeth's reign, the nation was obliged to recognize pauperism officially by the introduction of a poor rate. It is singular that this act was originally meant to be only temporary. It was by the last clause only to continue to the end of the next session of parliament. It was, however, reserved and finally made perpetual by the sixteenth of Charles I. In its general principles it lasted till the year 1835. Marx says that it then assumed a new and harsher form. This act, together with kindred legislation, like the law of parochial settlement, is henceforward intimately associated with the economic history of labor in England. "I can conceive nothing more cruel," says Rogers, "I had almost said more insolent, than to condemn a laborer to the lowest possible wages on which life may be sustained by act of parliament, interpreted and enforced by a ubiquitous body of magistrates whose interest it was to screw the pittance down to the lowest conceivable margin and to inform the stinted recipient that when he had starved on that in the days of his strength others must work to maintain him in sickness and old age. Now, this was what the statute of apprenticeship, supplemented by the poor law, did in the days of Elizabeth."

A new world of science and industrialism has come into being since that time. The old basis of economic legislation has disappeared. We no longer tie the laborer down to the land. On the contrary, land has become one form of capital, and the laborer is shut away from it. All over the civilized world, wherever the industrial system is developed, we find the restless working masses swarming in our large modern cities, that draw the population from the agricultural districts as by a powerful magnet. Whole families, father, mother, children, grandparents, live in the tall tenements, in midair, in sunless rooms, without hope or idea of ever possessing more land than may be contained in the flowerpot that stands on their fire escape. They are dependent on their day's labor in the factory or shop for their daily bread.

The problem of the unemployed is the modern riddle of the sphinx, nor can the most dull and indifferent classes in the community any longer deafen their ears to the loud and threatening voice with which she cries for its solution. Three hundred years of poor laws have only served to bring more fully into view the tragic straits into which the disabled or aged laborer is but too likely to fall, nor can criminal legislation solve the question. Some four centuries of a more or less strict enforcement of bloody and savage laws against the pauper and the vagrant have altogether failed to eliminate him as a social factor.

There is but one answer to the riddle—that is a reorganization of industry which shall insure to each ablebodied and willing worker a chance to use his faculties to the best of his ability and to secure the full equivalent of his product. Then, and then only, will the voice of the sphinx be stilled and the unemployed, the pauper and the vagrant disappear, merged with the great working armies of the world.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Oct. 18. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

Topic.—Are we doing our best?—Math. v, 13-16; xxv, 14-30. (A meeting to consider the committee work of the society.)

This is a very practical and appropriate Christian Endeavor topic. No better could have been selected for the opening meeting of a vigorous fall and winter campaign. The meeting should be arranged so as to give each committee, as a committee, a part on the programme.

To do our best we must have the best ideal before us and earnestly strive to reach it. Therefore we could do nothing better perhaps than suggest some of the characteristis of an ideal committee, no matter what the character of its work may be.

1. An ideal committee must have an ideal chairman. The importance of having the best chairmen possible has been often emphasized. It cannot be too often emphasized. The most important duty of a new speaker of the house of representatives is the selection of the chairmen of the various committees. Upon the ability and fidelity of the chairman the success of every committee very largely depends.

2. An ideal committee must have ideal members. A good leader is the first necessity. Good followers are the second. To do his best a good leader needs good followers. Napoleon's great success depended no more upon his own brilliant abilities than it did upon the unswerving fidelity and loyalty of his private soldiers. Every member of a committee should feel his personal responsibility for the success of the work of the committee. A committee can only do its best when each member of it does his best.

3. An ideal committee should have a definite aim before it. It will not do to change the methods of work every month. One good line of policy should be laid out and should be vigorously followed. Singleness of purpose is one of the greatest necessities to success in any line of work.

4. An ideal committee should be a working committee. The society is the church at work. Success crowns great labor, and to have success we must work. A committee will not run itself. Each member must be actively engaged in the work.

5. An ideal committee will not neglect monthly meetings and written monthly reports. These meetings and reports keep all informed. Information keeps up interest, and personal interest insures success.

Bible Readings.—Deut. vi, 4-12; Neh. iv, 1-9; Ps. xxv, 1-10; xxvii, 1; lxxxix, 1-7; xcii, 1-5; Mal. iii, 8-12; Math. v, 13-16; xxviii, 19, 20; Acts ii, 41-47; Rom. xii, 1, 2; Gal. vi, 9; Phil. iii, 7-15; Col. iii, 16, 17; Heb. xii, 1, 2.

To Whom Honor Is Due.

There is a story of a man who won many souls to Christ, and was proud of it. One night it was disclosed to him that none of the honor would be given to him on the last day. It was a dream. He eagerly asked the angel upon whom the honor would fall. The angel replied, "The deaf old man who sits on the pulpit stairs and prays for you is the means of blessing." May God multiply the number of such helpers. We will cheerfully accord them the best seat in the pulpit rather than on the stairs.—Selected.

Christ's Sympathy.

Alone? Ah, no; not alone. Human sympathy is imperfect. Friendship has its limitations, but it is a truth as incomprehensible as the divine love itself that in the hour of our need the fullness of Christ's strength is perfected. There are angles and recesses in our heart that Jesus alone can fill. No understanding but His can reach the utmost depths of our grief. His sympathy is perfect. This is tribulation's boon—in our sorrow we learn to know Christ.—William T. Ellis.

Christian Endeavor Extension.

Many of the churches that are now without Christian Endeavor societies would gladly welcome the movement to their midst could they be given to understand the true character and purpose of the society and could they receive some assistance in organization from Christian Endeavor workers. Here is a proper field of missionary effort for even the humblest Christian Endeavorer.—Golden Rule.

Good For Young People.

Speaking of Christian Endeavor activity in municipal reforms, that able Baptist newspaper, The Standard, says:

'Provided they enter this field with dis-retion and under wise direction, we now of no public service which is more appropriate for Christian young peo-le."

In the Czar's Domain.

Pastor Blecher writes to us from Ger-nany that inquiries have come to him rom Russia concerning the Christian Endeavor society, and he is hopeful that re long the influence of Christian En-leavor will be felt in the land of the zars.—Exchange.

Points to Ponder.

A president should criticise chiefly by is example.

Pray, pray, pray! Pray yet again for he great convention.

Warm socials and cold prayer meet-ngs indicate lukewarm spirituality.

The first step toward uselessness is aken when a worker becomes egotis-ical.

Your society has blossomed bounti-ully and beautifully. Now what of the ruit?

The Christian Endeavor pledge binds our gifts to the altar of your denomi ation.

The pledge's "whatever" takes from he Christian Endeavorer the right to o as he pleases.

Take Christ with you to your busi-ess and He will go with you to the rayer meeting.

"Since workers and children have noved up nearer to God everything noves on better," writes the superin-endent of an orphanage in telling the ood news of increased spiritual inter-st among her charges. A noble recipe.

She Will Succeed.

May Burdick has arrived in Berkeley vith $50 and a typewriter and an-ounces her intention to enter the uni-ersity and graduate with the class of 900. The young lady has no resources ther than her small capital and a de-ermination that admits no possibility f defeat, but she will not allow that here is a doubt about her ability to aintain herself at college.

Miss Burdick is a graduate of the onterville High school. She is staying ith Mrs Gilbert on College way. A umber of friends who have become in-erested in her brave programme have elped her in starting on her college ca-eer, and already a good deal of work s typewriter has been sent to her.

Members of the faculty and local busi-ess men have become concerned for the uccess of such brave enterprise and are aving their work for the courageous oung lady, so that there is a good pros-ect that she will succeed. She will do er own cooking and live wholly by her wn efforts in the room that she has ented.

Miss Burdick's capital to start with not enough to buy the books she will eed and pay her matriculation ex-enses. The task she has set before her-elf is therefore that of earning her en-re expenses of four years of college life nd at the same time pursuing the studies of a full university course, often de-lared to be too much for a woman who an give her whole time to it.

The young lady is quite cheerful over he prospect before her. "I have come to Berkeley to enter the university," said he, "and I shall certainly stay." The eneral impression among those who now her is that she will keep her ord.—San Francisco Call.

A Little Girl's Letter.

Recently Queen Victoria received a etition from a little girl which was uite irresistible in its way. The letters ddressed by unknown persons to the ueen do not usually meet her eye, as heir number is great and their char-cter often indicative of unsound minds, ut the epistle from this child the ueen's secretary deemed worthy to be rought to her attention.

It began thus: "Dear Queen—I let ny doll fall into a hole in the moun-ain, and as I know that the other side f the world belongs to you I wish you ould send some one there to find my oll."

The little girl believed the hole went clear through the earth and that the queen could easily have the doll hunted up on the other side.

The queen was much amused at this petition, and though she was unable to grant it she could send a new doll to the little girl, and this she proceeded to do.

A Twelve-year-old Duchess.

An interesting little personage is the Archduchess Elizabeth, the 12-year-old daughter of the Crown Princess Stephanie of Austria. While staying in Steirmark, a pretty Austrian village, she wished to make friends with the children and take part in their games. Her mother offering no objection to the plan, she joined them one day and asked if she might play with them. The result was, as might have been expected, awestruck silence and a gradual edging away from her little royal highness. Elizabeth was much distressed and said pleadingly, "I am only a little girl, and I want to play with little girls." Finding them still ill at ease, she got them to sit to her in turn, while she made sketches, and thus the shyness gradually wore off. The next day, and during her stay, she romped and played with the village children like one of themselves.—New York Times.

IN RUM'S CLUTCHES.

Many Mothers Can Hold Up Their Hands For Lost Boys.

When Rev. George R. Stuart was once preaching in Kentucky, there came down the aisle one night a poor Irish woman with an intelligent face, crying out in her own peculiar way, showing the deep anguish of a mother's heart, "Mr. Stuart, Mr. Stuart, the saloons have got my boy!" The preacher's heart ached, and the large congregation was greatly moved when he said, "How many women in this great audience can hold up their hands with this poor woman?" You should have seen the hands that went up, showing how many mothers were having the same sad experience. Some of them were hands in kid gloves, some were white, tender hands, while some were bare and quivering hands.

The preacher said: "Men of Kentucky, I don't know what kind of stuff you are made of. But I am of that kind of stuff to stand by the side of these sad and stricken women, with their uplifted hands, and help them to save their boys out of the clutches of the dreadful saloon." And numbers of men got up, and many cheered.—Christian Work.

DRUNKENNESS IS A DISGRACE.

It Closes the Door to Social and Commercial Recognition.

A comparison favorable to our citizens has been made between the conduct of the great crowd which assembled to do honor to the czar's coronation and that which gathered on special occasions at the World's fair. At the latter there were once at least 500,000 people in concourse at one moment, and yet not a crime, not a serious accident was reported, and not even was any general drunkenness apparent.

Recently there was, among the lower classes in Moscow, an almost continuous debauch which resulted finally in a sickening harvest of death which counted its victims by the thousand. The young and the aged, the guilty and the guiltless, were all crushed together, a liberal and wholesale offering to the devil of drunkenness. We have little to boast of, but it is something for which we can thank God that the time has at last come in America when it is no credit to drink intoxicating liquor and when to get drunk is a disgrace that closes the door to social and commercial recognition.—Ram's Horn.

Child Inebriety.

Dr. Keeley says that young men and young women suffer from inebriety just the same as the older ones, and that if we are to wipe out this great curse we must go to the cradles and the nurseries to do it. Babes are made inebriates by the mistaken kindness of mothers and nurses, who give alcohol in a great variety of forms, and thus cause inebriate conditions which develop in later life. Alcohol at any time of life will cause inebriety, and even one drop continuously given will cause a proportionate inebriety. The drink habit of youth, of middle age and of the whole life is often the result of child drugging rather than heredity. So common is this that the author regards child inebriety as the chief cause of intemperance among all classes. The nursery, as well as the saloon and social customs, is responsible for the widely diffused disease of inebriety throughout civilization.—Boston Herald.

Revenue From Liquors.

The United States commissioner of internal revenue shows by his preliminary report of the last fiscal year, just submitted to Secretary Carlisle, telling figures as follows: From spirits the receipts were $80,670,070, an increase of $807,443. Tobacco brought in a revenue of $30,711,629, or $1,006,721 more than in the preceding year. From fermented liquors there was derived $33,784,235, or $2,143,617 more than during the preceding year. Ale, beers and similar liquors brought in $33,139,141, an increase of $2,094,826. During the year 67,039,910 gallons of spirits distilled from other material than fruit were withdrawn for consumption, a decrease of 7,413,119 gallons as compared with the preceding year.

How Drunkards Are Made.

Doctors order alcohol in the treatment of most nursery ailments, and the child soon gets to like the treatment. Soothing sirups are administered as freely as water, and that the children like them can be vouched for by every nurse and mother who have heard their little charges cry for some favorite brand.

The child cries because there comes a craving for something, and that that craving is for the something in the sirup is testified to by the child, who ceases to cry when the sirup is produced. Later in life this craving, which never ceases, is by chance or otherwise satisfied, and one more opium fiend is added to the vast army of inebriates. — Dr. L. E. Keeley.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON IV, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, OCT. 25.

Text of the Lesson, Prov. i, 1-19—Memory Verses, 7-10—Golden Text, Prov. i, 10. Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

1. "The proverbs of Solomon, the son of David, king of Israel." We saw in last week's study that he spake three thousand proverbs, and in this lesson we have a sample of them, or, rather, of the wisdom which he asked for and received from God, but in the wisdom of God as here revealed we must look beyond the son of David of our lesson to the Son of David of Math. i, 1, a greater than Solomon, who is also called "the wisdom of God" (I Cor. i, 24). The Hebrew word translated "proverb" signifies also a parable or similitude and seems to be from the word "to rule or reign or have dominion." If we are ruled by "the wisdom of God," we shall be wise indeed.

2. Some one has said that wisdom uses the best means toward the best ends, that instruction is discipline or training and that understanding is discerning good and evil. All this is summed up in Christ, who is made unto us wisdom (I Cor. i, 30).

3. Justice, judgment and equity are attributes of uprightness, and these also are summed up in Christ, who shall yet execute judgment and justice in the earth (Jer. xxiii, 5). By His spirit in us we may day by day walk uprightly, and like Levi walk with God in peace and equity and turn many away from iniquity (Mal. ii, 6).

4. The simple are easily led, and if led by God all is well, but if led by the devil all is ill. The things of God are hidden from those who are wise and prudent in their own estimation and revealed unto babes (Math. xi, 25). To be simple toward God is the highest wisdom.

5. The wise will hear and increase learning. In verse 33 observe that it is to God they will hearken, and thus dwell safely and be quiet from fear of evil. So shall they also know "the increase of God" (Col. ii, 19.) Such hearing gives life and soul satisfaction (Isa. lv. 2. 3).

6. There is one peculiar thing about the word of God that cannot be said of any other book—if you are a child of God by faith in Christ Jesus, you have the Holy Spirit, the author of the book, within you and the promise of Jesus Christ that He, the Spirit, will guide you into all truth (John xiv, 17; xvi, 13.) Rely upon Him, and He will not fail you.

7. The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge and wisdom (ix, 10.) The fear of the Lord is wisdom (Job xxviii, 28.) It is also a fountain of life and the good man's treasure (chapter xiv, 27; Isa. xxxiii, 6.)

8. Obedience to parents is the sum of the fifth commandment, and a fearful thing is written concerning such as mock or despise father or mother in Prov. xxx, 17. The phrases "like as a father pitieth" and "as one whom his mother comforteth."

9. No outward adorning is of any value in the sight of God, but the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit is in the sight of God of great price (I Pet. iii, 4), and this comes by the word of God dwelling in us. "Sanctify them through thy truth. Thy word is truth" (John xvii, 17).

10. We must say a very decided "No" to any who would allure us away from God. Since through the transgression of Adam and Eve we have learned somewhat of the ways of the devil we are inexcusable if we walk therein. "Blessed is the man who walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful!"

11. There are always some saying, "Come with us," but it is more often the enemies than the friends of God. Not words so much as actions should be ever saying, "Come with us." Children of God should have a life that will be a constant invitation to the weary, unsatisfied children of this world. The grace of God will do it in all who are simple.

12. How easily the devil, the destroyer, is seen in these words. He was a murderer from the beginning (John viii, 44.) He is a liar and a counterfeiter. He said to Eve, "Ye shall be as gods" (Gen. iii, 5.) And now he suggests an imitation of God's judgment on Korah (Num. xvi, 30.) In the last days he will imitate Christ in the person of the antichrist (Rev. xiii).

13. He offers what he calls precious substance, just as he offered to our Lord all the kingdoms of this world (Math. iv, 8, 9). He is constantly suggesting to people how to be rich by unrighteousness, and he catches many in his net, they not considering the future, like the rich man of Luke xvi. Listen to wisdom on this point and be wise (viii, 18, 21).

14. "Cast in thy lot among us. Let us all have one purse." And Judas would be treasurer and help himself freely. Another imitation of the people of God as seen in Acts iv, 32.

15. "My son, walk not thou in the way with them." This is the third time we have met the words "my son" in this lesson. May it suggest a voice from our loving Father, His loving Son and the loving Spirit (John iii, 16; Gal. ii, 20; Rom. xv, 30), constraining us by this threefold cord (Eccl. iv, 12) to abide in such love and not turn from it.

16. "For their feet run to evil and make haste to shed blood." The way of peace they know not. The imagination of the thoughts of their hearts is only evil continually (Gen. vi, 5). They would for gain shed the blood of others, but our Lord Jesus shed His blood for us and would have us lay down our lives for others (I John iii, 16), not loving our lives even unto death (Rev. xii, 11).

17. "Surely in vain the net is spread in the sight of any bird." The margin says, "In the eyes of everything that hath a wing." Wings imply power to keep away from all the nets of man. In Eph. vi we are told of armor and weapons by means of which we may resist and overcome the devil. If we are not ignorant of his devices, we can easily recognize him and have constant victory over him. Those who walk willingly into his open mouth deserve to be devoured by him (I. Pet. v, 8, 9).

18. Those who lay wait for the lives of others are really destroying their own lives, for into the pits which they dig they are sure to fall. Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap. The devil seeks to destroy life, but our Lord by laying down His own life gives life to all who receive Him. Believers should be more watchful to give life than the devil and his followers are to take it.

19. "Greedy of gain." That is, this world's gain, which takes away life. The Pharisees, who were covetous, derided Christ when He taught the disciples how to make sure of true riches (Luke xvi, 14, 15), and it is ever so since Cain killed Abel. But Christ is wisdom, and the truly simple hearted do as is written in Prov. ii, 3, 6. Their way shall never perish, but shall endure forever (Ps. i, 6).

FLORIDA AND GEORGIA RETURNS.

Flowery State Shows a Falling Off in Plurality—Atkinson Gets 36,129.

Jacksonville, Oct. 9.—The returns to date of Tuesday's state election, embracing 491 out of the 632 precincts and all but about 4,000 of the total vote are: Bloxham, Dem., 24,577; Gunby, Rep., 7,876; Weeks, Pop., 3,962. Complete returns for 29 counties of the 45 in the state show a loss of 15 per cent. in the total Democratic vote as compared with 1892. The indications are that the total vote of the state did not exceed 40,500, of which Bloxham received about 27,250, as compared with 32,064 for Mitchell, Dem., in 1892; Gunby, Rep., about 8,850, and Weeks, Pop., about 4,400. Bloxham's majority over all is about 14,000.

Atlanta, Oct. 9.—Advices received by The Journal from combined and unofficial sources fix the total Democratic majority at 36,129. This estimate is based upon the vote for Atkinson for governor, which is in many cases less than that cast for the other state officials. It is not believed that the final returns will materially alter this estimate. The legislature is almost solidly Democratic in both branches, insuring practically the unanimous election of ex Speaker Crisp to the senate to succeed Senator Gordon.

ELECTION IN CONNECTICUT.

Republicans Gain Twelve Towns in 146 So Far Heard From.

Hartford, Oct. 7.—Of the 168 towns in the state elections were held in 162. Returns have been received at the office of the Associated Press from 146 of these towns, those not heard from being isolated and without wire communication and containing so few voters as to be of inconsiderable importance. Of the 146 towns heard from 133 have elected the Republican ticket, which shows a gain of twelve towns over the election of last year. These towns have given a Republican majority averaging about 100, indicating an approximate majority in the state of 15,000.

These results, according to the estimates of the Republican managers, would give a Republican majority in the state of about 20,000. At the Democratic headquarters, however, while they concede an apparent Republican majority of 10,000 or 12,000, they claim that local issues were too sharply defined to permit of an expression on the national issues, and that the Republican majority in Connecticut Nov. 3 will not exceed 10,000.

His Lost Arms Were Uncomfortable.

New Brunswick, N. J., Oct. 7.—The amputated arms of Abraham Netherwood, of this city, have been giving his so much pain that he had them dug up, the joints straightened, and reburied, and he is now free from pain.

A Household Name.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER AND THE SECRET OF ITS SUCCESS.

"Royal Baking Powder" is a household word pretty much the civilized world over, and the article itself has become a necessity in thousands upon thousands of families in nearly every civilized country. Much of the success of this splendid preparation is due to judicious advertising, but in greater degree its success is due to the fact that it is exactly what it is represented to be. One of its great recommendations is its high leavening power. That, of course, appeals to every housewife. It secures a light baking with the least amount of attention and trouble. It can be counted upon. But it has a virtue beyond that—its virtue of virtues lies in the fact that it is "absolutely pure." Royal Baking Powder contains nothing deleterious. It can be used with perfect confidence, and with the certainty that, so far as it is concerned, the baking will be thoroughly wholesome. It has been subjected to the most searching analysis, and pronounced free from impurities or chemical ingredients that are harmful to the system. By adhering honestly and conscientiously to their formula, the manufacturers of Royal Baking Powder have established for it a reputation that has made it, as it were, a great staple. It is a boon to the housewife and the cook, and a reproach to all that would adulterate food produts in any manner, shape or form. In short, it is a perfect baking powder, in that it combines the highest leavening power attainable with purity in the highest degree.

SIMPLE FALLACIES.

ABSURDITIES AND INCONSISTENCIES OF A SO CALLED ECONOMIST.

The Problem of "Overproduction" and Its Relation to Progress—A Rational View of What Is Known as "Credit" Money. Divine Law of Work and Its Rewards.

[Special Correspondence.]

One of our principal dailies in New York city has recently filled up over six long columns of small print, about 10,000 words, giving the views of an old economist of national reputation about our industrial discontent and restlessness. He traces the great fall of prices to our dreadful overproduction. The latter he accounts for by the fact that civilization has advanced more rapidly in the last 75 years than in the previous 6,000, meaning by that that we have learned how to get rich altogether too fast because we are producing far more than we see fit to consume. Our friend does not believe that any money expansion can help us. He coolly informs us that trade creates money; also that credit in trade is as valuable as cash and is much cheaper. And yet, in flagrant contradiction with the latter two sentences, he condemns all money as bad the material of which does not represent as a commodity the face value of the coin. It may pay us to look into such a contradiction for a few moments.

Yes, trade creates money. And what kind of money? Checks, drafts on wealth, and, as such, bad money, since we are told by our solons that the only good money is that which has a commodity value equal to its face value. And yet that bad money created by trade must perform some highly useful functions, otherwise trade would not take the trouble of creating it. That bad money is credit money, and we are told that credit in trade is as valuable as cash and is much cheaper.

And, please, what is credit? What does it mean as an ultimatum? It means a large debtor class forever in debt to a few creditors. It means an industrial organization which piles most of the wealth in the hands of the few and leaves the many, those who produce most of that wealth, in perpetual poverty or bondage. And that credit, which represents the tears and sorrows and deprivations of most of the workers, that credit is better and cheaper than cash and good for trade. There is no doubt that such a credit is good for the few who have all the cash and wealth of nations, and so pocket most of the earnings of trade. The only trouble with that goodness is that it keeps 90 per cent of the race with but one-third of the annual earnings that they should at least have and need in order to develop with that manhood which God wants all men to attain on this planet of ours.

The most astonishing feature, to the thinking mind, in our human development today is the heartlessness of most of the powerful and well to do, who look at everything through the spectacles of their superior position in life. The fact that they are rich and prosperous means prosperity and wealth for all. They have no eyes for anything or anybody but that which relates to themselves, to their own personality and that of those closely related to them by what we call "blood ties."

Look at the barbarism of trying to make us believe that credit is indispensable to trade. On that conception we could have no trade, no production, no commerce, in a community where everybody could work with his own capital and had no need of ever being in debt to any other capitalist but as a matter of transient accommodation, John being today debtor to Peter, Peter being tomorrow debtor to John! Would that community rest in defiance of any of God's laws in nature or in ethics? Hardly, because God in nature gives wealth to the worker and never to the monopolist. The latter gets his wealth from human laws of monopoly, and monopoly means the poverty of most workers, poverty in wealth as well as intelligence, poverty in body as well as mind. The two stand or fall together. The mind shrinks in proportion as the body is forced to develop below the line of sanitary needs. There is not an atom of anarchy in God's universe. All is subject to a fixed order and precise relations. It follows, then, that, while certain mental abnormalities spring up from deficiencies in what the body should have, another set of mental deformities arises from any excess of what the body needs for its symmetrical development as a man after divine injunctions. Trade shall need credit as long as it rests on principles of monopoly. Trade shall need no credit as soon as civilizations are established on conceptions of righteousness. The greater the credit that trade may need the more frequent and intense the convulsions that trade shall have to suffer. And if trade needs to create money, drafts on wealth, that alone proves the force of money based on any intrinsic commodity value of its own. That alone proves that we can never have money enough through any principle of commodity value. The very fact that trade can create money—that alone shows that the nation can create money as good as if not far better than that of Mr. Trade, who is nothing but Mr. Monopoly, the eternal enemy of labor.

As for that great production of ours, which carries prices down and breeds poverty and discontent according to some, discontent and prosperity according to others—infernal social conditions anyhow—what do the old fogies suggest for the purpose of reconciling men to the dreadful fact of our producing more wealth than we can use? They say that. Who knows? It may be that later on the workers shall obtain a larger share of their product than today. Later on! And why not now? And why not before and forever, since they commenced to produce so much? According to God's righteousness, the needs of the workers are always the total product of what they can produce. Why not?

Pittsburg's Potato Patches.

The Pingree potato patch experiment has been a success in Pittsburg. Over 100 families have earned good livings by tilling the garden plots, and some few of the industrious farmers have succeeded in making a little money. They had much to contend with, however, and the success made was only after great effort. The vegetables were planted out very late, the potatoes in some of the plots decayed because of the wet weather, and the weeds grew luxuriantly.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

"The Blue Degrees are but the outer court of the Temple. Part of the symbols are displayed there to the initiate, but he is intentionally misled by false interpretations. It is not intended that he shall understand them, but it is intended that he shall imagine that he does understand them. Their true explanation is reserved for the Princes of Masonry."—Albert Pike, Grand Commander of the Supreme Council, Sovereign Grand Inspectors-General, in "Morals and Dogma," page 819.

HON. SAMUEL DEXTER, in an Open Letter to the Grand Master of Mass., 1798: "If there be no very important reason for upholding Masonry at a moment like the present, there is a reason against it. The system of the destroyers of human virtue and happiness is to undermine in the dark the castle that cannot be carried by storm. Secret agency has overthrown all the republics of Europe, and an extended, secret, leveling, self-created society, without any valuable object of pursuit, and embracing bad characters as well as good, cannot be the subject of approbation of an anxious patriot."

"I belonged to two secret societies, and have bumped against nearly all of them, and know what I am talking about. Their sociability and benevolence may be all well enough; but they belong to the world. . . . . I have about made up my mind that the whole thing is of the world, and the enemy of God and his church Brethren, why don't you say Amen? You know I am telling the truth; and I pray that you may have grace to receive it in love, as I have spoken it. As Christ's disciples we can make no compromise with the world The friendship of the world is enmity against God."—From Bible reading, by L. W. Munhall, evangelist, on Separation, given Feb. 25, 1890, at Somerville, Mass.

"God's Word prohibits the believer from forming alliances with the ungodly in society. Whenever the Christian surrenders himself to the society of the unbelieving world, his heart will be led away from God. This is especially true of thousands of Christian men who have deliberately yoked themselves up with unbelievers in all manner of secret societies. This course of false alliance is doing more mischief to individual Christian men by turning their hearts away from God and his service, and to the church by depleting and robbing her of her male membership, THAN ANY OTHER ONE ENEMY OF CHRIST. There never was a time when the cry, 'Come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord,' was more needed than now."—From Dr. George F. Pentecost's Bible Studies, 1889, p. 389.

"We have, then, the implied testimony of Freemasons themselves, that the Christian church ought to have no fellowship with Freemasonry as thus revealed, and that those who adhere intelligently and determinedly to such an institution have no right to be in the Christian church. God demands, and the world has a right to expect, that the church will take due action and bear a truthful testimony in respect to this institution. She cannot now innocently hold her peace. The light has come. Fidelity to God and to the souls of men require that the church, which is the light of the world, should speak out, and should take such action as will plainly reveal her views of the compatibility or incompatibility of Freemasonry with the Christian religion."—From Pres. Finney's book, "Character, Claims and Practical Workings of Freemasonry," pp. 260, 263.

"I do not see how any Christian, most of all a Christian minister, can go into these secret lodges with unbelievers. They say they can have more influence for good, but I say they can have more influence for good by staying out of them, and then reproving their evil deeds. Abraham had more influence for good in Sodom than Lot had. If twenty-five Christians go into a secret lodge with fifty who are not Christians, the fifty can vote anything they please, and the twenty-five will be partakers of their sins. They are unequally yoked with unbelievers. 'But, Mr. Moody,' some say, 'if you talk that way you will drive all the members of secret societies out of your meetings and out of your churches.' But what if I do? Better men will take their places. Give them the truth anyway, and if they would rather leave their churches than their lodges the sooner they get out of the churches the better. I would rather have ten members who were separated from the world than a thousand such members. Come out from the lodge. Better one with God than a thousand without him. We must walk with God, and if only one or two go with us it is all right."—Address by Dwight L. Moody in Farwell Hall, Chicago, 1870.

UP TO DATE CRIME.

TWO MEN SHOT TO DEATH BY BICYCLE RIDERS,

Simply Because It Was the Easiest Way to Dispose of Them, by a Couple of Miscreants Who Rode to and Away from the Scene of Their Crime on Wheels—Bloody Sequel to the Crime.

Minneapolis, Oct. 8.—A special to The Tribune from Fairmount, Minn., says: The town of Sherburne, in Martin county, fourteen miles from this place on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, was yesterday afternoon the scene of as bold and bloody a deed as ever was perpetrated by the James or Younger boys. Cashier Thorburn, of the bank of Sherburne, and O. J. Oestern, traveling agent of the Walter A. Wood Harvester company, were shot down in cold blood. The crime is paralleled only by the raid of Jesse James and the Younger boys a few years ago when they swooped down upon the little town of Northfield, a few miles north of the scene of yesterday's crime, shot the cashier of the bank of Northfield down and decamped with a large amount of money.

The Brigands Were Up-to-Date.

In that instance the robbers departed on horses, whereas yseterday's criminals, in keeping with the times, used bicycles in escaping from the enraged citizens of Sherburne. At about 1:30 o'clock two masked men walked through the front entrance of the bank to the cashier's box and without a word whipped out their revolvers and leveled them at Cashier Thorburn. The latter did not move. He realized his awful qosition and knew that the slightest action on his part to call for help or to warn any one else in the bank would mean instant death.

Up-to-Date in Deviltry, Too.

The robbers were apparently undetermined, and for about a minute the three men stood—the robbers with a look upon their faces that told of their determination to stop at nothing to gain their ends, and the cashier white as a sheet in the terrible realization of what might happen. The next minute the report of two revolvers rang out, and Cashier Thorburn fell at his desk. At another desk in the bank stood Oestern, the traveling men. He was the only immediate bar to the ends which the robbers sought to gain, and as Thorburn fell to the floor they turned on him and shot him dead. As rapidly as possible they leaped the railing which separated them from the cashier's desk and secured $1,000 in cash. They then ran for the back door of the bank, where they had taken the precaution to leave their bicycles, mounted them and rode away.

Mason City, Ia., Oct. 10.—Marshal William Gallion, of Bancroft, was shot yesterday in an attempt to arrest one of the robbers of the Sherburne bank. The posse with Gallion riddled the body of the murderer and robber with bullets.

Minneapolis, Oct. 10.—A Lake Crystal, Minn., special to The Journal says: The bank robber killed on the Bertland farm, fifteen miles east of Elmore at 9 a. m. yesterday, was found at Ole Munson's house by Deputy Sheriff T. W. Ward, of Morton county, and Tom Gallion, marshal of Bancroft, Ia. They rode up to the house and the robber at once opened fire, killing Gallion instantly. He then jumped on his wheel and rode four miles, when the front wheel collapsed and he took to the field. The robber then turned his revolver on himself, putting a bullet through his right temple. The body was taken to Elmore at 11 a. m. He is a man about 25 years old, 5 feet 10 inches tall, with brown hair, blue gray eyes and is smooth shaven. He wore a gray bicycle suit, black stockings, bicycle shoes, black shirt, heavy underwear and a tan leather belt. He weighs about 160 pounds.

The man killed is J. D. Sair, who was at one time at Heron Lake. The other is supposed to be Fred Pratt, who was seen with Sair two days before the robbery. A report is also received that a tall man entered the bank of Hardee, southeast of Luverne, Ia., and covered the cashier with a revolver and demanded the proceeds. He was handed out $700 and made his escape. Sair and Pratt worked this year on a farm owned by an uncle of Pratt, near Heron Lake. They have been regarded as hard cases. A large barn was recently set on fire and burned at Heron Lake and the crime was charged to them.

Minneapolis, Oct. 12.—A special to The Tribune from Mason City, Ia., says: There is no longer any doubt as to the identity of a man arrested at 3 p. m. Saturday at Lake Mills as the second of the thugs who robbed the Sherburne bank. Deputy Sheriff Ward arrived last night, and when shown the prisoner identified him without any trouble. Not many strangers were seen movin about yesterday, but Ward has great fear for the future,

TRAMPS RUTHLESSLY MURDERED.

Brakemen on a Railway Make a Recreation of the Business, as It Were.

New York, Oct. 7.—A special dispatch from New Haven to The Evening World says that the police of that city believe that brakemen of the Consolidated railroad have been ruthlessly murdering tramps caught stealing rides on cars of that line. It is asserted that ten bodies, all mangled by being run over by trains, have been found on the tracks of the Consolidated within the last six months. The dispatch states that a man named Molony, from Brooklyn, was shot twice and thrown from a train by the train hands, but survived his injuries, and has given information to the authorities which led to the arrest of a brakeman named Bean. The latter, according to the story, confessed to the superintendent of police of New Haven that the trainmen made it a practice to kill tramps found on their cars.

REPUBLICANS PARADE AND THE REST OF THE CITY LOOKS ON.

Assisted by a Goodly portion of Illinois and Other States Outside—Greatest Demonstration Ever Given in the Town—Parade of Silver Men.

Chicago, Oct. 10. — The Republican parade yesterday was five hours and thirty-five minutes passing a given point and was without doubt the greatest parade ever seen in the city. It is fair to state that it was not composed entirely of Republicans as in the line there were perhaps thousands of gold standard Democrats, and it was gotten up by the "Honest Money League," which claims to be non-partisan. There were 111 floasts in the parade, many of them exceedingly handsome, and all lavishly decorated. A string of carriages bearing the white-haired members of the Tippecanoe club, composed of men who voted for William Henry Harrison, provoked loud cheers. A unique feature of the parade was the use made of the long distance telephone to carry the sounds of the cheers to othr large cities of the country. Across Washington street in front of the telephone exchange was stretched a banner bearing the inscription "Your cheers here will be heard throughout the nation." As each detachment passed under the banner it emitted loud double-jointed whoops. Major McKinley, in his library at Canton heard the cheers, and Hobart, in his home at Paterson, N. J., also received assurances of the shouts.

Secretary of Agriculture J. Sterling Morton spoke at the Auditorium last night under the auspices of the Sound Money League. The hall was filled to the extent of its seating capacity, and when Secretary Morton appeared upon the platform he was greeted with loud and enthusiastic cheers by the audience. Before begining his address Secretary Morton announced that an invitation had been sent President Cleveland requesting his presence at the meeting, but he was sorry to state that President Cleveland would be unable to be present.. Morton then read the president's letter of regret.

Chicago, Oct. 10.—Before the echo of the applause of the multitudes who witnessed the Republican demonstration had died out, the organized followers of Bryan from every quarter of the city, and in almost in as great numbers, marched with flaming torch to stirring music poured forth by a score of bands over very nearly the same route followed by their political opponents during the day. Red fire, search lights, and fireworks added to the attractiveness of the parade and lent their assistance in stirring up the enthusiasm of spectators who looked on from every position of vantage along the line of march. The balcony of the Auditorium Annex was the reviewing stand for the free silver parade last night, and from it Vice President Adlai E. Stevenson, United States Senator Henry M. Teller, and other noted Democrats reviewed the marching followers of Bryan and Sewall as they passed.

Dummy on the Cot.

Auburn, N. Y., Oct. 12.—When the door of Lewis Sarles' cell in the city prison was thrown open and a guard went in to arouse the form on the cot Saturday morning he was dumfounded to find that the apparent sleeper was only a dummy of straw, topped off with a bunch of hair. Eight inches of the heavy iron cell door had been skillfully sawed off at the bottom, and through this small opening the convict had wriggled. How Sarles passed through the corridors unobserved by the guards and how he obtained his egress through several locked doors between his cell and the prison yard are matters of the greatest perplexity to the officials.

Arch Bishop of Canterbury Dead.

London, Oct. 12.—The Archbishop of Canterbury was seized with apoplexy after the service commenced at Hawarden church yesterday morning. He was carried to the Hawarden rectory where he died at 11:15 o'clock. Rev. Archibald Farrar, dean of Canterbury, received a telegram from Stephen Gladstone, the rector of Hawarden church, stating that the archbishop of Canterbury passed away peacefully and suddenly at 11:15 o'clock.

Champion Heroes Arrive Home.

Baltimore, Oct. 12.—The Baltimore Baseball club, flushed with its victories over Cleveland, reached here Friday night, and an enormous crowd greeted the three-time champions and the Temple cup winners. A committee of Baltimore's prominent citizens welcomed them officially at the station, and escorted them in carriages to Ganshorn's hotel, where a bountiful supper was served and speeches were made.

Meagre Reports of a Battle.

Havana, Oct. 12.—Official reports here state that General Echagua attacked Antonio Maceo in a strongly entrenched position on the heights of Guayalitos in Pinar del Rio, took the position by assault and killed many of the rebels, who retreated to Caiguanabo after burning their camp. The troops lost only fifteen killed, it is claimed.

KNOX COLLEGE CELEBRATION.

Chauncey M. Depew, Gen. Palmer and Robt. T. Lincoln Make Speeches.

Galesburg, Ills., Oct. 8.—The exercises of the celebration of the anniversary of the Lincoln-Douglass debate by Knox college opened with an immense attendance. The college and grounds were gaily and extensively decorated. Five hundred invited guests occupied a platform just in front of the college. The exercises opened with music by the Knox Cadet band. Dr. Newton Bateman pronounced the invocation. Colonel C. E. Carr gave the address of welcome, and President C. E. Nash, of Lombard university, extended the greetings for the colleges. After a song by a chorus of students Dr. Chauncey M. Depew, of New York, was introduced and gave the oration, which was it goes without saying, elegant and witty.

Robert T. Lincoln followed Depew memorial tablet in the east tower was unveiled by Ellen Boyd Finley, daughter of J. H. Finley, president of the college. Senator John M. Palmer gave the unveiling speech, largely of a historical nature. S. S. McClure spoke of the Lincoln School of Science he is securing for Knox college. The closing speech was made by Frank Hamlin. The celebration was held on exactly the same spot as the historical debate between Lincoln and Douglass in 1858.

GOES TO PIECES IN A STORM.

Schooner Wrecked and Three of Her Crew of Eight Drowned.

Lewes, Del., Oct. 12.—At daybreak yesterday morning the American schooner Luther A. Roby, from Schiverie, Nova Scotia, for Philadelphia, struck near the point of Cape Henlopen while a terrible northeast gale was prevailing. The forte of the sea was so great that the vessel pounded to pieces on the sands before the life-saving men could get a line to her. Three of the crew lost their lives and five were rescued after an awful experience with the elements. The dead are: Harry Millby, Thomas Simes, and an unknown Norwegian sailor.

Captain Maloney and the members of his crew who were rescued were taken out of the sea after they had given up all hope of reaching shore alive. When the schooner went to pieces the five men managed to get hold of the deck house. On this frail raft they were buffeted about at the mercy of the enormously high seas until they were seen by the life-savers. A rope was thrown to them and the five men, then nearly exhausted, were hauled through the roaring surf to a place of safety.

GEO. J. MARSH'S VILLAINY.

Probability That He Stole $250,000 Before He Committed Suicide.

Gloucester, Mass., Oct. 12.—The funeral of the late George J. Marsh, treasurer of the Cape Ann Savings bank, who committed suicide last week by shooting, was attended by a large number of business men and citizens. Interest in the affairs of the estates and trusts in George Marsh's keeping is as great as ever, and the outlook now is not favorable to the beneficiaries of those estates. One of the Cape Ann bank officials admitted that there was a strong possibility of hypothecation amounting to $250,000.

The work of straightening out matters pertaining to those estates is progressing very slowly, and it will be some time before a statement can be ready. It is believed that everything negotiable in Marsh's keeping has been disposed of, real estate being about all that remains. The Dr. Hildreth estate, between $40,000 and $50,000, is practical-wiped out. The George H. Rogers estate was valued at $100,000, and the loss there cannot be estimated.

Beekeepers in Convention.

Lincoln, Neb., Oct. 8.—At the chapel of the University of Nebraska Wednesday opened the twenty-eighth meeting of the North American Beekeepers' association. The sessions will continue two days and are open to all. Some of the most prominent beekeepers in the country are in attendance. The programme embraces a large number of papers and talks on bee culture, and the question of amalgamating the Naticnal Beekeepers' union and the North American Beekeepers' association will be considered with a prospect that it may be accomplished.

Rural Free Mail Deliver.

Parkersburg, W. Va., Oct. 12.—The first experiment of the free delivery of mail in the rural districts was made at Charlestown, W. Va., Friday. There are three letter cariers who get $200 per year salary and give $500 bonds. Collectively, they carried a distance of fifty miles, delivered sixty-five pieces of mail matter, and returned none to the office. Charlestown is the home of Postmaster General Wilson.

Czar and Czarina at Paris.

Paris, Oct. 8.—The czar and czarina continue to be the idols of the French populace. Yesterday the czar laid the first stone, in the usual conventional manner, of the Alexander III bridge across the Seine. Next they visited the Hotel de Ville and the municipal council, where there were addresses and responses full of the warmest friendship. At night they attended a concert.

The State anti-secret conventions of Pennsylvania at Oaks, and of Iowa at New Sharon, both on Nov. 18, 19.

Must believe in a god. Is that a great virtue? The savage who worships a snake does that. He believes in a god. To believe in THE God is another thing. Masonry does not require that.

Never before in the history of our movement was the demand so great that every friend of Christ and humanity make his testimony heard at the coming State Conventions in Pennsylvania and Iowa, against the powers of darkness.

A year ago last Monday a Brewers' Convention in this city resolved: "That we most earnestly favor temperance and condemn intemperance. That we are in favor of both public and private morality and good order and popular education, and that we feel the duty resting on us as individuals and as a trade, to work with the great body of our people in the advancement of these interests." This is a stronger temperance resolution than was passed by either of the old parties last summer.

"Let us alone; why art thou come to torment us before the time," was the plea of the devils whom Christ was casting out. "Mind your own business," is the cant of the secret lodges in reply to our agitation. "Mind your own business," is the cry of the Turks, who slaughter tens of thousands of Armenians, to other nations protesting. "Mind your own business," is the protest of the rummies to those waging war against them. It is our business to stand against wrong, secrecy and oppression everywhere.

There are four ways by which the friends of anti-secrecy can make their influence felt at a convention. By their personal presence, by their contributions, by letters of sympathy and by their prayers. Friends, let us not neglect to use these means in improving the grand opportunities before us of lifting a stardard for Christ against the greatest foe of our republic.

JAMES McCOSH, LL. D.

We give the picture here of one of the most profound scholars and teachers of his day. He was the author of our college text-book on Moral Science. He was a boy in Ayrshire, Scotland, studied in the universities of Glasgow and Edinburgh, was pastor in the church of Scotland at Arbroath, and at Brechin, then professor of logic in Queens College, Belfast, and for many years president of Princeton College, New Jersey. He had a keen discriminating intellect, a broad mental culture and deep philosophical learning. He was a voluminous author, and the strongest defender of the Christian faith of any writer of his time. He was an enemy of secret orders, and it was largely through his influence that college fraternities were excluded from Princeton College.

The reason why the liquor traffic will fight hard for its life is because there is so much money in it. Only think, a bushel of corn costing 40 cents will make 4 gallons of liquor, which will make 200 ten cent drinks, amounting to $20. And the farmer who raises the corn only gets 40 cents of this amount; while the brewer, wholesale dealer, saloon-keeper, the government and railroads get all the rest.

The experience of our Kansas colporteur, and of Bro. Fenton and Evangelist Allen, reported in this issue, seems to indicate that the time of the slaying of the witnesses recorded in prophecy is actually upon us. It is a period represented in Rev. 11:11, as of about three and a half years duration, when the enemies of Christ's truth will prohibit and suppress the testimony of his faithful witnesses so that they shall be the subjects of contempt and pity, illustrated by that which refuses the burial of a dead body.

What does it mean that there are one thousand more women than men missionaries in the foreign field, and that they far outnumber the men in our churches and prayer meetings and reform organizations? And yet how comes it that women are unworthy to participate in framing the laws and electing the officials in our republic? How comes it that the principle, no taxation without representation, applies to men but not to women? Surely there is need for reformation along this line.

A significant four-line paragraph came over the cables a few days ago. It announced that the Hall of Science in Old Hall street, London, had passed into the hands of General Booth. The significance lies in the fact that for twenty years or more the Hall of Science was the London headquarters of an aggressive school of atheists, of whom the late Charles Bradlaugh, M. P., was the leader. It is difficult now to gather an audience of Mr. Bradlaugh's followers big enough to pay the gas bill in any town in England.

Hon. Everett F. Wheeler, of New York, at the American Board meeting recently said, "In the position in which Turkey has placed us, is there any course consistent with honor or duty but to support our demands by an adequate armed force? The American government should send a powerful fleet to the Mediterranean, accompanied by a sufficient number of regular troops, and should demand at the cannon's mouth what has been refused to milder requests. In no other way can either redress or security be obtained. Unless we do this we expose our citizens to further outrages and their property to destruction."

How full of assurance are the dying words of Paul: "I am now ready to be offered and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day." Could he have had this assurance with such a confession as, "I have fought a good fight, I have never bolted my party or scratched my ballot, I have always voted with the majority and never mixed my politics and my religion, I have obeyed the party bosses and have never voted with the cranky Prohibitionists?"

One of the best addresses at the late Young People's Institute at Omaha, was on "Separation," by Mrs. Edith L. Peake. She said: "Why is it that so many Christian men even of our own denomination, which I believe to be the cleanest of them all in this respect—and Christian women too, must do all the bad things men do pretty nearly. These members by foolish ceremony, or by promises, or by awful sacrilegious oath, yoke themselves in secret societies of every sort with the unbeliever, in some of which societies they dare not name the name of the blessed Master, lest they offend some of the unbelievers with whom they have yoked themselves."

PERFECT LOVE.

BY ELDER D. B. GUNN.

A state of love there is, of pure degree,
The precious Word of Life this truth proclaims,
Wherein the soul from pain and dread is free,
And fear of demons, death and hell, then reigns,
No more tormenting me.

This gift for hungry, thirsty ones to share,
The pure in heart, the merciful and meek,
Does He, our Lord, in richest store prepare,
And bids us now receive the grace we seek;
He hears and answers prayer.

Oh, love of perfect type, I long for thee;
My heart I ope, O Christ, with panting look
And trusting heart, for this great love in me;
Promised as John once wrote in thy dear book;
Thus blest, oh may I be.

And then in life's great war will be success;
Its battles will be fought and victories won;
To holy heights in perfect peace progress,
Till reached the goal for which the race was run,
A home with God's dear Son.

Sure, this the happy lot of all may be,
Who once partake of life and grace divine,
Which now abound as waters of the sea,
And freely flow from an exhaustless mine,
To branches of the vine.

To live without this pearl of precious price,
Deprive thy heart of the supreme delight,
Would be to yield to wicked ones device,
And rob thy soul of what is thine by right,
Free, wrought by God's own might.

A PECULIARLY DANGEROUS FOE.

REPORT ON SECRET SOCIETIES ADOPTED BY THE REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN SYNOD AT CINCINNATI, OHIO, IN 1896.

The church finds a peculiarly dangerous foe in the secret orders. This appears from these considerations: Some of them, as Freemasonry, claim to be a religion. Their assumed titles, their religious rites, their profane oaths, also indicate that they are to be so viewed. By entering secret orders men seek to satisfy their consciences. The lodge becomes their church. A large proportion of lodge members do not unite with any church. Many forsake the church for the lodge, and still others lose interest in the church after having become identified with the lodge. The lodge has thus become a dangerous rival to the church. It is a "refuge of lies."

Secret societies are peculiarly dangerous because of their secrecy. Secrecy is an essential feature of all such societies. This it is that makes them so attractive. But this it is also that condemns them. Secrecy robs of true manhood. To swear or promise to conceal what is as yet unrevealed degrades the conscience. Secrecy becomes one of the strongest temptations to engage in evil practices. It gives unlimited power to work mischief; power that has often been used to defeat justice, and been made to serve every evil purpose. To attack secret orders is to fight a foe hidden in ambush. Their specious claims make secret societies peculiarly dangerous. They claim to be charitable, to exceed even the church, but their selfishness should be very apparent to all. Their benevolence is wholly limited to their own members, and the really needy are in many such societies ineligible for membership. The object of some may be good, but their methods are wrong and dangerous. Labor associations and the A. P. A. will illustrate this.

Secret orders often claim to afford superior social advantages, but they provide social amusement generally at the expense of good morals and the best interests of the home. Lodge life and club life have, to an alarming extent, taken the place of the quieter, safer enjoyments and comforts of home life. Secret societies are peculiarly dangerous because they have become so popular. In our cities and villages their number far exceeds the number of churches. In a certain city of 40,000 where there are forty churches there are more than two hundred secret lodges. In a certain village of 2,500 population there are seventeen secret lodges. There is, perhaps, no more unpopular and difficult reform that the anti-secret reform. Churches, with few exceptions, have no testimony against this system of secrecy. Christian ministers, many of them, are willing to seek the favor of the lodge, and dare not utter a word in opposition. The press is either silent or committed to the interest of the orders.

There is never a word of criticism of the lodge in our great dailies, or weekly newspapers, nor, with very few exceptions, even in the Christian press. "Even the cartoonist," as some one has pointed out, "ridicules in his pictures everything and everybody but the lodge." Public buildings are frequently dedicated under the direction and by the use of one or other of the leading secret orders. The minor orders, although they may not be in themselves so objectionable, yet their influence to lead away our youth is all the more powerful from this very fact, and their name is legion, and new orders are springing up continually.

If this is the situation we, as a church, should not keep silent. We must speak out that our own youth may be warned and shielded. We should speak out that sister churches may be brought to see the danger, and be led to purify themselves lest the Holy Spirit be grieved away by the lodge spirit pervading the church, and also that our nation may not continue to foster in her bosom an enemy to justice, to her free institutions, to all her best interests, to her very life, with none to sound out an alarm. We recommend:

1. That our church, her ministers, officers and people be encouraged to stand firm in bearing an unpopular testimony against all secret oath-bound societies of whatever name.

2. That our ministers be urged to watchfulness as pastors, and faithfulness in preaching, that the sons of the church may be saved from the abounding allurements to enter these secret orders. The distribution of anti-secret tracts and leaflets have been found very helpful in this work.

3. That our people willingly assist, as there may be opportunity, in the anti-secret movement under the direction of the National Christian Association, lending aid in conventions, etc. And let us all pray that God may stem the tide of secrecy, whose influence at present seems so irresistible. (Rev.) THOMAS PATTON, Chairman.

WHO ARE THE ANARCHISTS.

We hear much these days of anarchy and anarchists. May it not be well for us to stop a moment and enquire what is anarchy? Who are the anarchists?

Webster defines anarchy as "a state of society where the laws are not efficient, and individuals do what they please with impunity." Anarchy is derived from the Greek word, anarchos, and means without head, or chief, or without supreme authority. An anarchist, then, is one who excites revolt, or seeks the overthrow of a legally constituted government.

There have been times, however, when such acts have become lawful. When a tax on tea became oppressive, the "Father of his country" headed an open revolt against such oppression, which, after seven years' war, resulted in the independence of this nation. This fact would scarcely warrant the present use of the word in a wholesale way, as applied to a party organization, or it adherents, who seem to be following the usual prescribed methods of orderly political organizations in this land.

How would it appear, on the other hand, if applied to those who by secret organizations and most extreme methods have, for years and decades past, usurped the power of government in this land, and banded together by most terrible and blood-curdling oaths, have sought to carry to its utmost limit, the exercise of such usurped and unwarranted authority. It is commonly asserted, and firmly believed by those best informed, that Freemasonry and its allies have, for a long time, held nine-tenths of all the offices in the land. They have thus constituted a government within a government, and do actually carry out their own plans in this secret way without the knowledge or consent of the government.

This is what we may call anarchy gone to seed, and the seed again germinating, has brought forth fruit an hundred-fold. If, as we believe, and for which we have good evidence, the rebellion of 1861 was hatched in the Masonic lodges of the South, and was decided upon fifteen years previous to open revolt, what more can we expect than that with the growth and development of Masonry in the North and all over the land since the war, that the same despotic power should again seek by the same methods, in the same dark chambers of the lodge, to overthrow the legally constituted authority of this land, and in its stead openly establish a despotism unparalleled in history.

In this connection take the fact that the nominee of one party is the sworn adherent of the Masonic lodge, and has taken the oath of the seventh degree, being still bound by that oath, which compels him to protect a brother Mason in murder and treason. Then take this firmly established theory, which has taken deep root in the minds of many, that our martyred President Garfield, being a Knight Templar Mason, and refusing obedience to the supreme authority of the Masonic lodge, as represented in the person of Roscoe Conkling and T. C. Platt, paid the penalty of that disobedience with his life; and that Guiteau acted simply as the tool of the Masonic lodge, and was promised immunity to the last moment of his life.

Take these circumstances in our more recent history; connect them with the well-known facts of the Masonic system; is it a difficult thing to discover whither we are tending? Is it a difficult thing to find a place to apply the epithets "Anarchy" and "Anarchist?" They belong directly to the Masonic system. A SECEDED MASON.

A TIMELY SUGGESTION.

BY ELDER A. H. SPRINGSTEIN.

There is a sad lack of vital piety and great need of the revival of true religion in our times. After much prayer and many tears, I have come to believe that what I now suggest will, if rightly conducted, be successful in reviving and strengthening the witnesses for Christ's truth.

All over this land there are persons who want to see a change for the better, and they long to see the Spirit of God poured out. I strongly urge that in any community where there are such persons, many or few, they come together and form an undenominational (not anti-denominational) praying band, and pray and work for the outpouring of the Spirit, the one only object to be the revival of God's work—a neighborhood revival. Such meetings will not be union meetings, in the sense that different denominations, as such, unite for special services. But individual Christians would meet together simply as Christians.

Perhaps many would find at first that they themselves need to be revived before they can do for others. Let each one begin by seeking for himself a baptism of the Spirit; for how can we work for others unless we are alive to God? A man with dry eyes and a cold heart can accomplish nothing. We must have power with God before we can have power with men. True religion is full of melting compassion for the lost and erring.

What will be done with the converts? Such a question is sure to do harm. Your care would be not to "string the fish," but to be fishers of men. But some such thing ought to be done if it were only to save our own souls. I feel deeply about this matter, and my mind would not rest till I yielded to call attention to it. What I have said is simply an explanation of what I think may in some way be done. If this suggestion commends itself to you, I hope you will not dismiss it, but work while it is called to-day. You do not want to put yourself forward? You will have to do so if you so run as to win the crown.

WHAT OUR COUNTRY NEEDS.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

It is certainly true that all Canada ought to be annexed to the United States. All North America ought to be under the flag with the stars and stripes. But the King of nations will hardly permit this unless the United States Government recognizes its responsibility to his law, and puts itself in a position to discharge such a trust with fidelity and wisdom. The nation ignores Christ's claims in adopting the present Constitution, and he has given them over to their own ways. The nation is so secularized that the people are hypnotized with gold and silver. The great issues of temperance and the Sabbath and vorce and secrecy are lost sight of, and all are hot pursuit of a soap bubble.

Suppose the Republicans do succeed, that will ure the gold standard. But we have had that ndard since 1873 and the hard times came. w can keeping what we have cure the hard nes when it did not keep them from coming? e McKinley tariff law brought in, the last year was in operation, $129,000,000. But the mocratic tariff law, Wilson's, the succeeding ar, brought in $149,000,000, and yet there was deficit in the expense of the national govern-nt. If the Democratic income left a deficit, w will the Republican income, which is $20,-0,000 less, save us from a deficit?

The fact is, the real cause is not here. So long this nation spends $1 200,000 000 on the sa-on every year, and $1,000,000,000 more indi-ctly, there will be the cry of distress. Let the loon be closed and this $2,200,000,000 turned to the channels of fair, legitimate trade and siness in every line will have a boom. There such a thing as tinkering at the spigot while e bung-hole is left open. May God open our es to see the truth, and open our hearts to re-ve the truth, and then we will transmute it o life.

A REVIEW OF FREEMASONRY.

PART OF AN ADDRESS BEFORE THE OREGON STATE CONVENTION AT PORTLAND, AUG. 27, BY SECRETARY P. B. WILLIAMS.

We deem it proper to add a few other testimo-es to the truth of the proposition, that Free asonry is a religion. On page 43 Mr. Cross ys: "It is so far interwoven with religion as lay us under obligation to pay that rational mage to the Deity, which at once constitutes r duty and our happiness." "In six days God eated the heavens and the earth, and rested up the seventh day; the seventh, therefore, our cient brethren consecrated as a day of rest m labors." Comment on the foregoing is un-cessary.

It is acknowledged to be a religious system, it is "interwoven" with it. "By it," geome-y or Masonry, "we may discover the power, e wisdom and the goodness of the Grand Arti-er of the universe," etc. "Geometry or Ma-nry, originally synonymous terms, being of a vine and moral nature, is enriched with the st useful knowledge; while it proves the won-rful properties of nature, it demonstrates the re important truths of morality." Page 53.

The reader will see at once that it is a sort of ometrical or Masonic system of morality and igion. But to all this, and much more, we find this and other Masonic standards, it may be fficient to reply, "The world by wisdom knew t God." True morality and religion, both be-g revealed, can never be learned by geometry, asonry or any other science. They are of God, d a knowledge of them can only be obtained by velation. All else is rationalistic, or what is rmed "natural religion."

But, in further proof of our position, we invite ention to the "ceremony of consecration." For asons to dedicate and consecrate their lodges, nsecration begins with "solemn music. "The and Master, attended by the Grand Officers and e Grand Chaplain, form themselves in order ound the lodge, all devoutly kneeling. After ich the first clause of the consecration prayer rehearsed," in which the following language is ed:

"Permit us, O thou Author of light and life, great source love and happiness, to erect this lodge, and now sol-ly to consecrate it to the honor of thy holy name!"

Is this a religious consecration or not? But s is not all. The "Junior Grand Wardens take e silver vessels of wine and oil, and sprinkle the ments of consecration upon the lodge!" Here have a sprinkling of wine and oil, but whether ey borrowed this from pagans, Jews or Roman tholics we are not informed. See page 214. t this is not all. As the ancient pagan temples d their patron saints, so must the Masonic lges have theirs; and hence the "Grand Chap-n" there dedicates the lodge in the following rms: "To the memory of the holy Saints John dedicate this lodge. May every brother revere eir character, and imitate their virtues." Page

Let us now turn to the "ceremony observed on laying the corner-stone of public structures." We pass over everything else, and call special attention to the following:

"In the name of the Great Jehovah, to whom be all honor and glory, I do solemnly dedicate this hall to Masonry."

Now when the "Grand Master pours the pitcher of corn upon the lodge" (or carpet,) and utters the above words, we ask, "Does he so by authority or in the name of the Great Jehovah?" He utters words of fearful import, and if he does so without divine authority, he is guilty of profanity. They pass around the lodge a second time, and the "Grand Master" sprinkles the wine upon the lodge, saying, "In the name of the holy Saints John I do solemnly dedicate this hall to virtue." Is this done "in the name" or by the authority of John the Baptist or John the Apostle? Masons may believe it, but we are slow to believe that either of these men ever authorized any man or "order" of men to dedicate any building to virtue.

They pass around the lodge the third time, and the "Grand Master" sprinkles the oil upon the lodge, saying: "In the name of the whole fraternity, I do solemnly dedicate this hall to universal benevolence." All the above is interspersed with "the grand honors," once, twice, and thrice given; and then "a solemn invocation is made to the throne of grace by the Grand Chaplain, an anthem is sung," etc. Need we any further proof that it is a religion? It is not only a religion, but one that has been contrived by human wisdom.

But we have additional proof to present. Masons claim not to be of the world. They are the chosen, the elect who have left the world and entered the sacred retreat of the lodge. And hence, when the lodge is closing they say, "We are about to quit this sacred retreat of friendship and virtue, to mix again with the world." Again, they enjoin prudence, "not only for the government of the conduct while in the lodge, but also when abroad in the world." All persons who are not Masons belong to the world. They may be pure and holy Christians, who have been "called out of the world" by the Gospel, and constituted into a church or congregation of the living God; but, still, in the esteem of all Masons they belong to the world.

But we will not dwell longer on this point, and especially so as some of the matters already introduced will be touched upon again, when we come to treat of the very important question: "Should Christians Unite Themselves With Any Such Society?"

JEWS AND MASONRY THE ENEMIES OF CHRISTIANITY.

The Christian spirit is awakening in Catholic Europe to a just appreciation of the danger that threatens society from secret organizations. Catholic societies have been formed in almost every community for the purpose of active and efficient self-defense. The young men in Italy organized the Anti-masonic society that is now able to bring together an International Convention to devise means for effectively opposing their powerful enemy who control rulers, governments and government officials.

These societies are organized by and for young men of spirit and energy, for the defense of the faith. They find that they have been driven out of politics, and to some extent out of influence in social life, by the secret societies composed of Jews, and atheists, parading under a false flag carried defiantly aloft by Freemasons. In this country, young men seem to be organized, not for the defense of the faith, but as sheep liable to stray from the fold, and to enable the shepherd the more efficiently to protect them against the wolves.

Besides the active work of the anti-secret societies, Catholic writers have entered enthusiastically into the plan of defense. For half a century the Jews have held the political power. Their plan and the plan of the Freemasons whom they largely control, is to keep Catholic countries in a state of revolution. They thus weaken the faith, oppress or banish religious societies, and pervert education into schools of irreligion and hostility to Christianity. The serpent is thus gradually enabled to paralyze the youth by gradually tightening his slimy coils around the victims whom he has persistently pursued, from the time of his successful triumph in the Garden of Eden, until, by his careful nursing, the "androgyne" or female lodges have been formed in the bosom of Freemasonry.

Vigorous attacks have lately been made upon the well disguised plans of the Jews, by writers who have made themselves perfectly familiar with their treachery and duplicity. The Catholics in Austro-Hungary are fully aroused, and are making a vigorous and partly successful attack on an enemy that is well entrenched behind the government, and the men who manipulate it.—Catholic Review.

THE RIGHT TO ADMINISTER OATHS.

The state and church alone have power to impose oaths; and when these societies administer them, they usurp functions which do not belong to them, and are guilty of impiety. A great mistake is entertained very generally in regard to an oath; that is, that any person under any circumstances, and for any purpose, may apply the binding obligation of an oath,—as, for instance, that persons may bind themselves together for the most wicked and mischievous purposes, as firmly as the husband and wife are bound by the marriage bond; that the pirate captain and his crew are as firmly bound together by it as the members of a Commonwealth and their ruler.

This is a very great and very dangerous mistake. To understand this matter properly, we must remember that an oath is a divine institution or ordinance, and that it derives all its solemnity and binding force from the fact that, when it is properly administered, God himself becomes a party to the compact which it is intended to seal. The whole power of an oath consists in the certainty that God will punish its violation.

When is swearing the exemplification, and when is it the profanation, of the divine ordinance of the oath? I answer, when it is taken in accordance with the divine institution, it is the one; when otherwise it is the other. No organization that has not a divine institution, and authority from God to make him a party to its formation, has any right to use his name, or employ an oath, as the bond of its existence. Any such use of the oath is therefore unwarranted, and consequently a prostitution and profanation, not a proper administration of it; and consequently the sin is in the making, not the breaking of it.

Blackstone, book 9, p. 137, says, "The law takes no notice of any perjury but such as is committed in some court of justice having power to administer an oath, or before some magistrate, or proper officer invested with similar authority, in some proceeding relative to a civic suit or criminal prosecution."

Dr. Junkin on "The Oath," p. 193, says, "Before any association of men should dare to tender the oath, they must be able to show that God is a party to the compact under which they are associated, and that, by virtue of that compact, they may exercise sovereign authority. No society has a right to call upon God to be a party to the covenant of the oath until they show that they are ordained of God." But this no merely voluntary society can do. And we therefore conclude that all oaths administered by the authority of such are extra-judicial, and an abuse of the ordinance.—Dr. J. R. W. Sloane.

CAPT. WM. MORGAN'S PUBLISHER.

Much more is known about Morgan's publisher and collaborator, David C. Miller. Sixty-five to seventy years ago, he in Batavia and Thurlow Weed in Rochester, were the two foremost journalists in Western New York. He was a quaint and striking figure as he stalked the streets or strode into a political convention, in the cocked hat, knee breeches and shoe buckles, to which he adhered long after that garb had been discarded by every one else. His ability was recognized; his paper had a wide circulation; he was afraid of nothing, and was an unsparing foe. The politicians feared him.

The following, addressed to a Congressional candidate, is a sample of his method of soliciting contributions in support of his journal: "Mr. T——, I understand, sir, that you are going to vote for Smith Thompson (for governor); my press is straitened for funds; I must have $300, and if the money is not forthcoming, I'll blow you to perdition, sir!" All expostulations were unavailing; the "assessment" was paid, and the candidate, a most worthy man, was elected for that, and for two succeeding terms.

As between Morgan and Miller. the latter was by far the leading spirit. Both were Masons; but Morgan had advanced to higher degrees. He had not yet completed the literary work of his "Exposure," when he was abducted, and a large portion of his manuscript seized; but Miller proceeded with the publication of the book. Attempts had been made to burn his office, and he had been obliged to barricade himself and his workmen in it; but he finally gave the book to the public—not, however, until the author had disappeared. — *R. REFORM NEWS.

REV J. P. STODDARD IN NEW YORK.

SCHUYLERS LAKE, N. Y., Oct. 9, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Twelve years since my last visit to this place have made little change in its appearance. Dilapidated buildings and neatly kept cottages are contiguous along either side of the principal streets. Some whom I met have fallen asleep, though kind hearts and friendly hands bid me welcome in the home and house of prayer. The moral tone, I am told, is much improved, but when I stepped from the stage into the hotel bar-room I suspected that the highest possible attainments had not yet been reached. I find that the N. C. A. agents who have visited this field have left commendable records and some are held in grateful remembrance for their faithful efforts and earnest prayers. Two churches each with a pastor present are maintaining services regularly.

Aside from the common bond of Christian sympathy among members, the "little flock," doubtless, is kept more compact by the "wolves howling around." When a spectacular exhibit was made of lodge work in one of the churches a few years ago, the craft became so incensed that they conditioned further support of the Gospel ministry, upon the exclusion of the secrecy discussion from the pulpits. As neither society is rich in this world's goods, to some the situation became peculiarly embarrassing. Whatever the decision about opening the house of God to the proclamation of an unmutilated Gospel, one thing is clearly shown by this action, viz., the lodge will do its utmost to either kill or control the bride of Christ in Schuylers Lake.

Had the church taken the same or similar action, either officially or by her prominent members, and refused to support the lodge by withholding patronage from the Master and official members of the lodge because they were haltering, blindfolding and swearing men in their halls of pagan worship, there would have been a howl of persecution, bigotry and arrogance; but when the case is reversed, and the church is boycotted, the bride of Christ and her ministry are expected to crouch meekly at the feet of Goliath, and humbly apologize for presuming to proclaim upon the housetop the things done of them in secret, even when the Head of the church has given the command.

OCT. 14.—Rain prevents my visiting outside the village to-day. Sabbath I spoke in the morning at West Exeter, and at one o'clock at Exeter Center, and at 2:30 in the M. E. church at the Lake. Rev. Bro. Reed exalted Christ as Saviour and Lord, and warned against trusting other gods, in his evening sermon at the Baptist church. I dropped into the Christian Endeavor meeting before the preaching, and among other good things read was a liberal extract from Dr. A. J. Gordon's testimony on "Divided Allegiance."

Money is reported exceedingly close, and so it seems to be for Christian work, while there seems to be an abundance for political rallies and campaign purposes. I have sold but few books and have not found ready welcome for the Cynosure as I would like in the homes of its friends. Bros. Angel, Height, Clark and others, who once welcomed its weekly visits, speak words of commendation, but have put it among items of retrenchment on account of depressed finances. My excellent host and hostess are conservative and careful in speaking of their neighbors, but in circulating among the people I have obtained a fair understanding of the situation.

There is abundant evidence that the work of our agents has not been in vain. The lodge has lost its prestige and something of its power here, though like that reptile writhing under a special curse, it wiggles and squirms in its death agonies. Several old stagers have demitted to the Grand Lodge below and only "light weight" victims are found to don the "hoodwink and cabletow." It is to be expected that men who know very little will be readily induced to swear that they won't tell what little they do know; but when men with brains and a morsel of common sense, independence or manhood submit to the binding, gagging and robbing process of initiation, it proves that the "god of this world" is blinding them and "getting in his work."

The situation in Schuylers Lake is not wholly unlike to that in other places where the light has been turned on. The people are convinced that the lodge system and its religion are from the devil, and that he inhabits and uses the whole scheme to weaken and worry the church and the cause of Christ. The faith that Masons hold and the fruits they produce reveal their paternity; and not until a man who is enlightened has deliberately chosen the "father of lies" as his patron saint, will he barter his liberty in this world, and his soul in the next, for the proffered secrets and services of the lodge.

As I wrote you before, the "fraters" have drawn the line, and called upon the "cowans" and both the Christian congregations to accept the law from their secret tribunal. Not in so many words, but in a more emphatic way they have said, "We hold the key to the situation and we propose to regulate the ministers and run the churches at the Lake, by a free use of the boycott. You do as we say, or you won't get a dollar of our money, and we'll make it hot for you." This is the simple issue tendered by the lodge at the Lake to the bride of Christ, and the great need of the faithful here is confidence in God.

They are confronted, not by the "devil transformed into an angel of light," but with protruding hoofs and horns, and with his forked tongue of vengence upon all who will not fall down and worship the beast or his image. There are saints of God here, I am confident, the material of which martyrs are made, but some seem sorely perplexed by the situation. Let us pray that Christ will give courage to his people, and speedily pluck his bride out of the jaws of the apocalyptic dragon.

COOPERSTOWN, N. Y., Oct. 15.—This is a hard old Masonic town, and my first day's experience does not give promise of very large returns. There are two pastors here, the Baptist and Presbyterian, who are not lodgemen, but they are as much meeker than Moses as you can imagine. Neither would buy a book or even promise to read Finney if I would lend or give them one. They were too busy saving souls and serving the church. The Universalist pastor and the Episcopal rector were "redhot" from the start, the former even threatening me with a notice to leave town. I found one old man who did not keep the First Commandment, who did not hesitate to denounce the lodge, but thought the churches here no better. He may be right regarding some of them if he judges by their pastors. I did not begin tract distribution until towards evening, but tried to sell books as I made calls. I thought it would be best to try to sell books first. I left them good natured at the Lake yesterday, but what will be their mood when next heard from no one can tell. I thought you would like to hear how the battle goes, and so I write in haste before going to the Baptist prayer service. It may be better further on, or I may be warned out of town. The Lord will direct. J. P. STODDARD.

THE WORK IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

CLEARWATER, Cal., Oct. 12, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The meetings at Tipton grew in interest all the time. They were well attended considering the busy season. The divine spirit was uniting the people together in prayer and sentiment for a revival. I was very kindly entertained by the good people there, and shall ever hold them in most grateful remembrance. Several signed for the Cynosure and Lodge Lamp.

The pastors, Revs. DeWitt and Cowdry, came on to resume the work. We turned the meeting over to them and took the train for Los Angeles, where I arrived Tuesday morning the 6th. I was met at the train by kind friends who took charge of me and saw that my inner man was cared for. I was billed to speak on Wednesday night at the Pico Heights M. E. church. The pastor, Rev. Morrison, is a member of a number of secret societies, but said to me, "I guess that in my heart I'm with the United Brethren on that question. Your church is certainly right in opposing secret societies." His Christian daughter spoke up and said, "I know I'm opposed to the whole business."

I called on a nunber of friends, and found all pleased to see me. Among the many, I mention Mr. Hugh Todd, an architect, who paid for the Cynosure a few months ago for the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. halls of Los Angeles. He found that they have produced good fruit, so he subscribed for the paper for the city library this time. He is a seceding Mason and knows the evils of the lodge system by contact in the lodge and out of it. In his business as architect, he comes in contact every day with lodgemen, and has opportunities to put in some hard licks against them.

I came on to Clearwater, Los Angeles county, and found Elder Tibbett engaged in a meeting. I was billed to preach Saturday night and three times on Sabbath. We had a blessed time; some were saved and sanctified; eight united with the church on Sabbath. The meetings continue through the week on the straight line of holiness and separation from the world. This doctrine is gaining ground here in Southern California. We have hopes that it may prevail against sin and worldliness everywhere. P. B. WILLIAMS.

ST. PAUL CHURCHES AROUSED.

THEY APPEAL TO CIVIL AUTHORITIES TO PREVENT THE CIRCULATION OF ANTI SECRET LITERATUAE—THEY EXCLUDE REV. WM FENTON FROM THEIR CHORCHES.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Oct. 9, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Having responded to an invitation to attend a Christian Endeavor meeting of the Central Presbyterian church of this city, and thereat quoted the words of their pastor, to-wit: that he is a Freemason and a Knight Templar, and that he expressed his faithfulness and fealty to the Masonic obligations and vows by saying that anyone breaking the Masonic obligation is a low, mean, perjured liar, a committee from that church formally waited upon me and informed me that if I went to that church again they would have me arrested. I enquired to know upon what charge. They told me upon the charge of insanity. That was before I had printed or written one word upon the matter.

A few weeks ago, upon one Lord's day morning, Dr. Brooks preached in that church, and I went to hear him, but was met at the door by a Freemason, one of the committee that had warned me not to go to that church. He said, as he held the door closed against me, "Did not I tell you that you could not come to this church?" Asking him for the reason, he replied, "You are a crazy crank;" and he added, "We have thought the matter all over, and have decided to arrest you if you give us any trouble either before or after the service, and I have a policeman here for that purpose." He sent a boy into the church to call out the policeman, and I made the due guard and cut-throat sign of an Entered Apprentice Mason and came away. Probably if I had remained at the door they would have laid hands on me, and then arrested me on the simple charge of assault and battery.

Now the daily newspapers of the city inform us that other churches, Presbyterian and Baptist, have applied to the chief of police for protection, and that the chief has detailed a policeman "to watch the movements of the man," to see that he does not give away tracts in the streets near their churches.

Thus it has come to pass that truth concerning God's Word and in defence of the honor of that Word is placed under the surveillance of the city policemen by the churches to be proscribed. For no one, so far as I know, has been able to deny what I have said or written on the relation of the Bible to Masonic principles.

"But," says the apostle Paul, "if I delay that thou mayest know how men ought to conduct themselves in the house of God, which is th hurch of the living God, the pillar and ground f the truth. And confessedly great is the mys- ery of godliness, who was manifested in the esh, justified in the Spirit, seen by angels, reached among Gentiles, believed on in the orld, taken up in glory. But the Spirit says xpressly, that in after times some will fall away om the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, nd teachings of demons; of those who speak lies hypocrisy, having their own conscience seared ith a hot iron." 1 Tim. 3:15—4:1,2. (Rev. er.)

If the last verse in this quotation is not fulfilled every Freemason that professes to be a minis- er of Christ, where is it fulfilled? If the Holy pirit's instruction given to Timothy is intended r Christ's ministers to-day, then we have it as llows: "If thou put the brethren in mind of hese things thou wilt be a good minister of Christ esus, nurtured in the words of the faith and the ood teaching which thou hast strictly followed." Tim. 4:6.

An evangelist went to Delano, in this State, to reach the Gospel, intending to remain there, ut he touched upon secret societies in the light f God's Word, and was driven out of the place y a mob. Not daring to wait for the train for ear of the mob, he walked six miles to another tation to take the train. His name is Fred llen; God bless him He writes:

"I was driven out of Delano because men love arkness instead of light, because their deeds are vil. It made the devil howl when I exposed the bominations of his secret societies; and I trust hat I may be faithful in proclaiming the Gospel nd the whole counsel of God.....It would be ood for all of God's children to know the abomi- ations of these hidden mysteries contained in dges. It seems like we hit the devil's tender oot when we attack them."

May the Lord endue his people with power to peak the truth in his name. The Presbyterian ynod is now in session here. The best of them re like unfaithful shepherds caressing and play- g with wolves in the sheepfold. For some of hem are Masons, Odd-fellows and such like. For dge-worship is demon-worship, lying and hypo- risy.

A GOOD LIFT FOR THE CAUSE.

Pittsburg, Pa., Oct. 15, 1896.

Dear Cynosure:—It seemed wise that I spend few days in this section before arranging the rogram, and tending to the special work of the tate Convention. As I am using all my time in ushing the work, I take but little to report. ll the indications favor a strong convention. ur leaders in this section are ready for a forward ove. Invitations come for the Pennsylvania onvention one year from this, but where shall e Ohio Convention be held? It's time for friends that State to speak.

Pittsburg and Allegheny have more life than I xpected. Business, while not brisk, seems to ave an upward tendency. The Scotch-Irish are stirring people. They will be at work regard- ss of times. I attended a meeting of the Pitts- urg Presbytery of the Covenanters this week. was a largely attended, pleasant and harmoni- s gathering. As a representative of the N. C. ., I was given the privileges of the floor and in- ted to participate in the conference. Six young en from the seminary delivered trial discourses. hese were approved and all were recommended r licensure. I was glad to note that the ser- ons had the right reformatory ring. If spared e may expect that these young men will be able ivocates of reform. Some enquiry was made r N. C. A. literature.

The professors report the largest attendance at e seminary for years. A large number of tracts eating on secret societies have been issued by e testimony-bearing committee of the synod. astors were asked to take such a quantity as ey could distribute in their congregations. ny friend desiring such tracts for distribution ill be furnished by writing Rev. W. J. Coleman, 4 Boyle St., Allegheny, Pa., if a stamp is sent r postage.

At the conference brief addresses were deliv- ed on the following subjects. "The Sabbath," ev. S. J. Crowe; "The Origin and Object of the ovenanters," Rev. R. C. Wylie; "Political Dis- nt," Rev. W. J. Coleman; "My Trip to Ireland nd Scotland," Rev. H. H. George; "Secret Societies," Rev. W. B. Stoddard. Much interest was manifest. Fifteen Cynosure subscriptions were secured. A vote requesting all pastors in the presbytery to preach on the subject of secret societies at least once a year was passed, the work of your agent commended, and the cause given a general lift.

Rev. J. B. McIsaac, pastor of the Brookland church where presbytery met, urged that I return soon and give some lectures in his church and vicinity. Since last spring I have endeavored to find opportunity to respond to the invitation to preach and lecture in Scottdale, Pa. Bro. J. C. Berg writes that I am advertised to preach in the United Presbyterian church there on Sabbath. It was also thought arrangements could be made for me to address the Mennonite Conference that will be in session at that place over Sabbath. I hope to look in on the United Presbyterian Synod meeting at Wilkinsburg next Tuesday. Let us look up and press forward. Pray for and, as far as possible, plan to attend the State Convention.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NEARING THE LAST GREAT BATTLE.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 14, 1896.

Editor Cynosure: — Dr. Talmage preached last Sabbath on the "Last Great Battle," to be fought by good against evil, and in his description of a portion of the army of evil he said: "Other regiments who will march into the fight will be the regiments alcoholic. They will be made up of drunkards and drunkard-makers. They will move into the ranks with what the Bible calls the 'Song of the drunkard.' And what a bloated and crooked and bleared and blasted and hiccoughing and nauseating host! If now, according to a scientist, in England there are 50,000 deaths annually from strong drink, and in the United States, according to another estimate, 98,000 deaths annually from strong drink, what an army of living drunkards that implies, coming up from the whole earth to take their places in the last battle, especially as the evil increases and the millions now staggering on their way may be joined by other millions of reinforcements; brigade after brigade, with drunkards' bones drumming on the heads of beer barrels the dead march of souls."

A number of Washington people went over to Alexandria, Va., this week to hear Hon, Joshua Levering, prohibition candidate for President, speak. His meeting was opened with the singing of "Throw Out the Life Line" by sixteen young ladies dressed in pure white, and the divine blessing was invoked for the candidate and the cause he represented by Rev. S. J. McDougall. Mr. Levering did not mince words, as may be seen by the following quotation from his address: "The politician gets his money out of the saloon-keeper, and the saloon-keeper gets the protection of the politician. Saloons are established for three things—to rob the laborer of his hard earnings, to deprive him of his manhood, and to make him a drunkard. This is robbing labor of its just reward.

"We permit this to exist in our land. When we want to get rid of this state of affairs we will have to go where it exists. This condition is legalized, and the only way we can get rid of it is through a process of law. The Prohibition party promises the people if they put them in power that the liquor business will never be legalized." Mr. Levering also referred to the enormous power wielded by the whisky trust, and to the killing of more people every year by whisky than were killed outright during the entire civil war. The meeting closed with the singing of "America" by the entire audience, nearly half of which were ladies.

AN APPEAL.

New Orleans, La., Oct. 13, 1896.

To the churches, religious and missionary societies, and every true reformer.

Dear Friends: — The St. Matthew Baptist church of this city, of which I am now pastor, is desirous of building a respectable house of worship. We have been greatly persecuted and harassed; having our little church with all our effects burned a few years ago. We have been struggling ever since to liquidate our debts, which we have now accomplished; therefore we are now preparing to commence work on our new edifice, and not being desirous of resorting to any of Satan's plans to raise money for God's church, we make this appeal through the Cynosure to every earnest and true disciple of Christ, to aid us in this work; no matter how small the donation, it will be accepted joyfully. This church is the only Negro church in this city which takes an open stand against secret societies and other popular sins of the day. Therefore you can readily imagine the great opposition we have to contend with in this modern Sodom and Gomorrah, and especially in a great city like this where Catholicism is so very strong among the Negroes.

Send all contributions to our pastor, Rev. Francis J. Davidson, 2506 South Robertson, between Third and Second streets, who will acknowledge receipt of same, and also give publicity through the New Orleans Tribune.

Yours in Christ, St. Matthew Baptist Church,
(Per) Francis J. Davidson, Pastor,
Alice E. Randle, Church Clerk.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. T. Palmeter, Clear Lake, Iowa:—I am anxious to get into our public library here some anti-secret literature, that all may know how communities, courts, and many churches are handicapped by secret societies. Our State and nation are run by secret society influence. Scores of them are doing that very thing, and I, and tens of thousands of anti-secretists, are helping to elect officers, more than four-fifths of whom are Freemasons. I wish you would give me in the Cynosure the per cent of our county, State and national officers who are Freemasons. Also give the number of Masons in the United States. I know it will be a fearful picture to contemplate.

I am an old Anti-Mason, born and raised in Western New York, and was nine years old when Capt. Morgan was murdered. My father was a radical Anti-mason through all those trying years. I have, therefore, had good cause to watch, with jealous interest, Masonic progress; and have many times personally felt its fangs. I can patiently bear it all for Christ's sake, but it is for the church and the rising generation that I am chiefly anxious. I got Bro. Ronayne to come here years ago and I procured a church for him to lecture in, and was one of his officers to work the degrees. I also went with a team in the dead of winter to Marshalltown, before the railroad was built, to a State anti-secret convention.

At that time I took Bro. Stoddard back with me to Mason City, and procured the M. E. church for him to lecture in. Before the lecture he preached such an able sermon on Sabbath, that the Masons went back on their contract and refused to let him lecture the next evening. I then hired the Congregational church where he lectured and roasted the M. E. Board for going back on us. Our great danger lies in the fact that so many ministers dare not preach on this question for fear of their bread and butter.

Bro J. W. Wood, Sumner, Wash:—It was the unalterable righteousness of the law which made atonement necessary. Had it been capable of re-adjustment it might have been so modified as to have spared the Son of God. The most pitiful cry that ever entered the ears of the heavenly Father was when Christ prayed, "Oh, my Father, if it be possible let this cup pass from me!" It was the stern righteousness of the law, just as it was given at Sinai, which crucified him. The idea that his death abrogated it! His death confirmed it, and made it as stable as is the throne of God. It is easier for heaven and earth to pass than for one tittle of it to fail.

Bro. Geo. Dudley Dodge, Hampton Falls, N. H.:—The first recorded prohibitionist in this State was a noble redman who, as a chief, besought the Massachusetts authorities then in control not to allow firewater to be furnished the men of his tribe. I am sorry I cannot now recall his name. Pity 'tis that so few of our white rulers now seem to measure up to the standard of this untutored savage, even though they may profess to be Christians.

It has been said that the first act passed by a legislative body in this State was one to regulate the sale of intoxicating drink, and the town records of an hundred years ago show that some of the most respectable men, and some women, were then licensed to retail the same. But the fact of this really "good moral character" did not in the least hinder the ravages of king alcohol.

In one of the most respectable towns in the State every building about the old parish meeting house on the common was either a saloon or the home of a sot. In the mansion of the leading man of the State, Governor, Chief Justice, etc., were five drunken sons, although his own common drink was cold water. The store charges in an old account book are chiefly for drink. The doctor was a sot. From the lips of an old resident was confirmed the impression that every house was the home of some inebriate, and he was the son-in-law of an eloquent preacher who died of delirium tremens in the next town.

Blinded by custom, the parish church disciplined its members for the "sin of drunkenness," while the writer's aunt once showed him the decanter she said she would have been ashamed to have had empty when the ministers called. Judged by their ballots, the majority of our spiritual leaders of to-day seem also to be in the same bondage to bad custom.

Bro. George W. Clark, Detroit, Mich.:—I want to congratulate you, and all who are so fortunate as to be readers and sustainers of so able, devoted and interesting a reform paper as the Christian Cynosure, on its having survived the struggles for existence through the vicissitudes of its twenty-nine years of faithful, earnest and incisive battle against the wily, secret and devilish powers of darkness. I have taken it almost from its birth up to its present maturity, and eagerly watch for the day and hour of its coming to my desk, where its contents are mostly devoured at the first sitting. I wish you and the Cynosure, and its numerous readers, many happy returns of "its birthday," and may its present earnest and devoted managers have as warm a place in the confidence and hearts of their readers as did their now sainted predecessors, Jonathan Blanchard and Henry L. Kellogg.

Rev. W. M. Lyon, Pastor Brethren church, Washington, D. C.:—I want to tell you that I believe your paper is proving a wonderful blessing to multitudes. I prize it very highly, and certainly would not like to be without it. After first reading it myself I turn it over to Brother and Sister Powers to use in their Beacon Light Mission of this city. I am sorry to say, however, that soon they are to remove their mission to Philadelphia. The good they have accomplished here in this direction, eternity alone can tell. Many, very many, have been given the true light through Father and Mother Powers. They will be greatly missed in the work here, but no doubt the Lord has a greater work for them to do in our sister city. May the Lord abundantly bless them. And may all lovers of the truth stand nobly by them.

Rev. L. J. Fihn, St. James, Minn.:—For several years I have had strong convictions on the subject of secret societies. I am a pastor in the Swedish Lutheran church, and I am among those in the front on this question. I do not get much time to read your paper, but I want to aid you in your mission, and therefore I will subscribe for the Cynosure. May God uphold you with wisdom, patience and courage.

FROM OUR KANSAS COLPORTEUR.

Yates Center, Kan., Oct. 6, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—I am often told "that he who keeps out of other people's business is leading a more exemplary life than they who are always meddling in others affairs;" and like statements also: "What is the use to fight secret orders? they always have existed and always will;" "People are getting down on you," etc. What was the use of Noah, a preacher of righteousness, preaching to the antediluvian world for over a hundred years? What was the use of Moses repeating to the children of Isreal the story of their deliverence from bondage? What was the use of our Saviour saying, "Must I not be about my Father's business?" Or what was the use of him making the declaration that we should let our light shine?

I was made to shudder at the thought last Sabbath, when visiting a very feeble old man who said to me, "Yes, I heard of you being arrested on the street yesterday. I don't want to hear you say any more against the lodges; they teach more morality than all the churches put together." He did not stop to think, here is this man, a colporteur, offering to sell and give away literature opposed to secret orders, and while in a large crowd on the street, he was compelled by questions and answers to give away a great many lodge secrets, and when called a liar he proposed to quit the business if any one of them would file an affidavit that all he said and all in these books was false.

He was then arrested by one of their number and held awaiting trial because he refused to pay license, a thing not exacted of him by law. Neither do they consider that this is a free country, and by the declaration of a few, the freedom of many is prohibited. I have been compelled by Masons, with all kinds of death threats, to leave the public highway. I see the Scriptures mutilated in the pulpit. I see lodges and churches going hand in hand. I saw an old man who had paid $1,500 into the I. O. O. F. and the K. of P., who could not keep his dues paid till the last, and he died an object of charity. I saw another who had paid $1,150 into the Odd-fellows lodge, and he failed to pay his dues for four years, and lost his insurance and all.

I see men who have been falsely imprisoned, and men who have lost fortunes, and others who have been stoned and egged, and still others, like Rev. D. P. Rathbun, whose life was attempted thirteen times, and several times left for dead. Am I a Christian, and know these things, and say nothing? No! I consider this my business, as every true American ought. I do believe if there were not so many faint-hearted Christians we could soon sweep the field.

Bro. S. Wright, of this place, whose father sat on the Morgan jury, said that while he was an Odd-fellow in good standing, some one gave a true exposition of the order in a book, but the instructions given to his lodge was to "deny it," "make sport of it," "laugh it off," "and as quick as you can, get the book and burn it." If there were not so many public men like Wm. McKinley in these orders our country would be better off. Solomon says, "If the righteous are in power the people prosper, but if the wicked bear rule the people mourn." J. T. Cullor.

CHRISTIANITY VS. ODD-FELLOWSHIP.

Larwill, Ind. Oct. 12, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—Odd-fellowship is the most dangerous imitation of the religion of the Bible of any secret order I know. What our Christian religion does for fallen humanity, through repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, Odd-fellowship tries to do by initiation. In Grosh's Manuel, page 90, which is a standard authority on Odd-fellowship, we read as follows: "What regeneration by the Word of Truth is in religion, initiation is in Odd-fellowship."

Now note the difference between the two religions: Whenever the Holy Spirit sends conviction into the heart of any sinner to turn from the evil of his ways, he at once becomes conscious of sin, of righteousness and of a judgment to come, and as soon as his convictions are deep enough, he is persuaded to come to the altar of prayer and repentance. The penitent by saving faith in our Lord Jesus Christ receives the spirit or witness of adoption called regeneration, in a moment of time, and comes into possession of the graces, and that of the Bible kind, which Odd-fellowship tries to impart, namely, friendship, love and truth. Now let us see what the nature of these Christian graces are when imparted.

1. The friendship of Jesus Christ our Lord, who sticketh closer than a brother, and who has promised, if we only love and trust him, he will never leave nor forsake us.

2. The love of God shed abroad in the soul, whereby we are enabled to cry, Abba, Father, and the love of our neighbor, a desire to pray for our enemies and those who despitefully use us and entreat us, as well as for those who are our friends.

3. The spirit of truth is also imparted. If a person has never been truthful and wants to be a Christian in deed and truth, he will be truthful now, not only with the brotherhood of the church to which he may belong, but with everyone.

If these graces are retained and put into practice until the Comforter is come, he will lead us into all truth and righteousness; neither will any one be excluded from these graces on account of inability to pay, or affliction with chronic diseases, color, sex or race; but rich and poor, male or female, old men in their dotage, young men in their nonage, children, halt, lame and blind, all may come to the throne of grace and be partakers of these heavenly graces. Quite a number of the above-named members of the human family, Odd-fellowship excludes from its membership the defenseless, the poor, the weak and afflicted.

It excludes 1st., all women.

2. All colored men: Polynesians, Negroes, Chinese, Indians and half-breeds—all persons except free white Caucasian males; and of these it excludes—

3. All afflicted with chronic diseases such as consumption; also the deaf, dumb and blind.

4. All others who, on account of poverty, are unable to pay their dues, or on account of their enemies in the lodge are unable to secure a clear ballot. While persons who have to struggle against the disadvantages of an unpopular color, infirmity, disease or poverty need, if there is to be any discrimination, the sympathy and favorable consideration of the strong, it is evident that Odd-fellowship denies to mankind that fundamental principle of our government, that all men are created free and equal. These statements are taken from Grosh's Manuel and White's Digest of Laws, Decisions, etc., of Odd-fellowship.

In looking over the initiatory ceremonies, as recorded in the charge books issued by the Sovereign Grand Lodge of the world, assembled at Toronto, Canada, Sept. 22, 1880, in the initiatory degree this question is propounded to the candidate on whom the degree is being conferred: "Do you believe in the existence of a Supreme, Intelligent Being, the Creator and Preserver of the universe?" Christ is not mentioned, nor is he so much as alluded to even indirectly; the opening prayer being of the same nature, we conclude that Oddfellowship is a Christless institution from first to last. After the candidate comes inside the lodge-room this is the conductor's charge: "You are now within a lodge of Odd-fellows; here the world is shut out; you are separated from its cares and distinctions, its dissensions and its vices. Here friendship and love assert their mild dominion, while faith and charity combine to bless the mind with peace and soften the heart with sympathy.....But before you can unite with them you must pass through an initiatory ceremony, which will ultimately lead you to primary truth."

Judging from the grade and class of men who usually attend such occasions, instead of the world with its dissensions and its vices being shut out, they are shut in. Think of what kind of friendship and love may emanate from such a motley crowd of men. Saloon-keepers, drunkards, unbelievers, infidels, skeptics, and last and worst of all, Christians and ministers of the Gospel, who are outnumbered three to one by the ungodly part of the crowd.

FROM NEBRASKA.

Alexandria, Neb., Oct. 2, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—My husband attended the Nebraska City Presbytery, which met in the First Presbyterian church, Beatrice, Neb., on the first of September, and he heard Rev. S. F. Wilson give a very timely address on "Hindrances to Home Missions and their Remedies," in which he charged the secret insurance fraternities with being the greatest hindrance to the church work that he knew of. He said in part "that the money needed to run the church work was difficult to obtain, but let the Woodmen or the Workmen get up a picnic and the money would be forthcoming."

Rev. J. C. Redding, who was two years at the Moody Institute, was back to Alexandria several weeks ago and gave a lecture which did not help the cause of woman suffrage any. The W. C. T. U. of Alexandria have not met since April; they have suspended their meetings for a time; yet they had expected Mr. Redding's meetings would give the W. C. T. U. a boom. We would like to hear through the Cynosure if Mr. Bentley, the national candidate, is a lodgeman or not.

HOW THE HINDOOS SHAVED.

Peculiar Religious Ceremony In the Far East.

In the Koran there is no mention of shaving at all, yet the Mohammedans shave their heads in the same manner as the Hindoos. They also shave their armpits. But among the Hindoos—not only now, but ever since the publication of the Purana "Sambo" (the date of which is uncertain)—we find the hairs which grow upon the body regarded with a mixture of veneration and awe, for in this work it is written that according to the hairs a man has upon his body so many years (one year for each hair) shall his body remain in bliss or torment before again returning to the earth. This number is computed at some 3,600,000 And so we find that when a Hindoo child is born many ceremonies are gone through with priests and astrologers, and then "in the first, third, fifth or any odd year they (the parents) generally go to a certain fair and in an auspicious time and near a temple of a god have the child shaved for the first time." On reaching man's estate most Hindoos keep only a cue on the top of their heads and shave the rest of it. There is an object in this, for when they bathe—three times a day is the allotted performance—they tie this cue in a knot and then proceed with "pooja," or worship, saying verses from the Gayatri. Some Hindoos wear mustaches and beards turned up, but all wear whiskers, which are shaved off once when an adult of their connection dies. The shaving off of whiskers is thus a sign of mourning. The Hindoos burn their dead, and the person who sets fire to the pile has himself shaved in every portion of the head and face, except only his cue, but if the person deceased, whether male or female, be younger than he, then he does not shave his whiskers.

How to Tan Furs.

Spread the skin flat, with the inner side upward, and sprinkle it with a mixture of salt two parts, saltpeter one part and alum one part. The mixture must be pounded fine. Put on plenty and roll the skin up tight. In a few days the powder will have dissolved. Then stretch the skin on a board and scrape the inside quite clean. Dry it thoroughly in the sun. Rub it well with neatsfoot oil and dry it again in the sun. Scrape it again, to get the loose oil out, and sprinkle it well with hot plaster of paris powder. Rub this in with a cloth. Dry once more, and the fur will be ready to use.

How to Make the Hair Grow.

While most people admit there is nothing better for the scalp than a thorough brushing of the hair morning and night, many will not persist in this and are constantly asking what will make the hair come in when it is fast coming out. Many of the best hairdressers and barbers are recommending rubbing pure grease in every thoroughly every night or every other night. In several instances this has proved very effectual, and a new growth of short and strong hair all over the head has been the result. Many children and some of an older growth are severely troubled with dandruff in the scalp, which always makes the head and hair look dirty. This can be removed by rubbing pure grease in every other night, and in the morning following wash thoroughly with soap.

How to Make a Summer Dessert.

A novel and delicious dessert is called stone cream. To make it dissolve half an ounce of gelatin in a little water and a pint of sweetened milk in which lemon peel has been boiled. As soon as it is cold pour over a layer of jam in a deep glass dish. When the mixture sets, stick strips of blanched almonds into the cream, place on ice and serve.

How to Estimate Without Weighing.

Twelve small eggs without the shells weigh one pound.

Ten medium eggs without the shells weigh one pound.

Nine large eggs without the shells weigh one pound.

An ordinary egg weighs from one and a quarter to two ounces.

A duck's egg weighs from two to three ounces.

A turkey's egg weighs from three to four ounces.

A goose egg weighs from four to six ounces.

Two ounces unmelted butter equal in size an ordinary egg.

Two tablespoonfuls of liquid weigh one ounce.

Two heaping tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar weigh one ounce.

One heaping tablespoonful of granulated sugar weighs one ounce.

Two rounded tablespoonfuls of flour weigh one ounce.

How to Remove a Fishhook.

The hook, if not too deeply imbedded in the flesh, may be generally removed without surgical aid. If the hook is fastened in the hand, cut the line from the hook, turn the point upward and push it through as a needle would be in sewing. If the hook has a broad end or eye, snip this off before attempting to remove it. Do not try to draw the hook out backward, as the barb will lacerate and inflame the flesh.

How to Clean Tortoise Shell.

Tortoise shell combs or ornaments that have lost their polish may be renovated by rubbing them with very finely powdered rotten stone mixed with a little olive oil. The rotten stone should be sifted through a piece of muslin before mixing it with the oil. When all marks are removed, polish again with a piece of very soft chamois leather and a little jeweler's rouge.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1896.

EXAMPLE FOR ALL CHURCH ASSEMBLIES.

The Pittsburgh Gazette of Oct. 15 contains a report of the meeting of the Pittsburgh Presbytery of the Reformed Presbyterian church. It was held in the Brookland church, Westmoreland county, Pa. The Gazette says:

A conference was held yesterday on "Different Phases of Reform." Interesting addresses were delivered by Rev. S. J. Crowe, Rev. R. C. Wylie, Rev. W. J. Coleman, Rev. W. B. Stoddard, and Rev. H. H. George. A large congregation listened to the presentation of the various reform movements with the deepest interest. The meeting throughout was a pleasant one. The attendance was large, and the association of the presbytery with the local congregation exceedingly pleasant.

The following resolution was adopted. If similar resolutions were passed by every church court and carried out by the pastor, they would soon tell in the battering down of Baal's secret altars:

Owing to the great and increasing evils arising from the prevalence of oath-bound secret societies,

Resolved, That the presbytery request all its pastors to hold a public meeting and preach within their several churches on this important subject at least once a year.

We also desire to express our great interest in the anti-secret work in this State as conducted by the Rev. W. B. Stoddard, and our appreciation of his address before the presbytery.

WHY THE LAND MOURNETH.

What do you think of a professed minister of the Gospel who goes into Freemasonry and swears to keep secret the secrets of a Royal Arch Mason—"murder and treason not excepted"—and then claims that he is morally bound to keep such an oath, and conceal the greatest of crimes, if committed by a Royal Arch Mason? Did infamy ever reach a higher pitch than this? Was there ever a more degrading and wicked performance? Could there be anything more shocking to true manhood? Could a greater violence be offered to justice? Could a greater insult be offered to honesty?

Is there not some chosen curse, red with uncommon wrath, to blast the wretch who would forswear himself to keep secret murder and treason, and then proclaim himself morally bound to observe such an oath? What must be the conscience of such a swearer? Can it be a good conscience void of offence both toward man and God? How long will Masonic ministers call good evil, and evil good; and bitter sweet, and sweet bitter; and light darkness, and darkness light? Woe is pronounced against such; they are to be dashed in pieces like a potter's vessel.

EVIL WHICH BLUNTS THE CONSCIENCE.

There is no evil force which so completely blunts the conscience as consenting to evil, upon the plea that good may come out of it. There can no possible good come of evil. To be kept from the evil must be the chief desire in all moral and religious teaching. Evil is violence to all culture, to all refinement, to all spiritual development. Human progress in science, in art, in religion does not admit any silliness, sham or cant, or of any deception, or anything that defileth or maketh a lie.

Truth is its only guide, and doing good its only mission; intelligence is its light-house, reason its pilot and righteousness its harbor. It wears no blindfold. It has no rope tied around its neck. It is always dressed in the spotless robes of soberness, righteousness and truth, and is never half clothed and half naked. It is always shod with the preparation of righteousness, and never has one shoe off and the other on. It hates ignorance, spurns superstition and turns from every form of barbarism as its great enemy. It has no hiding place in which to jibber in heathen forms and ceremonies, but marches commensurate with the law of God, its great rule of action under which it reveals useful knowledge that the world may be made wiser and better.

To talk of associating Freemasonry with science, and art, and pure religion, is to offer insult to intelligence, destroy reason, shock all refinement and set aside integrity. It is to substitute falsehood for truth, evil for good, bitter for sweet, darkness for light. Is there any more dangerous sign of the times than professed ministers of the Gospel to take the Masonic oaths? There is nothing in more direct conflict with Christian ethics. There is no more complete violence offered to moral integrity and spiritual refinement. How they can give their consent to take the Masonic oaths, and then try to make it appear that they are morally bound to keep them, passes beyond the limit of moral comprehension. They need to have the scales removed from their eyes. They need to have their ears unstopped. They need to be dipped into the pool of cleansing.

THE KELLERTON, IOWA, OUTRAGE.

For the sake of the younger portion of our readers we will give an account of the mobbing of Rev. D P. Rathbun on June 21, 1881, at Kellerton, Iowa, a small town on the Mt. Ayr branch of the C. B. & Q R. R., in Ringgold county. Elder Rathbun was a prominent minister in the Wesleyan Methodist church, who passed to glory several years ago; his life shortened by repeated attempts by Freemasons to murder him.

Shortly before the time when he was to lecture at Kellerton, he was engaged in conversation with a Masonic lawyer named W. H. Brown, in the store of a United Presbyterian named D Hague, when a notorious saloonist named Ed. Gale approached Elder Rathbun from behind, and with a heavy blow on the back of the head, felled him to the floor. He then sprang with both knees upon his prostrate victim, and struck him a succession of heavy blows on the head, which rendered him partially insensible. Rev. S. Smith, an aged Wesleyan minister who had driven with Elder Rathbun to town, then came to his rescue, but was seized and held back by two men, one of them a Mason named Dan Collard, who was the leader of the mob, and who shouted, Kill him! Kill him!

The bloodthirsty, cowardly mob, which then numbered forty or fifty, crowded around the prostrate form of the lecturer, and with fiendish oaths kicked him out of the store and across the sidewalk into a pond of water in the street. Here Bro. Smith was permitted to come to his assistance, and with difficulty he was supported into a doctor's office, where he vomited blood, and was found to have sustained very severe internal injuries. He was assisted into Bro. Smith's carriage by Harmon Patrick and L. O. Shaver, while the mob pelted them with eggs, until the horses were literally smeared. The mob stood around with many oaths and curses. As they started out of town, the leader, Dan Collard, flourishing a revolver and swearing vengeance on those who would dare to speak against Masonry. Elder Rathbun, covered with blood and mud, was driven nine miles to a place of safety.

But what was most humiliating, when Ed. Gale, the chief actor in this outrage, was brought before the mayor at Mt. Ayr, the only result was to lionize the desperado, and heap abuse upon the lecturer and his friends. Subsequently an able lawyer was employed to investigate the facts and take further legal proceedings, by whom the occurrences were found to be as above stated. The writer has a letter from the magistrate before whom Gale was tried, in which all the facts are admitted; but such was the power of Masonic prejudice that further legal proceedings had to be abandoned.

FREEMASONRY IN THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

Prof. John Robison, of the Edinburgh University in Scotland, after giving convincing testimony by eminent authors of his day, thus saddles the chief responsibility for the French Revolution upon the Duke of Orleans. The Duke was at the head of Freemasonry in France at that time. Prof. Robison says:

"I imagine that these observations will leave no doubt in the mind of the reader with respect to the influence of the secret fraternity of Freemasonry in the French Revolution, and that he will allow it to be highly probable that the infamous Duke of Orleans had, from the beginning, entertained hopes of mounting the throne of France. It is not my province to prove or disprove this point, only I think it is no less evident, from many circumstances in the transactions of those tumultuous days, that the active leaders had quite different views, and were impelled by fanatical notions of democratic felicity, or, more probably, by their own ambition to be the movers of this vast machine, to overturn the ancient government, and erect a republic, of which they hoped to be the managers. Mirabeau had learned, when in Germany, that the principles of anarchy had been well digested into a system, and therefore wished for some instruction as to the subordinate detail of the business, and for this purpose requested a deputation from the Illuminati.

"The dispositions at the Chatelet, which I have already quoted, give repeated and unequivocal proofs, that he, with a considerable number of the deputies of the National Assembly, had formed this plot before the 5th of October, 1789. That trial was conducted in a strange manner, partly out of respect for the Royal Family, which still had some hearts affectionately attached to it, and to the monarchy, and partly by reason of the fears of the members of this court. There was now no safety for any person who differed from the opinion of the frantic populace of Paris. The chief points of accusation were written in a schedule which is not published, and the witnesses were ordered to depose on these in one general yes or no; so that it is only the least important part of the evidence that has been printed. I am well informed that the whole of it is carefully preserved, and will one day appear."

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

A correspondent writing from Washington, D. C., shows at whose door the crimes of the liquor traffic must be laid. He says:

"The Anti Saloon League closed its week of temperance revival meetings with an immense and enthusiastic gathering of the opponents of the saloon, in Foundry M. E. church. A striking address was delivered by Rev. Luther B. Wilson, first vice-president of the Anti-Saloon League, and presiding elder of the Washington district of the Baltimore M. E. Conference. Mr. Wilson said in his address: 'If there is a man here to-night who has signed an application for a liquor license during the coming year, let him look his act square in the face. If there should go into that saloon a boy who should thereby be led to the gutter to increase a mother's agony, the man who signed the application for that license is responsible even if he did not sign it himself, but simply by a nod of his head caused another to sign it; he is a party to the crime, and must face the same responsibility. We are all tied up together. The man who sits in his little corner and lets the world go its own way is simply mistaken, and will awaken to realize his responsibility. The real responsibility for the curse of drink rests with the righteous men and women of this country. They have neglected their duty of stretching out the strong arm of the united Christian people of America against this curse.'"

OLD SOLDIERS SHOULD RISE UP IN ARMS.

In prohibition Kansas the Federal government overrides the prohibitory law so far as to establish a government saloon in connection with the Soldiers' Home at Leavenworth. Our Washington correspondent this week thus reports the same wrong and injustice to the old soldiers at the capital. He says: "The Anti-saloon League is this week conducting a series of eight meetings at Foundry M. E. church. These meetings have so far been decidedly interesting, having good music, provided by the Christian Endeavor and Epworth League choirs, and impressive speakers. The series was opened with a song service, and in the first prayer offered, Rev. Emerson W. Bliss said: 'God have mercy upon the saloon-keepers and upon the men who grant them a license.' One of the most notable addresses made up to this time was that of Maj. George A. Hilton, of California, and the most notable portion of it was that devoted to the sale of liquor by the U. S. government at the Soldiers' Homes. Said Maj. Hilton: 'Come with me to the home, near Los Angeles, Cal., and see what the government is doing for the old soldiers.

"This home is in the most beautiful spot that the eye of man ever gazed upon in any land, but the avenue which leads from the home to the beach would make you weep with shame and pity for your government. Lying on either side of this beautiful avenue every day are many men dead drunk—men who fought to cement the bonds with which this country is bound—and at the home is the saloon run by the U. S. government where they were made drunk. Come with me to the home of 4,000 of our old soldiers at Dayton, Ohio, and see how the government is manufacturing drunkards out of its old soldiers. There you will see a sign reading, "Government Knitting Factory." It was once a knitting factory, but it did not pay, and was replaced by a saloon, where the bone and sinew of our old soldiers is knitted into drunkards. There they are fed more than 46 barrels of beer a day.

"'More than $60,000 of their pension money is taken from the inmates of this home annually at this saloon, and if their money runs out they are issued checks, each good for a glass of beer, which are deducted from their succeeding pension. These checks are not good for bread or shoes—only beer. If they get drunk, and become offenders through this saloon, they are put on the rock pile. That is the way the old soldiers are treated on their march to the grave. An officer there told me that the saloon was necessary to regulate the old soldiers. He said they would go out of the home and get drunk, where they would be robbed and sometimes killed, and the authorities thought it best to regulate them this way. But when I think of the government taking their pensions, which should be a blessing to them, back through their debauched bodies, I wonder that the soldiers all over the broad land do not rise up in arms.'"

THE KELLERTON MOB LEADER.

A number of years ago, when we were on a lecture campaign in Iowa, on a cold snowy day our train pulled into the little town of Grand River, in Decatur Co. We had heard that the notorious ruffian and ex-saloon-keeper, Ed. Gale, who was the tool of the lodges in inflicting almost fatal injuries upon Elder D. P. Rathbun, in the Kellerton mob, lived here. While the train only stopped two minutes, we got off, and putting our hand on the shoulder of a big, burly fellow standing on the platform, we said, "Do you know Ed. Gale?"

"I do," he replied.

"Does he live here?"

"He does."

"Where?"

"My name is Ed. Gale," he replied.

"Then," we said, "you are a man we have long read about. Your name has been published from one end of the land to the other as the man who, in the Kellerton mob, assaulted Elder Rathbun, one of the most widely known and highly esteemed ministers in the Wesleyan Methodist church. Your name will go down in history as the perpetrator of one of the most daring outrages on free speech that the annals of our country afford. And unless you repent you may rest assured the avenging doom of divine retribution must strike you." Just then the bell tapped, the train moved, and we swung upon the platform; but looking back as we rounded a curve, we still saw the astonished Ed. Gale gazing after that train.

DRIFTING TOWARD EMPIRE.

It is a settled principle of political science that the politics of a country are controlled by those who control its wealth. If the wealth is in the hands of one man the government will be despotic. If it is in the hands of a few it will be an aristocratic government. If the people own their homes and farms then the government must necessarily be republican. In the light of this principle there is cause for alarm in the following statement from the St. Louis Post Dispatch:

"In answering a correspondent the New York World quotes from the census of 1890 to show that 3,000 families own over twelve thousand million dollars of the wealth of the United States. So, accepting its figures, let us see what they mean.

"The total assessed value of all real and personal property in Nebraska under the census of 1890 was $184,000,000; of Missouri, $887,000,000; of Illinois, $809,000,000; of Kansas, $347,000,000; of Kentucky, $547,000,000; of Tennessee, $382,000,000; of Colorado, $220,000,000; of Texas, 780,000,000; of Alabama, $258,000,000; of Mississippi, $166,000,000; of Indiana, $856,000,000, and of California, $1,101,000,000.

"The combined assessed wealth, real and personal, of these twelve great States of the West and South, as shown by the census of 1890, foots up between six and seven billions, while the combined wealth of 3,000 plutocratic families foots up over twelve billions—nearly twice as much."

CALL FOR THE PENNSYLVANIA CONVENTION

To the friends of the anti-secrecy cause in Pennsylvania, greeting: It has been thought wise to hold our annual convention this year in autumn rather than spring as heretofore. You are hereby invited to assemble in the Green Tree Brethren church, Oaks, Montgomery county, Nov. 18th, at 2 P. M., to listen to addresses, engage in discussion and transact such business as may come before the convention. The convention will continue its sessions through the following day and evening. Rev. W. B. Stoddard will arrange and report details. Let all come who can. Come in the fear of God and in prayer, believing that he will be present in the mighty operations of his spirit, and the wonderful manifestation of his truth. We request earnest supplication, by all the friends who read this call, for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon this convention. We go forward believing that our Lord will be present to work mightily for his own cause, and assured that he will not disappoint our expectation. "According to your faith, so shall it be."

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Rev. A. G. Anderson of this city called on us recently.

—Miss Danskin and Miss Wright, of Sault de St. Marie, Mich., visited the Cynosure office last week.

—Rev. J. Milligan Wylie and Rev. C. R. Hunt, of this city, have been welcome callers at our office recently.

—Rev. A. Notestine, of Woodstock, Ill., writes that he has much enjoyed reading the Cynosure during the past two years.

—Samuel McGinniss, a staunch friend of the anti-secret cause from Blanchard, Ia., was a welcome visitor at our office last week.

—General Secretary Phillips attended the meeting of the Elgin Congregational Association at Crystal Lake, Ill., on Tuesday the 13th.

—Rev. J. F. Svendsen, formerly of Holden, Mo., has recently moved to Chicago, and now resides at 1311 Sheffield St. He made the Cynosure a call last week.

—Mrs. M. B. Park, Alexandria, Neb., writes: "I have the lodgemen here on the warpath on account of my circulating anti-secret literature in their homes. Every day I am led to see more and more the need of preaching this reform."

—Bro. W. B. Stoddard writes: "You no doubt have the history of Albert Pike, a rebel general buried by the Knights of Kadosh. The burial services were at midnight. He was surely a devil worshiper. A more profane swearer never walked the streets of Washington."

—Rev. D. B. Gunn, of Dorchester, Mass., writes: "What a terrible havoc the saloons and secret societies are working in this last age of the world. How the cause of righteousness and morality are suffering by these agencies of Satan to hinder the cause of Christ and ruin the bodies and souls of men."

—Rev. S. R. Wallace, of Brooklyn, N. Y., writes: "The Cynosure is invaluable in carrying on the work of Christ, especially in contending against the power of secretism. You deserve the earnest support of all those who love Christian liberty. May you all be prospered in this great and blessed work of letting the light shine."

—Rev. W. B. Stoddard writes: "Times are very trying along the Schoolkill river. Foundries and factories are nearly all idle. Thieving is going on every night. Farmers are hurrying to husk their corn for fear it will be stolen from the field in the night. God surely has a controversy with this people. Will they ever learn wisdom?"

—Bro. C. Powers, our Tennessee colporteur, writes: "I have used up all my literature to good advantage. It has led me into many street and private discussions which I hope have been fruitful for good. I hope you will keep a supply of the Lodge Lamp. The last April number and 'Ronayne's exposition of the Blue Lodge oaths' are the numbers I most prize. Pray for me."

—Rev. J. R. Wylie, of Blanchard, Ia., writes: "The fact is that the lodgemen, although in a small minority, have the press of the country by the throat. They do this by standing by their principles and withdrawing all support from a paper that will not favor them, while the Christian people support everything, and the reform spirit is dying out. Our only hope is in the Lord."

—Bro. M. N. Butler, of Albany, Mo., writes: "I am always glad to afford the Cynosure and its staff all the co-operation I can. My heart and soul are in the great cause against the lodge, as it may well be. I have recently been on an overland trip through South Missouri, Arkansas, Indian Territory and Kansas. I spoke in twenty-one towns and distributed over 10,000 pages of anti-Catholic and anti-secret literature."

—A Wisconsin correspondent writes: "I am hated by all Masons in this town because I gave the Lodge Lamp to some of my friends to read. One man told me this evening that the best thing for me to do was to keep still and not read such papers, because every Mason in town was working against me. That shows that Satan is working. But the more I can see his work the stronger I get in faith, and the truth shall make me free."

—Mrs. Ida Meloy of Renovo, Pa., says: "There was a Mason buried at Lock Haven on Sabbath. The Masons here had a special train leave at 12 o'clock and return, leaving Lock Haven at five in the evening. There were fifty-seven on the special but not all Masons. It was a desecration of the Sabbath, yet some of those who went have much to say about Sunday picnics and Sunday trains. But what was this but a Sunday parade? It was not to save a life but to send the dead to the lodge above."

—Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York, have just received a single order from one firm for 100,000 copies of their celebrated "Standard Dictionary of the English Language," amounting at retail to nearly one and a quarter millions of dollars. This is the largest single sale of so large a work ever made in America. Previous to this one large transaction, over 100,000 copies had been issued, and the company is still receiving many large orders from its subscription agents throughout the world.

—Mrs. Lizzie McClelland of New Castle, Pa., writes: "In talking of secret orders it has been said many times, that no man who leaves a secret order has any right to expose it. He should just keep still on the subject if he wants to leave. But can a man do his whole duty if he does not expose every feature of it? I do not think he has altogether left the lodge until he does expose it. If he has fallen into the ditch he has a right to warn his brother of the danger, that he too may not fall in. What think you?"

—A new and neatly appearing craft from the Southwest hove in sight last week, launched in September at Kansas City, Mo., commanded by Rev. J. R. W. Stevenson and floating the Covenanter Ensign. It will be run in the interests of the Kansas Presbyterial Christian Endeavor Union of the Covenanter church, and on this its first trip is freighted with articles and good things from the several unions. We have known the captain and most of the crew for many years, and can assure all who may take passage that the new craft will never be used in the interests of the lodge or rum traffic.

—Wm. J. Bryan, Democratic candidate for President, said in his New Haven speech: "We sometimes out West are instructed by your insurance companies. I carry insurance in old-line companies and in what are known as the mutual and assessment companies. I carry insurance in fraternal organizations like the United Workmen and the Modern Woodmen (applause) as well as in the old-line companies, and I am grateful that my assessment companies are satisfied to take money and give me insurance, without attempting to tell me how I must vote. Your old-line companies have seen fit to insult the intelligence of the people by attempting to exercise a guardian care, while we are able to look after ourselves without their instructions. You have laboring men also in large numbers in this city."

GLASGOW'S LESSON.

IT TEACHES THE BENEFITS OF PUBLIC OWNERSHIP.

Improved Service at Reduced Rates and Profits Sufficient to Conduct the City Government Result From Municipal Ownership of Street Car Lines.

[Special Correspondence.]

All who are familiar with the modern requirements of a great city recognize the importance of the question of how to most easily raise the necessary revenues for the maintenance of its various departments. Much has been written upon this important subject, and many plans have been suggested, and that which is meeting with most approval is to secure a large portion of the revenue from monopolies of public service, either through some method of taxation or from collective ownership and operation of them.

Glasgow has adopted the latter, and so successfully that after Jan. 1, 1897, she will levy no more taxes, but will derive revenue sufficient from municipal owned services to pay all the expenses of her municipal government.

Among the most important of these is her street railway system. The report of last year of the operation of the Glasgow corporation tramways for the first 11 months they were under municipal management—from July 1, 1894, to June 1, 1895—showed this experiment to be a wonderful success. It gave the number of passengers carried during that period as 57,046,647; the gross receipts were $1,132,070; expenditures, $1,011,045, thus leaving a balance to the city credit of $111,020. And this result was achieved with a reduction in fares amounting in most cases to 33 per cent, brought about through the adoption of the 1 cent fare for half mile stages. Thirty-eight per cent of the tickets sold for the first 11 months were 1 cent tickets. These reductions of fares have tended to popularize the service and increase the receipts, and this gives to Glasgow the distinction of having cheaper street locomotion than any other city in the world.

In reviewing the situation the committee, in their report, said: "We are pleased to state that the financial success attending the first 11 months is beyond our most sanguine anticipations, and we do not know that any other tramway undertaking has hitherto been in the position to pay all interest, working and general expenses and maintenance and begin writing down their capital account within a year from starting operations."

If the committee felt and expressed a pardonable pride in the first 11 months' experiment, they are to be congratulated upon having achieved a far greater success for the second year, as proved by the report before us. It shows the gross receipts to have been $1,618,389, expenditures $1,215,373, leaving a balance of $403,014 of revenue over expenses. This balance has been used in meeting interest, sinking fund, depreciation, renewal and reserve funds.

The following table, taken from the report, will show the revenue and expenditures in a condensed form:

Amount of traffic receipts		$1,591,524
Amount of other receipts		26,863
Total		$1,618,387
Amount of working expenses		1,215,373
Leaving a balance of		$403,014
Which has been disposed of as under—
Interest on capital	$61,258
Sinking fund	51,023
Payment to common good in lieu of mileage rate	43,560
Depreciation of written off capital	86,198
Renewal fund	82,280
General reserve fund	78,695
		$403,014

The item of $43,560, under the head of "payment to common good in lieu of mileage rates," represents the annual amount paid to the city by the former lessees of the tramways, and is therefore dealt with as a fixed charge.

The total amount of the capital account June 1, 1895, was $2,631,808. During the year there has been expended for additional tramway lines, land, buildings, horses and equipment, the sum of $276,078, from which deduct $86,197, this amount being the depreciation written off capital, leaving the capital account June 1, 1896, $2,821,688.

The amount owing to the common good (debt to city on tramway account) on June 1, 1895, was $2,551,144, from which $51,023 is to be deducted, that being the sum carried to the sinking fund.

The traffic returns for the year aggregate $1,618,389; number of passengers carried, 86,462,594, showing the average fare paid by each person carried to be a fraction less than 1⅞ cents. The number of passengers shows an increase of about 38 per cent over the first period of 11 months.

In its report the committee states that its principal effort has been in endeavoring to cope with the ever increasing volume of traffic, and that from first to last the year has been one of steady progress. A subcommittee has been appointed for the purpose of considering the advisability of adopting some form of mechanical traction, and now, after a visit to the leading European cities, where different systems are in operation, the committee is engaged in making an exhaustive inquiry into the whole question of mechanical traction.

In summarizing the report the committee says: "The financial results for the year's operations have been most encouraging and prove beyond all question that the corporation tramways have the approval and support of the citizens. From the accounts published herewith it will be seen that the new business undertaken by the corporation is being conducted on sound commercial lines. All the plant has been fully maintained out of revenue, and after writing off capital an ample amount for depreciation considerable sums have been placed to general reserve fund and reserve fund for permanent way renewals. The item of preliminary expenses remains at the original figure, as it is not considered necessary to write off this sum, the sinking fund itself being sufficient to wipe it out. Over and above the ordinary obligations to the city in the payment of taxes, water, gas, etc., the tramways undertaking is proving a great benefit to the general finances of the corporation, and no pains will be spared to maintain the efficiency of the department now so successfully established."

The great increase in traffic is due to the reduction in fares, as this has been the invariable rule whenever a reduction has been made, not only in the case of street railways, but in every business that depends upon the general public for patronage.

The total length of the Glasgow tramways is a fraction over 35 miles of double track. Number of horses in use, 4,082, an increase of 638 over the number at the same date last year. The average price paid per horse was $135.63.

The employees are furnished with uniforms at the expense of the department. A friendly society for purposes of mutual aid has been instituted among the employees, the rules of which were approved by the tramway committee, and the department adds to the fund of the society a sum equal to one-half of that contributed by the members, and though membership therein is entirely optional the number on the roll is 1,447, and there is every indication that the society will prove a great success.

A unique and interesting feature of the committee's report is a list of various articles found in the cars each month. The result for the entire year is as follows: Umbrellas, 1,037; bags, 535; clothing, 301; purses, 530; baskets, 179; sticks, 36; spectacles, 59; books, 185; jewelry, 77; music, 15; keys, 157; parcels, 810; gloves, 304; watches, 8; boxes, 95; sundry articles, 394, making a total of 4,722 articles.

For clearness and attention to details the committee's report is a model one, and is well worth careful study by all who are interested in the problems pertaining to municipal government, and is a complete answer, in a sternly practical way, to the opponents of municipal ownership of natural monopolies. This Glasgow experiment, and the success attending it, must prove an important factor in the solution of these vexed questions relative to the raising and expending of municipal revenue.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Oct. 25. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

Topic.—My favorite Bible proverb and why. Prov. ii, 1-9. (A memory meeting suggested.)

A proverb is a wise saying, containing but few words, that expresses some practical truth. The Bible contains many proverbs, the most of which are found in the book of the Proverbs of Solomon. This book is a collection of the short sayings of Solomon, the wisest of ancient kings, and perhaps has intermingled with those of Solomon the common and familiar proverbs of his day—the brief sayings of other men who were both wise and pious.

This is an important book because it is a practical one. It reveals in striking epigrams the weaknesses and follies of human life. It deals wisely with important practical questions of human life and of man's duty to God and his duty to his fellow man. It emphasizes noble traits of human character—charity, modesty, virtue, industry, honesty—and holds up to condemnation the opposite of these. It gives us great and important truths in a nutshell in such a way that when once impressed upon the mind these truths are fixed upon it. They remain to be used whenever the occasion may arise.

The passage selected for our topical reference is one of the many in which wisdom and religion are connected and the relation existing between them expressed. There are three prominent ideas concerning religion and wisdom set forth in these verses:

1. Religion is the first step in true wisdom. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." If we receive God's word's and obey His commandments, then we will have started upon the path to true wisdom. Religion and wisdom are not antagonistic, as many suppose. The truly wise are not irreligious. The wise man is the fully developed man. Many one sided men, who have educated only the mind and have not considered the soul, are atheistic and irreligious, but the man who has paid due attention to his entire nature is religiously wise, and this is the truest wisdom.

2. Wisdom must be sought. It is wise to seek wisdom and understanding because a true search brings us to God; for it is God who gives wisdom, after all. Wisdom is not to be ignored. It should be humbly but earnestly sought after. It brings us nearer to God and helps us to understand more about God.

3. God gives wisdom. "The Lord giveth wisdom." God gives wisdom, but He gives it as He does all His blessings—to those who desire it and seek after it. "Seek and ye shall find."

Bible Readings.—Prov. i, 1-10; iii, 1-24; iv, 5-9; v, 1; vi, 16-19; viii, 1-11; ix, 1-10; x, 1-32; xi, 1-12; xv, 1-12; xvi, 24-33; xvii, 17; xx, 1; xxii, 1-12; xxvii, 1; xxviii, 1; xxxi, 30, 31.

The Spirit of Unrest.

Unrest is not of itself an unfavorable symptom. Rather the unrest of a bubbling spring than the calm of a stagnant pool. Rather a reaching out after better things than self satisfied content with half an inheritance. An unrealized ideal is the strongest incentive to earnest effort, and social, political and ecclesiastical upheavals are oftentimes but the birth throes which usher in a new life.—Presbyterian Journal.

Prayer For November.

Pray for the nation of which you are a citizen, whichever that nation may be, that it may be a God fearing, law abiding, Christian land. Pray for every wise effort of the young people to advance true Christian citizenship.

Silent Prayer.

No soul can preserve the bloom and delicacy of its existence without lonely musings and silent prayer, and the greatness of this necessity is in proportion to the greatness of the soul.—Canon Farrar.

Abundant Intercourse.

There is no cure for the love of evil in a Christian like abundant intercourse with the Lord Jesus.—Episcopal Recorder.

Endeavors.

Some Japanese delegates to the annual Christian Endeavor convention at Kioto traveled a distance of 500 miles.

A California family walked four miles over the mountains to attend a missionary meeting held by visiting Christian Endeavorers. This was the first gospel service that these people had attended for years. After the meeting some of the Endeavorers returned home with them and helped them organize a Sunday school and a Christian Endeavor society.

EMILY MORRELL WOOD, CALIFORNIA'S OLDEST WOMAN SUFFRAGIST.

Mrs. Emily Morrell Wood is the oldest woman suffragist in California. She hopes to live long enough to be able to cast her first vote. Just at this time the women are concentrating their efforts on California, and it is probable that universal suffrage will win in the Golden State. Mrs. Wood is a native of New York and is upward of 86 years old. She went to California in 1850 with her husband in the bark Palmetto, of which he was part owner. The climate suited him so nicely that he decided to make California his home. Mrs. Wood has lived in San Francisco ever since. She was a schoolmate of Elizabeth Cady Stanton. Her father and the father of Mrs. Stanton were judges on the same bench. Some years ago Mrs. Wood became afflicted with cataract and was totally blind for four years. A surgical operation was performed and her sight was restored completely. She is a great reader and is very fond of needlework. Her late husband was a partner of John Lorimer Graham, the famous New York barrister. She is one of the Anneke Jans heirs. Her great-grandfather was married to Rachel, who was the granddaughter of Anneke Jans. The old lady's memory of matters long since past is perfect, and her health is remarkably sound for one of her years.

Mrs. Wood says, "I hope to live long enough to cast my first vote."

The Latest In House Decorations.

"The modish style for winter," said a professional woman house decorator yesterday, "will be the silk paneled walls, at least where elegance is desired and expense not considered. The available material is a deep cream satin brocade called chrysoprase. In one room where chrysoprase covered the walls the draperies were made of the same, lined with delicate rose pink, harmonizing with one of the tints in the striped Marie Antoinette silk used for chair and sofa coverings. I have many orders for this silk hanging. It will be extremely popular.

"Burlap is to be used extravagantly for wall covering. This fabric in pale green makes a charming interior.

"I know a charming room, owned by a young woman artist, which has its walls in light green burlap with a frieze of pale green under a rope molding. The high, narrow mantel has a drapery of greenish fish net caught from an iron ring.

"Fish net, by the way, is a pet fabric in studios. It is about 40 inches wide and worth a dollar a yard in good quality. There is also waban netting, very similar to fish net, which comes in several art shades and is particularly effective over plain cloth of a contrasting hue."

"What is new in fancy work?" I asked.

"Have you seen any of the Beardsley style of fancy work? That is the latest fad," she answered.

"So far it has been used for cushion covers. Cloth figures of white on black or black on white are edged and appliqued on with a dash of red. Serpentine traceries are given in heavy wrought silk or cotton. Women with plenty of leisure have taken up as a fad the embroidering of satin or silk covers for their down quilts.

"A pretty one has the center of figured satin. Around this is a wide band of plain blue of the same shade as the ground of the figure. Then comes a band of the figured and again a band of the plain, the whole finished with a four inch ruffle of the figured.

"This scheme can be varied to suit individual tastes. On the plain borders are often worked running vines. This is not as laborious as it sounds because the work is done in outline stitch, which can be done very quickly.

"I don't care for these fads, however. In following them women give such sameness to homes. Interiors are so much alike because many people prefer to take their ideas from others. Each house should be individual and express the taste of the owner. In my work I aim to make each interior expressive of those who will live therein.

"Special fitments, as they are called, built in bookcases and cozy corners to fill certain spaces, are always effective. They add a 'homy' look to a room and give individuality. I delight in adding such things as adjustable window seats made box fashion. These, when space must be economized, serve to hold various odds and ends. High backed settees, which can be moved above the fireplace at pleasure, are less common."—Philadelphia Times.

Health and Beauty For Working Girls.

So much is being said and written in these days regarding physical culture as a means for the attainment of that beauty of face and form which every girl is so desirous of possessing that it has become a subject of vital interest to us all. I shall direct my talk to the girls who have only minutes to spend where the physical culturists recommend hours.

There is no reason in the world that you should not be just as beautiful, just as healthy, as your more fortunate sister who has the time and money at her command. It takes neither physical culture, massage nor Russian baths to bring back the rosy hue of cheek that the confinement of store and office is fast consuming—only a few minutes given daily and the strict adherence to a few rules.

Health is beauty, and to have good health you must look well to four things—diet, daily bathing, exercise and sensible dressing.

Eat nothing but plain, nourishing, easily digested food, with plenty of fruit, avoiding a too great abundance of cakes and pastry.

Dress sensibly. Light, dainty underwear, silk stockings and thin shoes are all very well for the drawing room, but you who must face all kinds of weather need warm flannels and thick soled boots. Let your office dress be of some warm, lightweight material, plainly made, well fitting, but loose enough to allow every muscle perfect freedom of motion. No woman can be graceful who insists upon wearing tight garments.

Bathe daily. Cleanliness is next to godliness, and on it depend the health and beauty of the person. I do not advocate the cold bath; where one person could stand it ten could not, and the benefit derived is not greater than from water comfortably warmed. A thorough bathing in hot water, in winter once a week, in summer twice, and the daily sponge bath taken just before retiring, with water comfortably warmed, is all that is necessary.

Exercise more. The sedentary position you occupy makes it a necessity if you would be healthy. If it is possible and you do not live too far, walk one way, either to or from your work.

If walking is not practicable, purchase a pair of two pound dumbbells, at the small outlay of 30 cents, and just before retiring at night, after the warm sponge bath, practice light gymnastics. Lower the window to admit the fresh air, grasp the dumbbells in each hand, throw the arms outward, downward, upward, meantime standing perfectly erect and breathing full and deep. Keep this up for 10 or 15 minutes; then note the quick circulation of the blood and the rested feeling. That few minutes' exercise is simply invaluable if practiced nightly.—Addie J. Farrar in Housewife.

DRINKING IN AUSTRIA.

Inebriates Are Treated as Lunatics and May Be Confined In Asylums.

A recent report gives some interesting facts about the alcoholic liquor traffic in Austria. There has been special legislation on drunkenness in Galicia, Lodomeria, Cracow and Bukovina, whereby persons creating a nuisance by being drunk in restaurants, public houses and public places are liable to a maximum imprisonment of one month. No legal proceedings can be taken for the recovery of debt for the supply of spirituous liquors on credit, and persons convicted of drunkenness three times within one year may be prohibited from visiting liquor shops in their neighborhood for one year, under a penalty of fine or imprisonment, says the British Medical Journal.

In other parts of Austria drunkards come under the law of curatel as spendthrifts, or, when mentally affected from alcoholic excess, confined in lunatic asylums. As to curatel a person may be judicially declared a spendthrift if he is proved to be running through his property senselessly, and thus exposing his family to future destitution by contracting loans under reckless or ruinous conditions. As to madmen and idiots only those who are judicially declared to be such after minute examination and consultation with medical officers appointed by the court are compulsorily dealt with. In both cases the judicial declaration must be published.

DRUNKENNESS A DISEASE.

The Craving For Strong Drink Requires Medical Treatment.

The Scottish departmental committee on habitual offenders, inebriates, etc., after examining 151 witnesses, including doctors, lawyers, judges and criminals, has come to the conclusion that the existing penal treatment of inebriates is an absolute failure as a reform measure and that the craving for drink is a disease which requires special medical and hygienic treatment. The committee proposes the establishment on a large scale of labor settlements for the compulsory treatment of habitual drunkards.

The Canadian royal commission condemns the sending of habitual drunkards to prison as "neither elevating nor deterring." It also proposes the establishment of asylums of some kind. Thus in France, England, Canada—all over the world—scientific men have come to the conclusion that inebriety is a mental disease and that its victims need special care and consideration. In other words, inebriety is a form of insanity. The old cry that a man has a right to get drunk if he wants to and that his neighbors have no right to interfere with him is just as absurd as to say that an insane man has a right to do himself bodily injury and no one ought to interfere with him.—New York Voice.

A Man to Be Trusted.

A teetotaler once called upon some government officials with the expectation of making large contracts for goods. They immediately invited him to drink. He declined. They insisted that he must drink. Then he refused. Thereupon one of the half drunken fools tried to force him, declaring that he would buy no goods of him if he did not drink. Then said the other, "You buy no goods of me" and walked away. The next morning, the fiery madness having been slept off, the officers made most unexpectedly large contracts because they had found, to their surprise, a man true as steel—a man that could be trusted. —Exchange.

The Guest's Rights.

It is claimed to be a breach of politeness not to partake of the punch on the sideboard of your host. It is a contempt of his providence, an insinuation against his good taste. Not so. A host always provides a scraper outside the door. But it is no breach of politeness, when I come clean footed from the carriage, that I do not stop and rasp for five minutes on that scraper. I do not need it or his punch bowl either. Guests have rights as well as hosts, and if hosts drink let them not tempt the guest whom hospitality binds them to protect.—Selected.

Notes About Drink.

London consumes yearly 45,000,000 gallons of malt liquor, 8,000,000 gallons of wine and 4,500,000 gallons of spirits.

The synod of the Dutch Reformed church in Johannesburg has entered into a crusade for total prohibition of the sale of intoxicants to natives. In one mine alone no less than 20 per cent of the natives are daily incapacitated for work through intoxication.

In none of the largely increasing number of parks and places of out of door resort for the London public is the sale of alcoholic beverages permitted.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON V, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, NOV. 1.

Text of the Lesson, I Kings v, 1-12—Memory Verses, 4, 5—Golden Text, Ps. cxxvii, 1—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

1. "And Hiram, king of Tyre, sent his servants unto Solomon, for he had heard that they had anointed him king in the room of his father, for Hiram was ever a lover of David." The association of Hiram and David in the building of David's house is seen in II Sam. v, 11. Isaiah speaks of Tyre in these words, "Tyre, the crowning city, whose nts are princes, whose traffickers honorable of the earth" (Isa. xxiii, 8), but it is in the same connection that we read of the Lord of Hosts staining the pride of all glory and bringing into contempt all the honorable of the earth. From Ps. xlv, 12, we conclude that in the coming kingdom Tyre shall be represented, and we think of such as the woman of Math. xv, 21, 28, and the "more tolerable" of Math. xi, 22 in connection therewith.

2, 3. "Thou knowest how that David, my father, could not build an house unto the name of the Lord his God for the wars which were about him on every side, until the Lord put them under the soles of his feet." How suggestive of Him who "must reign till He hath put all enemies under His feet, that God may be all in all" (I Cor. xv, 25, 28.) When the Lord told David that he could not build the temple, He said to him, "Behold a son shall be born to thee, who shall be a man of rest, and I will give him rest from all his enemies round about, for his name shall be Solomon—that is, peaceable—and I will give peace and quietness unto Israel in his days" (I Chron. xxii, 9, 10.) "He shall build an house for my name, and he shall be my son, and I will be his father, and I will establish the throne of his kingdom over Israel forever." Truly a greater than Solomon is here whose kingdom shall have no end. The time of war on earth is not yet over, for the greatest is yet to come, but Isa. ii, 1-4, shall be fulfilled, and when the Son of David shall judge among the nations "nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

4. "But now the Lord my God hath given me rest on every side, so that there is neither adversary nor evil occurrent." He does not mention the instrumentalities which God had used to bring this rest, but acknowledges it as the gift of God. Instruments are nothing except as God uses them, but God is all. He gives rest to all who are willing to cease from their own works and let Him control. When in the next age our Lord shall have cast the beast and false prophet into the lake of fire and the devil into the pit then it shall be true in large measure that there shall be neither adversary nor evil to contend with.

5. "And, behold, I purpose to build an house unto the name of the Lord my God, as the Lord spake unto David, my father." He was ready to be used of God to carry out his purposes. This is rest indeed, to believe that God has a purpose (Isa. xiv, 24) and let God work in us both to will and to do of His good pleasure (Phil. ii, 13), sure that "every purpose of the Lord shall be performed" (Jer. li, 29). He shall not fail nor be discouraged, but shall see of the travail of His soul and be satisfied (Isa. xlii, 4; liii, 11). Therefore we have only to dwell with Him for His work.

6. "Thou knowest that there is not among us any that can skill to hew timber like the Sidonians." He gives his order for cedar trees and promises to pay Hiram's servants and then adds these words of praise. Not all are called to the same work. The Lord gives "to every man his work," and the Spirit divides to every one His gifts "severally as He will" (Mark xiii, 34; I Cor. xii, 11). Talents are given to each according to his several ability (Math. xxv, 15). If we are fully yielded, God will fill us with wisdom of heart to work all manner of work that He may require of us.

7. "When Hiram heard the words of Solomon, he rejoiced greatly and said, Blessed be the Lord this day which hath given unto David a wise son over this great people." Every good gift is from above, and a man can receive nothing except it be given him from heaven (Jas. i, 17; John iii, 27).

8. "I will do all thy desire concerning timber of cedar and concerning timber of fir." Thus Hiram sent answer to Solomon. All such records in Scripture are suggestive of the great love of God, who, having not spared His own Son, will with Him also freely give us all things (Rom. viii, 32). "Delight thyself in the Lord, and He shall give thee the desires of thine heart" (Ps. xxxvii, 4).

9. "Thou shalt accomplish my desire in giving food for my household." The work in hand to be accomplished by this partnership was the building of the temple of the Lord. A temple is now being builded, of which our Lord Jesus is both foundation and top stone, and believers are living stones in the temple. If we seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, all that we need in the way of food and raiment will be made sure to us (Math. vi, 33).

10, 11. "So Hiram gave Solomon cedar trees and fir trees, according to all his desire. And Solomon gave Hiram twenty thousand measures of wheat for food to his household and twenty measures of pure oil; thus gave Solomon to Hiram year by year." Solomon was seven years building the temple and thirteen years building his own house (chapter vi, 38; vii, 1), so that this was a partnership covering many years. Our partnership is with the Lord Jesus Christ, and the work on hand is the completion of the church, which is the body of Christ. If we give our attention wholly to this work, our Master will see to the supply of all the need. To attend merely to our own church or denomination may not be the best way of completing the church, but we are surely safe in sending forth missionaries as fast as we can, or, rather, as fast as He can, to gather out of all nations the elect body of Christ, the building of Eph. ii, 19-22.

12. "And the Lord gave Solomon wisdom, as He promised him, and there was peace between Hiram and Solomon, and they two made a league together." We must distinguish between Hiram the king and Hiram, Tyrian, widow's son (I Kings vii, 13, 14), the skilled workman in brass who made all the bright brasswork for the house of the Lord (I Kings, vii, 45), and yet both Hirams were identified with King Solomon in the work. To be identified with Israel in the age to come will surely be a great thing, but it is much greater to be in this age fully identified with the King of Israel, the Son of God (John i, 49, 50). Of Him it is written, "Behold the man whose name is the branch, and He shall grow up out of His place, and He shall build the temple of the Lord.

FRUIT REPORT FOR OCTOBER.

Apples Are So Abundant That the Markets Are Glutted.

Washington, Oct. 16.—The October fruit report of the agricultural department shows a heavy apple crop and an especially fine quality in the northern tier of states. Prices are extremely low. This is particularly the case in Michigan, where the markets are glutted. The disastrous storm of the last week in September did much damage to fruit along the Atlantic coast. The loss was particularly heavy in parts of Pennslyvania and New York. Some complaint of the dropping of fruit comes from the middle west.

The October returns on hops show an increase in New York and Wisconsin and a heavy decrease in the Pacific states. There is a languishing condition of the hop-growing industry, particularly in the latter region. Many yards throughout the country have been neglected, and a part of the crop will not be harvested. The continued low price is the reason for this neglect.

The report says that in view of the great increase in the production of malted liquors this condition of things ought not exist, and adds: "It is, however, but another instance of the injury to the farming industry brought about through the substitution of chemical for the more healthful agricultural agent in manufacture, which seems the inevitable trend of invention."

Fifteen Hundred on Strike.

Columbus, O., Oct. 15.—About 1,500 miners quit work at Corning, refusing to accept a reduction from 61 to 45 cents.

Respect the Stomach.

Few people do have proper respect for the stomach. If a thing "tastes good" and is not so hot or so cold as to be painful to the mouth or throat, it is swallowed by too many people regardless of consequences.

Do not give the stomach food that will irritate it or retard it in the performance of its natural functions, or it will retaliate in a way that is decidedly unpleasant. A headache, a "lump" or "heavy feeling" in the stomach, and irritations of the skin, are mostly symptoms of disordered digestion resulting from unwholesome food.

Alum baking powders are responsible for the larger part of this unwholesome food, for it is a fact well recognized by physicians that alum renders food indigestible and unwholesome.

The danger to health from this cause is so imminent that it behooves every one to adopt precautionary measures to keep alum baking powders, which are now so numerous, from the kitchen stores. It will be found that those powders sold at a lower price than Royal are almost invariably made from alum, and therefore of inferior quality and dangerous to health.

The safer way is to look for the well-known red and yellow label of the Royal Baking Powder. That is certain to cover a powder free from alum. The Royal is made of cream of tartar, a pure wholesome fruit acid derived from grapes. It is renowned for adding anti-dyspeptic qualities to the food, as well as for making finer and better food.

SHARP MOVE BY CUBANS.

Landing of a Filibustering Expedition Between Two Spanish Forts.

New York, Oct. 14.—A dispatch to The Herald from Gibara, Cuba, says: The Herald's correspondent in Baracoa reports the landing of a new filibustering expedition in Marivi, in eastern Cuba. I understand that a party brought 1,000 rifles and a proportionate quantity of munition. The men disembarked from a Hytian schooner between two Spanish forts, neither of which were a mile and a half away. The war material was all transported into the interior before any alarm was raised.

Such is the state of suffering among the classes in Baracoa that the local Spanish commandant is now permitting women and children to go through the government lines to beg food in the rebel camps. More than 300 passes for this purpose are being issued daily. The women are subjected to rigid search as they go outside the walls of the town, to prevent any medicines being taken to the insurgents, and also upon their return for correspondence.

DISPLACED BY MACHINERY.

Sad Decline of a Calling Through the Use of Labor Saving Devices.

Among the illustrations of the confused economic conditions of the present the decline, or rather the disintegration, of the printer's trade is among the most prominent. In the days of Franklin to be a printer was almost to be a professional man, and even up to ten years ago the printer's trade retained much of its old prestige. A man could then obtain a position with ease, and he generally received at least $18 a week for his labor. To be an apprentice in a printing office was to have made a start in life in the direction of a most excellent trade. But these promising conditions have all in the last ten years completely changed. Indeed, the printing trade is not the only one of which this may be said, but this particular trade undoubtedly presents the most striking contrast of them all.

The striking character of this contrast between the old and new conditions can be made to appear in a few brief statements. In 1886 there were in Chicago about 250 printing houses and about 310 publishing houses, making in all a total of about 560 houses, employing all the way from 5 to 50 men, most of them drawing $18 a week. In 1896 the number of printing and publishing houses is, on a rough average, about three times as great as in 1886. Place beside these statements the fact that the number of men employed has not increased proportionally by one-half, and also the further fact that $18 a week is now the exception rather than the rule, that wages have been reduced all the way from one-fourth to one-half their former amount, and couple with these facts the further statement that the force of printers employed is being every day reduced, and the state of affairs cannot prove other than remarkable.

The question might reasonably be asked, "Why this state of affairs?" Undoubtedly one of the reasons is the stringency of the money market and of trade in general. Probably two-thirds of these houses are doing only about one-half of the usual volume of business, but this is nothing new, as the same conditions affect nearly all the various lines of trade, nor would this of itself account for the wide discrepancy between the increase of employer and employed. The true reason lies in the fact that labor saving devices are doing away with the demand for intelligent and expert printers that was once so noticeable in the printer's trade. But even labor saving devices might not have such a deteriorating effect on the trade if it were not for the fact that among the publishing houses at least there has appeared a device that renders the employment of men unnecessary, and that is the typesetting machine. Thousands have been thrown out of employment by this single device. Those displaced seek in turn employment in that part of the trade fostered by mercantile activities, and by the overplus in that department wages are reduced and the otherwise active demand for these particular workmen is paralyzed.

Thus in the printer's line skilled men have been thrown out of employment who ten years ago had every prospect of the lucrative enjoyment of their trade, and who, through no fault of their own, are left without a means of livelihood. They are not paupers, and they count among their numbers some of the best intelligence the country possesses. They present a sad picture of impotent ability, impotent because the source that fed their strength has been taken from them. The question that comes with it all is, "What does society owe them in the intelligent solution of the problem?"—Chicago Tribune.

Agricultural Co-operation.

At the late co-operative congress held in London a good deal was said about the advantages of extending the co-operative method to the agricultural industry. Lord Winchilsea, an active and capable leader of the co-operative movement, has decided to institute a practical experiment in agricultural co-operation. He has organized a British Produce Supply association, and a start is to be made in a district within a 12 mile radius from Sleaford, in Lincolnshire. Collectors are to travel daily, gather small lots of produce from the farmers and dispatch them from a central depot to London in bulk. There will be a slaughter house for those who have fat cattle to sell, and separators at fixed stations along the line of communication. Cream will be extracted and taken to a butter factory at Sleaford. The scheme is approved by the English press as practical and highly advantageous. It is characterized as the application of the modern factory system to the agricultural industry. Co-operation is urged as the remedy for the present depression, and there is no doubt that in England it would prove an important means of relief.

No Labor Aristocracy.

The Trainmen's Journal says: There can be no labor aristocracy. And while there may be some men who think they are better than their fellows, they are only deluding themselves with a supposition founded on their silly conceit. The majority of men have outgrown the idea that wages make the man and recognize that principle, not money, makes him. When men think seriously of their obligations to one another, there will be no quibbling over trivial questions of ways and means, but all will get together and work together.

Organization and Wages.

"Organization," says the Indianapolis Sentinel, "is the chief factor in securing high wages. There is not a member of a trades union who would be willing to dissolve the union and trust to the effects of tariff or money systems or anything else to maintain wages."

A Union Doctor.

An economy greatly practiced in the old world, but not in this country, is the union for the employment of a common physician. Suppose 100 families pay in advance $2.50 a quarter, making $1,000 a year, with which they employ a bright, intelligent, up to date youn, physician. This provides for all sickness except confinement. The salary is more than is earned by the average young physician. He has no bad debts; he is not troubled with collecting his bills. It is, of course, to his interest to prevent sickness by looking after the sanitary condition of every house. The physician has already received his pay in advance, no matter how poor the family, and the family does not find itself burdened with an enormous bill for the doctor.

Address W. I. PHILLIPS,
221 West Madison Street, Chicago, Ill.

RICHARD RUSH: "Hooker, personifying law, eloquently exclaims, 'her seat is the bosom of God, her voice the harmony of the world; everything on earth does her homage, the highest as not beyond her control, the least as claiming her protection.' Masonry has overset this primordial system. She has dethroned this image of God upon earth. To reinstate it over so insolent a victor, we must have a political organization. There is no other way of assaulting, there is no other hope of vanquishing, there need be no other dream of humbling such a foe. It fights with desperation."

JOHN MARSHALL: "I never did utter the words ascribed to me, nor any other words importing the sentiment they convey. I never did say, 'Freemasonry is a jewel of the utmost value, that the pure in heart and life can only appreciate it fully, and that in a free government it must, it will be sustained and protected.' The fact mentioned in the resolution, that I have been in a lodge but once, so far as I can recollect, for nearly forty years, is evidence that I have no disposition to volunteer in this controversy, as the zealous partisan which this language would indicate."—Letter to Hon. John Bailey, Oct. 18, 1833.

Hon. Edward Blake, Leader in Canadian Parliament, in a Debate, March, 1884: "I am not in favor of State recognition of any secret societies. I have never joined one, though many of my best friends are members of secret societies. But I believe the tendency of secrecy itself to be injurious. I believe that it brings with it the possibility of evil; I believe that it involves a certain amount of sacrifice of individuality and independence, and gives very great facilities for the misleading of members by designing leaders—very great and mischievous facilities for that purpose." "I believe that a great deal of the trouble, social and political, that has occurred in those countries [Europe and America] is due to secret societies."

Gen. Henry Sewell, a Companion of Washington: "I was initiated an Entered Apprentice to the Masonic rites in October, 1777, at Albany, soon after the capture of Burgoyne, being then an officer in the American army..... I was led by the influence of this 'Perfect Rule of faith and practice,' during the year 1784, to view speculative Masonry in a shape still more deformed. Its character appeared to be selfishness, because restricted to its own members; its religion, deism, because entirely devoid of the Gospel. Its history appeared fabulous; its claims to antiquity, unsustainable; its titles, fulsome; its rites, barbarous and absurd; its oaths, extra-judicial, unlawfully imposed and blindly taken; and the penal sanctions annexed, horrid and impious."

Hon. William H. Seward, Speech in the Senate: "Secret societies, sir? Before I would place my hand between the hands of other men, in a secret lodge, order, class or council, and bending on my knee before them, enter into combination with them for any object, personal or political, good or bad, I would pray to God that that hand and that knee might be paralyzed, and that I might become an object of pity and even the mockery of my fellow men. Swear, sir! I, a man, an American citizen, a Christian, swear to submit myself to the guidance and direction of other men, surrendering my own judgment to their judgments, and my own conscience to their keeping! No. No, sir. I know quite well the fallibility of my own judgment, and my liability to fall into error and temptation. But my life has been spent in breaking the bonds of the slavery of men. I, therefore, know too well the danger of confiding power to irresponsible hands, to make myself a willing slave."

GEORGE WASHINGTON, in Farewell Address: "The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish Government, pre-supposes the duty of every individual to obey the established Government. All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive to this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency. They serve to organize faction, to give it an artificial and extraordinary force, to put in the place of the delegated will of the nation, the will of a party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community..... However combinations and associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to become potent engines, by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men, will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of Government; destroying, afterwards, the very engines which had lifted them to unjust dominion."

HELD UP A TOWN.

Bandits Do a "Star" Job in the Looting Line.

RAID ON AN OKLAHOMA HAMLET.

Guthrie, O. T., Oct. 19.—At 9 o'clock Saturday night a band of six unknown desperadoes rode into Carney, twenty miles east of here, and held up the whole town, robbing twelve stores and the postoffice, it is reported.

The news was received here by telephone, and only meager particulars were sent.

Further Particulars of the Crime.

Further particulars were received here yesterday of the raid. About 9 o'clock at night six masked and heavily armed outlaws, supposed to have been headed by the notorious "Dynamite Dick," one of the associates of the Daltons and Bill Doolan, rode into the place and literally "held up" the town. Carney is a town of about 300 people. The robbers entered the village from the north with a great show of firearms. Two of the outlaws entered the general store of B. Fous and compelled him and his son to open the safe. After securing about $800 from them they bound both the father and son, threw them upon horses and carried them about two miles out of town, where they tied them to a tree.

Raids on Postoffice and Hotel.

In the meantime the rest of the gang had entered the postoffice, but failing to secure anything of value they raided the hotel, compelling the proprietor and several traveling men who were stopping there to turn over their money, watches and jewelry. Several smaller stores were also raided. Before entering Carney the outlaws had taken the precaution to cut the telephone wires leading to Chandler, so that there might be no chance of failure. During the raid the bandits kept up a fusillade of bullets in all directions, terrorizing the inhabitants so that very little effort was made to resist the raiders. It was some time after the bandits had left before order could be restored and an organized pursuit begun.

Gang Heard From, but Still at Large.

Finally, after considerable delay, about 100 armed men began the chase. The pursuers were divided into three bands and went in different directions. At dark last night the bandits had not been overtaken. Early yesterday morning a band of four men, believed to have been members of the gang that raided Carney, appeared at Mulhall, held up a livery stable keeper and compelled him to supply them with a relay of fresh horses. News was also received at the United States marshal's office that two men, supposed to have been members of the gang, had stopped at a farm house about fifteen miles northeast of here and demanded food. Several Unites States deputy marshals headed by Deputy Colcord, are in pursuit.

Fifteen hundred delegates from all parts of the United States and Canada are present. With the general convention also meets the national gatherings of the board of church extension, board of negro education and evangelization, board of ministerial relief and board of education.

The first session was addressed by Mrs. O. W. Burgess, of Indianapolis, national president. Address of welcome, Mrs. Caroline M. Kane, Springfield; response, Miss Louisa White, Indianapolis; paper, Mrs. A. M. Atkinson, Wabash, Ind. Rev. C. C. Smith, of Akron, O., spoke on "Our Missions in Jamaica." Papers were read by Mrs. Clara E. Babcock, Thompson, Ills.; Mrs. W. S. Keene, Winchester, Ky.; Mrs. Marie Jameson, Indiana; Mrs. Louise Kelly, Kansas, and Miss Mattie Pounds, Indiana.

BIG STEAMER BURNS ON THE LAKE.

Her Crew Taken Off by Life Savers Just in the Nick of Time.

Sturgeon Bay, Wis., Oct. 19.—The big steamer Australasia, owned by James Corrigan, of this city, was burned Saturday night on Lake Michigan, and now lies at the bottom of Whitefish bay. The steamer, which was valued at $60,000, and was loaded with a cargo of 2,000 tons of coal for Milwaukee, caught fire about 11 o'clock at night. The Australasia was then in sight of land. Full steam was put on and an effort made to beach the vessel, the crew in the meantime making a terrific fight against the flames. At last shoal water was reached just as the life-saving crew arrived at the vessel and rescued the officers and men. The Australasia soon afterward sank. The vessel and cargo are counted a total loss.

National Live Stock Exchange.

Fort Worth, Tex., Oct. 14.—The National Live Stock Exchange began its seventh annual session here yesterday. President Thompson delivered an address. The executive committee presented a lengthy report dealing, as President Thompson's address did, largely with the question relating to foreign governments discriminating against the American live stock product, and the exportation of Canadian cattle through United States ports. Quarantine lines as construed by Secretary Morton were also discussed, and as a result of a stringent apeal to confor relief will be proposed.

WILL TRY FOR NINE HOURS.

Typographical Union's Proposition—Political Resolution Rescinded.

Colorado Springs, Oct. 16.—The International Typographical Union, after a warm discussion, voted to strike from the minutes the following resolution:

"Resolved, By the International Typographical Union, in convention assembled on the summit of Pike's Peak, on this 14th day of October, 1896, that we believe in the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, and the adoption of laws restoring silver to its rightful place, as the same existed prior to 1873, and this without voting for the consent of any othe nation."

The supporters of Bryan and free silver were largely in the majority, but they thought the adoption of such a resolution would injure the union.

The election of president, vice president and secretary and treasurer were all hotly contested. The following officers were chosen for the ensuing term: President, W. P. Prescott, of Toronto, Ont., re-elected; secretary-treasurer, John M. Bramwood, of Denver; delegates to he American Federation of Labor, which meets in Cincinnati Dec. 8, were chosen. District organizers were elected to look after the interests of the International Typographical union in the sixteen districts into which the United States and Canada are divided.

Trustees for the Childs-Drexel home for infirm printers, situated in this city, were elected as follows: L. C. Shepherd, of Grand Rapids, Mich.; James J. Daly, of Philadelphia; Thomas McCaffery, of Colorado Springs, and J. W. White, of Kansas City. The most important item of business transacted by the convention at the session was the passing of the nine-hour labor law. An effort to pass an eight-hour law was defeated. The nine-hour law has now to be voted by every typographical union in the country before its final adoption. The members of the union unanimously voted $2,500 to prosecute the boycott which Union No. 80, of Kansas City, has declared against a publishing firm of that city. Syracuse was chosen as the place of meeting in 1898.

BAIL FIXED AT $150,000.

Prosecution in the Castles Case Says the Husband Is Also Guilty.

London, Oct. 14.—Mr. and Mrs. Castle were arraigned in the Marlborough street police court yesterday on the charge of stealing goods from London shops, and at the conclusion of the hearing were held in bail in the sum of £30,000 for both. The bail was provided and the accused are now out of jail. The prosecution in stating the case said that part of the stolen property was found among the husband's clothes. He mentioned this, he said, in anticipation of the plea that the female prisoner alone was guilty, but from the circumstances brought out in evidence and the fact that the prisoners occupied one room at the hotel it appeared to him that the man must have known what was going on.

Counsel for the Castles said to a representative of the Associated Press that Mrs. Castle was completely prostrated. When asked how he accounted for the fact that Mr. Castle did not know his wife had stolen goods in her possession, counsel said that many of the articles in the police inventory were legitimate purchases and it will be proved that Castle was not aware that the others were in her possession.

SUIT OVER A DEAD MAN'S MONEY.

Has Already Cost $40,000 and Nearly 500 Witnesses Have Been Summoned.

Maquoketa, Ia., Oct. 15.—The Mott-Watson case now on trial before Judge C. M. Waterman will forever serve as a criterion for similar for legal battles. The expense of the suit will aggregate $40,000, exclusive of fees. Already nearly 500 witnesses have been summoned and a year's time spent gathering evidence. Mott Watson was a batchelor who died a year ago worth $500,000, and it was generally supposed he had no issue; but on Sept. 3 an alleged illigimate son, George D. Niles, of San Antonio, Tex., and a member of the regular army, appeared to make claim to the entire estate. This is being opposed by the thirty heirs, who claim rights. It is alleged that on the night of his sudden death certain heirs stole into the presence of the dead and robbed the safe of about $15,000 and destroyed papers providing for the illegitimate boy. The prosecution has already spent $16,0000 and employed in the case are some fifteen brilliant legal lights. No case in the history of Iowa has attracted such widespread attention and the decision will be anxiously awaited.

Six Children Burned to Death.

New Whatcom, Wash., Oct. 16.—The house of J. S. Miller, a farmer living four miles north of Linden, this county, was destroyed by fire and six children were burned to death. Another child and a man named Frank Boise were seriously burned. Miller and his wife were away from home, having gone to New Whatcom to participate in a Populist parade, leaving their children at home in care of Boise, who was visiting them. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Tynan's Relea e Is Unconditional.

Boulogne-Sur-Mer, Oct. 16.—Tynan's release is unconditional, and he can remain in France if he wishes. The news of his release was communicated to him by the secretary of the prefecture and the commissary. He was delighted and thanked his jailers for their kindness during his detention.

Move in the Long Pension Case.

Washington, Oct. 14.—In the superior court yesterday the solicitor general moved to dismiss the case of Judge Long, of Michigan, vs. William Lochren, late commissioner of pension, on the ground that the cause has abated by reason of Lochren's resignation and retirement from office. This was the test case which has been pending before various courts here several years in which Judge Long sought to have his $50 pension restored to a $7 rating.

It is not necessary to be a fool in order to know something about folly, and it is not necessary to be a Mason in order to obtain a thorough knowledge of Masonry.

The Cynosure ought to have five hundred new subscribers this fall. Who will send us one or more? In order to place the paper before new readers, will each one send us on a postal card addresses of persons who would be interested in the truth we advocate? We will mail them sample copies.

Keeping secrets is not always vicious. It is often virtuous. But there are times when keeping vicious secrets is itself a vice. Judgment must be used and conscience must be obeyed. It is one of the vices of Masonry that it allows no place for private judgment and gives no recognition to conscience.

A special dispatch from Wooster, Ohio, dated Oct. 17, says: "Now that the vexatious question of athletics is settled, as far as it is the policy of the Presbyterian Synod, the trustees and faculty of Wooster university to abolish intercollegiate athletics, it is believied that the question of fraternities will next be taken up. At least such a hint was given by President Scovel, in his address to the synod. He stated that there were 113 students attending, who were either preparing for the ministry, or whose parents are ministers, and who are now receiving free tuition. He said further: 'We have not reached the ideal Christian college and I do not believe it is possible where there are fraternities.'"

REV. JOHN BROWN.

We are glad this time to introduce to our readers one who has frequently written for these pages. For many years we have read his articles in an Eastern magazine and wished to know more of the man who wielded such a pungent pen. We find he is now a man of eighty-four, and yet no manuscript comes to our office more plainly written and better punctuated than his. He was born in Scotland in Kincardineshire, and at the age of sixteen confessed his faith in Christ, and united with the Church of Scotland, but two years afterward he joined the Baptists and has remained a devoted member of that church all his life, though he always cherished a warm feeling for the Scotish Covenanters. He graduated at the university of Aberdeen, Scotland, and was pastor of the Baptist church in Coleraine, Ireland, five years and at Conlig, Down Co., fifteen years.

Rev. John Brown left Ireland about 1857, and after a brief sojourn in England came to Cascade, Iowa, where he was pastor for five years. Afterward he preached ten or twelve years at Volga City, Iowa, while he resided at Strawberry Point. He has now retired from the regular pastorate and resides with his daughter at Clear Lake, Ia., where he writes that he is as comfortable as he can be made in this world. He is a devoted friend of the anti-secret cause, and takes much comfort in reading the Cynosure. In a Baptist magazine there is this testimonial of him: "From the avowal of his principles he never shrunk even in the pulpits of those who differed from him, yet was there so much of the meekness and gentleness of Christ about those avowals, that bitter controversy never resulted from them."

Faith is obtained not so much by prayer as "by hearing," and hearing by the Word of God. The better we know God and the holiness of his character, and the conditions of his promises, and his faithfulness to perform them, the stronger will be our faith. A faith that looks for a revival of religion in a church overshadowed by the lodge and saloon, is like a faith that locks for a large crop of corn in a field overshadowed by great forest trees. First cut down the trees and then look for the crop.

One hundred thousand Armenians have been murdered by the Turks. Every year, in these United States, an equal number are murdered by the licensed saloons. There are in this country 15,137,889 qualified voters, which are very evenly divided between the two great parties. Of the above number of voters, 3,500,000 are counted as Protestant communicants, and 2,000,000 as Catholic voters. If next week Tuesday only 1,000,000 of the professed followers of Jesus could be counted on to follow him by voting against the wholesale murder of our people as now permitted by license law, it would be the beginning of the end of the business in this country, for one of the great parties would either take up the reform or would split upon this rock and a new party be formed. God hasten the day.

The great Anti-masonic Congress at Trent, Southern Tyrol, began Sept. 26, ult. The members of this congress are divided into three classes —honorary, active and those who sympathize with the movement. The Prince Bishop of Trent presides over the congress. The object in calling the congress is set forth as being "to make known to all the unmeasurableness of the moral and material evil the church and society have suffered through Freemasonry, and to seek an antidote." The work is divided into four sections. The first two of these include explanations of the alleged "teachings, influences, purposes, prayers," etc., included according to the leaders of the movement, in the ritual of Freemasonry generally. The third and fourth sections of the congressional work comprise consideration of the means it is advisable to take to check the "evil influences of Freemasonry, the contribution of money for the celebration of daily masses for the further repentance of Freemasons, raising funds for the defense and support of repentant Freemasons, and, finally, to raise funds for the granting of rewards to active workers in the cause of Anti-Freemasonry. The delegates from Canada include Mgr. Begin, Archbishop of Greane and Administrator of the Diocese of Quebec; two Canadian Bishops; Chief Justice Routhier and M. Tardivet, manager of La Verite, of Quebec. The French delegates include the Abbot of Bessore, Father Octove, Count de Mun Viscount Hugnes, M. Leo Harmel and other persons of distinction. From Germany there are present a number of members of the Center party of the German Reichstag, and Prince Von Lowenstein, who was later in the day elected president.

SHOULD MORGAN'S MURDER BE FORGOT?

[From an Almanac published in 1831.]

Should Morgan's murder be forgot,
Or Mason's grip and sign;
Should Morgan's murder be forgot,
Or Mason's dark design?

Chorus.—The Mason's dark design we know,
The bloody grip and sign;
We'll lend a hand to blot from earth
The Mason's bloody shrine.

If aught on earth can men engage,
If aught can make us free,
'Tis one successful war to wage
Against Freemasonry —Cho.

Our cause is good, our cause is just,
And truth shall bear us on,
Till Masonry shall bite the dust,
And equal rights be won.—Cho.

Then down will sink, with horrid fall,
That midnight, secret clan,
Which plot, within their gloomy hall,
Against the rights of man.—Cho.

Then here's a hand, my trusty friends,
And give a grip of thine;
We'll pull together at one end,
At Masonry, divine.—Cho.

A REVIEW OF FREEMASONRY.

A PART OF AN ADDRESS BEFORE THE OREGON STATE CONVENTION AT PORTLAND, AUG. 27, BY SECRETARY P. B. WILLIAMS.

We now advance to the consideration of the question: Should Christians unite themselves to any such society? And this, after all, is the main question to be settled; for if men of the world choose to band themselves together in secret societies, they have a political right to do so, and to practice all these "ancient mysteries," "rites" and "ceremonies" peculiar to such organizations; but whether Christians, the real followers of our Lord, have any moral or religious right to do so, is a very important question.

1. Our first reason why they should not, is founded on the fact that one religion is enough. "You cannot serve God and mammon," said Christ. "No man can serve two masters." And if men cannot serve God and mammon, neither can they profess and practice two religions at the same time, because there are no two religions whose obligations are the same. Consequently they cannot practice both; but one or the other must be neglected. And if the moral and religious obligations of Freemasonry are precisely the same as those of Christianity, what can Christians gain by belonging to both? And if, on the other hand, their moral and religious obligations differ, how can they consistently, with their obligations to Christ and his church, identify themselves with the "fraternity?" We hold that they cannot, and hence oppose the union as unnatural, immoral, corrupting and unscriptural.

At this point we shall be met with the declaration that hundreds of apparently the best of men have and do belong to the "order," and that even many good Christians are Masons, and strongly advocate the institution. To all of which we reply, that it may be true that many men, who are called high-minded and moral, are members of the "fraternity," but such men are not more numerous in than out of it. And those Christians who have and do belong to the "order" give no evidence of superior morality or Christian zeal and purity. And if, on uniting with the "order," they have found anything of doubtful propriety, or inconsistent with the requirements of Christianity, they dare not make any disclosure. Indeed, they have assumed obligations which forever forbid it. "The dead tell no tales;" neither do those who "pass out of the world" into the profound and "ancient mysteries" of Masonry.

But Masons have published enough to the world for us to judge of its obligations, its morals, and its religion, and if good men have unwittingly committed themselves to it, and find no retreat possible, it becomes the more important to have an examination, and an expose of the system. Christianity is enough for any one man! It is enough to employ his head, his heart, his hands, and all his means. And the Christian who discharges fully all his obligations in this regard, has nothing left for Masonry. "The mysteries of the kingdom of heaven" will be enough for him without going aside to the Dionysia of Bacchus, the Aphodisia of Venus, the Lupercalia of Pan, the Thesmpohosia of Ceres, and other rites, ceremonies and mysteries of the ancient Egyptians, Greeks and Romans.

Our second objection is based upon statements made by Masons themselves. They profess to have "valuable secrets," which they have "promised to conceal and never reveal, and which would subject them to the contempt and detestation of all good Masons," and what else is omitted by .....on page 31, Cross's Masonic Chart, must be what Capt. Wm. Morgan and others have received for revealing their inwardness.

The members "come under a solemn engagement never to divulge the mysterious ceremonies of the order, nor communicate to the uninitiated those important precepts with which they may be entrusted, and those proceedings and plans in which the fraternity may be engaged." They have light, but it shines only in the darkness and secrecy of the lodge. They have "valuable secrets," but, benevolent souls, they must not be "divulged." They have "important precepts," but refuse to impart them to the world.

Now these "valuable secrets" and "important precepts" are either found in the Bible, or they are not. If they are there, why attempt to make the world believe they are the exclusive property of Masons? And if they are not in the Bible, we are bold to say that they are neither "valuable" nor "important," except for purely selfish purposes, which are unworthy of the followers of Christ. If the Christian has any "secret" or "important precept" which would be "valuable" to mankind, he would and should be swift to make it known.

The prompting of a benevolent heart alone would induce him to do this, to say nothing of the divine precept, which says, "Let your light so shine before men that they, beholding your good works, may glorify your Father which is in heaven." Now, Masons either have "valuable secrets" and "important precepts," or they have not. If they have not, they are trying to deceive the people by inducing them to believe they have. And if they are really in possession of these "valuable secrets" and "important precepts," and refuse to make them known for the benefit of an erring world, then they are positively violating that divine command to which we already referred; and, in either case, they are guilty before God and man for withholding from men those "valuable secrets" and "important precepts" which they profess to hold.

How, then, can Christians identify themselves with the "order" and be sinless? "You are the light of the world. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid; neither do men light a candle and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick, and it giveth light to all that are in the house." These are "valuable" and "importaht precepts" which no Christian can ignore and be innocent. These precepts are enjoined by the "one Lawgiver, who has power to save and to destroy."

Who fathers those "valuable secrets" and "important precepts" of Masonry? Are they from heaven or of men? If from heaven, when and where and by whom were they revealed? And if from men, "in vain do you worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." "To the law and the testimony; if they speak not according to these, it is because there is no light in them." "He that doeth truth cometh to the light that his deeds may be manifest that they are wrought in God."

If Masons have light, why do they not let it shine out and illuminate the world? Why do they put it under a bushel? Why do they envelop it in "mysteries," "rites," and ceremonies" of "no recent date?" Do they "love darkness rather than light" because their "ancient mysteries" are heathenish, and their "rites" and "ceremonies" similar to those used by the worshipers of Ceres and Bacchus? They will not tell, and no one else can; so Masons say. "Is a candle brought to be put under a bushel, or under a bed (a lodge) and not to be set on a candlestick? For there is nothing hid which shall not be manifested; neither was anything kept secret but that it should come abroad."

And yet when professing Christians unite with the "order," and come into the possession of those "valuable precepts," they are bound by the most solemn obligations never to divulge them. Are such obligations compatible with our obligations as Christians? We affirm they are not; except upon the hypothesis that those pretended "valuable secrets" and "important precepts" are worthless. And of the truth of this we are fully persuaded so far as morality and Christianity are concerned.

CHURCHES AND SALOONS.

BY REV. HENRY L. GILLESPIE.

Should a church or pastor ask or accept money from saloon-keepers or distillers for the purpose of sustaining the Gospel of Jesus?

No; because the saloon-keeper's and distiller's business is wicked, even murderous. They are often more guilty than one whose hand is reddened with his brother's blood. Their crime is one which every minister is bound by most sacred obligations to do all that he can to destroy.

Every intelligent person in Christendom knows that the saloon-keeper breaks the highest moral law of the universe every day of his life; that every penny that he takes from his victims is blood money, and that he is frequently a criminal before the civil laws of his own land. A church which has failed to teach liquor dealers that it is a witness of God against their nefarious traffic (not against them), is not faithful to its stewardship.

Saloon-keepers do not give money to build a church which would destroy their business, but either believing that the church winks at their crimes, or as a seductive bribe to silence its ministry. Their money never builds the kingdom. Let us not be deceived. Let other churches less enlightened build as they will, but let us not only keep the faith once delivered to the saints, but also keep ourselves unspotted from the world.

THE SEVEN UNITIES OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH.

BY REV. JOHN BROWN, A. M.

"There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all."—Eph. 4: 4-6.

1. "There is one body," i. e., one mystical body, of which Christ is the head, and all true believers are members. "For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office; so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another." Rom. 12: 4, 5. The body of Christ is the church which he loved and for which he gave himself—"the general assembly and church of the first born"—the holy Catholic church, containing the whole body of the redeemed. Some of its members are in heaven, and some on earth; but they are all one in Christ. Some are Jews and some are Gentiles; but Christ "hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us, having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace." Eph. 2: 14–16. Some of them are white, some red, and some black; but, in Christ Jesus, whatever may be their color, clime or nation, they are all one. "There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus." Gal. 3: 28.

They are distinguished by different denominational names. One says, "I am of Paul," and another, "I am of Apollus;" one says, I am of "Arminius," or "Wesley," and another, I am of "Calvin," or "Luther;" but though these party distinctions are "carnal," and not to be approved of, yet they do not mar the unity for which Jesus prayed, "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us." John 17: 21.

Visible churches represent the body of Christ in proportion to their purity of communion; but no visible organization on earth is that identical body. None ought to be admitted into a visible church except those who appear to be members of the body of Christ; but in consequence of human imperfection the purest churches on earth may include some who are not members of his body, and some of the members of his body may be found in the most corrupt churches, not excepting mystical Babylon itself. Rev. 18: 4. But they are all united to Christ and to each other by an invisible bond, and when the number of the elect is completed, not a member of his body shall be wanting, nor shall a member be acknowledged that does not belong to him. John 6: 39; Matt. 7: 23.

The Catholic church, no doubt, includes some of the members of the church of Rome; but neither the Roman church nor any other church is the Catholic church. The Roman church is as much a sect as any Protestant denomination.

2. There is "one Spirit." As one human spirit animates all the members of the natural body, so one Holy Spirit "worketh" in all the members of the body of Christ, both to will and to do of his good pleasure. "To that one Spirit the church is indebted for all her gifts, ordinary and extraordinary." There are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all. But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to everyone to profit withal. For to one is given, by the Spirit, the word of wisdom; to another, the word of knowledge by the same Spirit; to another, faith by the same Spirit; to another, the gifts of healing by the same Spirit; to another, the working of miracles; to another, prophecy; to another, discerning of spirits; to another, divers kinds of tongues; to another, the interpretation of tongues; but all these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will. For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body; so also is Christ. For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body. 1 Cor. 12: 6–11.

3. There is "one hope"—"even as ye are called in one hope of your calling." By "calling" in this place the effectual call of the Holy Spirit is intended. The general call of the Gospel is addressed to all that hear it; but the effectual call of the Holy Spirit is peculiar to the elect. The general call is addressed to the ear; but the effectual call is the direct operation of the Holy Spirit on the heart. The outward call of the word is often resisted; but the inward call of the Spirit is always efficacious. "Whom he did predestinate, them he also called; and whom he called, them he also justified; and whom he justified, them he also glorified." Rom. 8: 30. Glorification is the certain result of effectual calling.

In the day of effectual calling the Holy Spirit takes away the false hope of the sinner, and inspires the believer with "good hope through grace." Believers are called to "the hope of eternal life;" to "the hope laid up for them in heaven;" to "the hope of glory;" and they are directed to "look for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of our great God and Saviour, Jesus Christ"—"which hope we have as an anchor of the soul both sure and steadfast, and reacheth unto that within the veil." All the saints are "begotten again" to this "lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for them." 1 Pet. 1: 3, 4.

But the remaining four points of this unity I will discuss in another article.

A MERCIFUL ESCAPE.

This wrong shall not forever sway,
The many toil in sorrow;
The bars of hell are strong to-day,
But Christ shall reign to-morrow.

The latter part of September the Pro slavery element in Kansas was seized with consternation again at the approach of another division of Lane's army of the North." Gov. Geary at once dispatched United States troops who met, at the Nebraska line, 130 armed men, and took them to Lecompton. Upon assurance that they were ignorant of the apparently peaceful condition of the Territory, and had arms for self-defense only, they were released.

Troops again repaired to the line under the United States marshal, who met an emigrant train, and proceeded to break open trunks, scatter clothing and bedding about in the rain, and to make arrests, taking forcible possession of private arms and seriously hindering the progress of the party. While these things were transpiring, the Territorial election occurred Oct. 6th. The Free State element took no part in this election, but fearing they would, the usual Pro-slavery frauds were perpetrated, and Whitfield, of course, was re-elected to Congress. About this time the Free State Constitution was favorably considered by the House, but failed in the United States Senate.

The October term of court now convened, and the "Hickory Point" prisoners, who had endured severe hardships under Col. Titus and their guards, were tried under Judge Lecompte. Some were acquitted, some held over, and some convicted of manslaughter for the death of Newhall, in the Hickory Point fight, and sentenced to confinement at hard labor, with ball and chain, for terms varying from five to ten years. At this, Sheriff Jones promptly applied to Gov. Geary for balls and chains, volunteering the information that they could be procured from the Pro-slavery commander of United States troops at Fort Leavenworth. Geary severely rebuked Jones, and taking the prisoners out of his charge, placed them under one Hampton, a humane keeper, who allowed them much liberty.

Of the 126 prisoners tried at the October term, the fifty-nine, whose trial was postponed, took a change of venue before Judge Cato at Tecumseh, ten miles west of Lecompton. Accordingly they were marched up there, Nov. 15th, and confined in two prison rooms in the court house, twelve feet square, having one window each sixteen inches sqnare. The floors were of brick, cold and damp, and they were so crowded they could not all lie down comfortably at the same time.

There was no fire in the rooms, and their meals, consisting mainly of gritty pancakes and bacon, were prepared outside. It was bad enough at Lecompton, but they had apparently made it worse for themselves, and suffered so with the cold that a Free State settler hauled them a load of straw, which was put into the rooms, and in which they slept like so many pigs. Fourteen of them soon took sick in the stifling air, and were mercifully placed in an adjoining room.

The well ones concluded to escape, and borrowing a bayonet of the guards to use, ostensibly as a candlestick, they proceeded at night to dig out bricks, laying them back loosely and hanging a blanket over the place during the day. All but the outside tier were thus loosened, ready for the opportune moment, which came one dark rainy night. They were in the habit of singing songs till late at night. On this night they removed the last tier of bricks, and at the singing of the song "Pop Goes the Weasel," they were to begin their escape. All three rooms connected; but the sick ones did not wish to escape.

Watching the guard as he paced his beat farthest from them, they hopped out one at a time. The United States marshal and judge were so busy playing cards that they did not notice the dying away of the singing. The last one, in his eagerness, ran plump against the guard and was collared as some one supposed to be trying to communicate with the prisoners and dragged around to the light, when lo! it was found to be one of the prisoners. There was a rush to the rooms, and there, in the emptiness, yawned a great hole in the wall. In their excitement they left the doors all open, so that the sick prisoners could see the cards and things just as the officers had left them in the excitement, and could have escaped too. They shook their sides so with suppressed laughter at the dilemma, that they revived and soon recovered.

The vicinity was scoured after the escaped prisoners, but all to no purpose. The news spread quickly, and next day the town was full of settlers looking at the hole in the wall. The Free State spectators could easily be distinguished from Pro-slavery; the faces of the former assuming ludicrous proportions horizontally, and those of the latter the reverse.

The first of December the fourteen remaining prisoners were tried before a jury, half Free State, who, after twenty-four hours in the jury room, brought to terms the Pro-slavery jurymen and rendered a verdict of acquittal. The prisoners who had been sentenced to penitentiary now still languished in confinement, but were allowed all the liberty consistent with the apparent gravity of their crime. Plotting was going on now against Gov. Geary to a dangerous and exasperating degree by the Pro-slavery authorities at Lecompton, and against everything else in the Territory looking toward justice to, or sympathy with, the Free State element.

Thus ended the year 1856. But the end of severe trial was not yet. S. C. Hart.

THE BIBLE AND MONEY.

There is no single question agitating the public mind to-day like the money question. East, west, north and south it is the chief topic of conversation and discussion. In the midst of all this political turmoil, men, and particularly Christian men, should pause, and see what the Bible has to say about money. It is not our purpose to politicalize the Bible, but merely to call attention to certain fundamental facts and principles, and leave the application of these to the individual conscience:

1. Certain facts concerning gold and silver as mediums of exchange or money:

It is somewhat singular that the term "money" is never given as the translation of the original word for gold, and of the 133 times that it occurs, 123 times it is the translation of the original word for silver. Particularly so, being an English translation. Perhaps some learned Wall street financier may be able to explain the enigma.

Both gold and silver have been used as mediums of exchange from the time of Abraham, B.C., 1921, though not in a coined state. We note some most important transactions: Abraham bought the field of Machpelah for 400 shekels of silver, Gen. 23:15,16. Jacob's purchase from the children of Hamor, Gen. 33:19. David's purchase of the threshing floor of Araunah, 2 Sam. 24:24. Omri buys the hill of Samaria for two talents of silver, 1 Kings 16:24 David prepared 100,000 talents of gold, and 1,000 000 talents of silver for the temple, 1 Chron. 22:14. Naaman's offering to Elisha was 6,000 shekels of gold, 2 Kings 5:5. Betrayal of Christ, Matt. 27:17. These are sufficient to show the co-use of the two metals as money covering a period of almost 2,000 years. Not only do they show this to be true in reference to commerce within the Jewish nation, but also in reference to international commercial transactions as between the most civilized nations of antiquity.

The co-use of gold and silver as money in a fixed and definite ratio: The chief denominations in which gold and silver figured were—the "shekel" and the "talent." This distinction referred to the question of weight, not coinage. The value of a shekel of silver was in our money, $ 5474; a shekel of gold, $8 76; or in the ratio of 1 to 14.17. A talent of silver was worth $1,642.-50; a talent of gold, $26 280; or in the precise ratio of 1' to 16. Moreover, there is no evidence that this ratio was changed during the entire period above referred to, not even in the time of Solomon, when "he made silver in Jerusalem as stones." Furthermore, the same ratio existed among other nations, for all intercommerce was conducted on the basis of the shekel and talent.

2. Certain principles deducted from the foregoing facts: Gold and silver having thus co-existed as money for so many centuries, and among the most celebrated nations of antiquity, it is but fair to conclude that they may continue in this relation to the end of time. Silver and gold having existed in a certain definite relation for so many centuries, it is evident there must be some well-defined reason for said relation, something cardinal, something fundamental. We should use our influence for the continued use of these two precious metals in the commerce of our nation and upon what seems to be ancient, just and equitable basis.—Rev. S. I. Lindsay in the Midland.

DEPOSITION FILLED WITH TEARS.

Morgan was abducted at Batavia and spirited away to Canandaigua, Sept. 11, 1826. The next day, about noon, a crowd of sixty or seventy strangers, "armed with clubs," suddenly appeared at Danold's tavern in Batavia, and arrested Miller on some kind of process issued by a LeRoy justice, and escorted him to that town. He was either released or escaped from his captors, about midnight, and made his way back to Batavia. It was afterwards ascertained that this was part of a plan to destroy his printing office and its contents.

Miller's persistence and audacity never failed him. His war with the Masons lasted ten years, and until the downfall of the Anti-masonic party, of which he and Thurlow Weed may be said to have been the creators. No man ever had more or bitterer enemies. He finally turned his back on them and hied himself to Meadville, Pa., where he sank into obscurity.

In the investigation as to the fate of Morgan, a large number of affidavits were taken, including that of his wife. They all appear in Elder Bernard's book. That of Mrs. Morgan, though drawn up in a cold and formal style, one can see is a deposition filled with tears. The unhappy young woman states she is twenty-three years old, with two infant children to support; and that she is almost a stranger in the community and has no means. She adds that she is broken in health and is in great distress of mind. She further testifies that she had been called upon by certain Masons, giving their names, who assured her that while she might not see her husband under a year, and perhaps never, their order had her case under consideration, and would see that she and her children should be properly provided for during their lives, and the latter educated as soon as they arrived at a suitable age. These overtures she declined, and entreated that her husband might be restored to her, as the only favor she could ask.—R. H. Farnham in the Buffalo Illustrated Express.

—Many a facetious turn is being made on the expression 16 to 1. But here is a 16 to 1 historical fact During the reign of the one sovereign Queen Victoria, the other great English-speaking nation of the world has had sixteen presidents, viz: Van Buren, Harrison, Tyler, Polk, Taylor, Fillmore, Pierce, Buchanan, Lincoln, Johnson, Grant, Hayes, Garfield, Arthur, Harrison and Cleveland.

A SKETCH OF MY LIFE.

BY ELDER S. C KIMBALL.

CHAPTER XLVI.

From 1870 to 1875 I had been incidentally investigating the character of secret societies and disapproving of them in a private and quiet way, although I had a few times spoken against them publicly. My investigation and daily observation deepened my conviction of their corrupt character and evil influence. I noticed their tendency to deprave preachers more than any other class. I saw, with alarm, that the lodge poison was spreading in the church, and like gangrene. threatening its very life.

The Christian body with which I had been connected from my conversion was solemnly pledged by its fundamental law to total separation from secret lodges, and yet this antichrist was already ploting to control the denomination. I saw that unless some resolute and immediate stand was made, that plot would succeed. By nature timid and conservative, I proceeded with great caution. The New Hampshire Yearly Meeting of Free Baptists, representing a membership of about 8,000, met at Farmington, June 8, 1875. My neighbors had sent me as a delegate. I submitted to the committee on resolutions the following moderate assertion:

Resolved, That our denominational fathers acted wisely in discountenancing secret societies.

The committee consisted of Rev. Dr. Hosea Quinby, G. F. Mosher, then editor of the Morning Star, but now president of Hillsdale College, and one more whose name I have forgotten. None of these brethren belonged to any lodge. They reported the resolution to the conference with the change of a single word; prefixing "oath-bound" to "secret," making it read, "oath-bound secret societies." This was not historically correct, but I made no objection. The General Conference, the highest lawmaking body in the denomination, had not only disapproved of Freemasons, but the Odd-fellows, Rechabites and such like societies.

A Freemason minister, long since dead, moved to lay the resolution on the table. It was seconded, put to vote and passed in most spiteful and indecent haste. Rev. O. T. Moulton, then an old man, who lived in New York at the time of Morgan's murder by the Freemasons, and who was opposed to all lodges, sprang to his feet in great agitation and denounced in fitting words the unseemly haste in disposing of so important a question by cutting off all opportunity for debate. It is not probable that at that time there were a majority of the yearly meeting favorable to secret lodges, but their united front and unscrupulous methods enabled them easily to control the body. Real Christians are modest, slow to fight, and in a religious conference no match for unprincipled, worldly-minded, self-seeking schemers. This, however, was not the end of the matter.

REFORM NEWS.

SITUATION IN OTSEGO COUNTY, N. Y.

ILLUSTRATES THE CONDITION EVERYWHERE.

Cooperstown, N. Y., Oct. 19, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—Witnesses do not agree. Without intentionally misrepresenting, Mr. A says the lodges are weak here, and have little influence. They can scarcely secure a quorem for business, and have no perceptible effect upon church work. Mr. B says they are strong and receiving frequent accessions from the best class of citizens. Both are public men; one a pastor, the other an editor. Neither belongs to or favors the lodge, nor is either willing to take a stand publicly against it. Both cannot be correct; and, as I feel the pulse of public sentiment, it is certainly favorable to B's opinion.

There is a "ghost in the garret" somewhere awing opponents into silence, while advocates of secrecy are bold and defiant as Chennanah with his "horns of iron." Of all inferior bipeds born "from beneath," these are the most vindictive when apprehensive that their idolized harlot is to be "robbed of her whelps," and their "cage of unclean birds" exposed to the light. They loathe such "traitors" as Finney, Ronayne, McIntire and all the come-outers, and the "silly dupes" who credit the testimony of such "vile imposters" are pronounced either accomplices in their crime or too idiotic to be responsible for their faith.

Call attention to the inconsistencies in their "railing accusations" and you are met by anathemas and threats. A specimen of this ilk suspects me of attempting to confirm the expose of Masonry out of his own mouth, indignantly exclaiming: "If that's what you are trying to do, I'll have you warned out of town." Who was to do the "warning," or by what authority, he did not state, but as I have violated no civil law, I suppose it was to come from and by the authority of the kennel where the ban-dogs of the secret lodge are kept. Such threats may be popular and befitting the lodge's "code of honor," but they are not creditable to the judgment or piety of the minister who makes them.

Hops are the staple product of this region. One producer said they were selling from three cents to eight cents per pound, though he had at one time sold an article no better at $1.20 per pound. Of course this man wants a "change in the administration," and would be glad to have Bryan elected if it would inhance the value of hops, though he favors McKinley and "sound money."

Thurlow Weed used to set type in this town and was married here. His successor and personal friend for many years edits the leading Democratic paper of Otsego county from the same office, where it has been edited for eighty years by two editors. The Y. M. C. A. is not numerically strong but shows life and vigor. A Mrs. Clark, of New York City, has become interested in their work, and by her liberality they hope to occupy a new and commodious building in the near future. Both the president and secretary, whom I met at prayer service, bade me welcome. The Baptists have a fine house of worship and seem spiritual and prosperous under the wideawake leadership of their young pastor, Rev. C. E. Nichols. Eighty-five was the number reported at the Thursday evening prayer meeting, and the ratio, I judge, was about seven women to one man.

Rev. McBride shepherds the Presbyterian fold. He is a genial, affable young man, and highly esteemed for his ability, piety and devotion to his sacred calling. Kind words from both these brethren have cheered me in this city of strange faces. The M. E. pastor I have not met, but mine hostess gives a good account of him as "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." Father O'Connor's social, genial, sympathetic qualities have won many friends, not of his faith, during a seven years' pastorate. Probably I had better pause at this point, and leave the Episcopal rector with his "biting sarcasm" where he belongs; the peer of the most rabid Mason I encountered at the World's Fair. The bare suggestion of rivalry between the church and the lodge evoked anathemas dire in scarlet and crimson upon whoever presumed thus grossly to libel the handmaid of Christ's bride; and as to the Universalist preacher, his faith is evidently not in the popular "swim," said: "I came here to save two feeble churches from dissolution," and later added in proof of the deep-toned piety of the night schools in which he is a devoted pupil, "I never attend a lodge meeting without making from two to five prayers," but he did not report conversions to Christ as the result.

Acquiescing in the wish of a friend, I spent the first day and a half looking up parties he had named, and trying to obtain subscribers and sell books. Going on my errand I was like to one wandering among the tombs in quest of co-operation or sympathy. One gifted with power to "raise the dead or cast out devils" could doubtless awaken responses from timid, indifferent, calloused hearts and consciences, but with my best efforts I somehow failed to master the situation. After canvassing the ministers and editors, courthouse officials and a goodly number of business men, I began a house to house distribution of Lodge Lamps and tracts, not overlooking the farmers' wagons and street pedestrians. The seed is sown and the Lord of the harvest will care for the increase.

I am persuaded that no ordinary means will reach the deep-rooted cancer and break the power of lodgery in this hop-growing region, or in this city of dram shops and secret orders. Efforts to this end would, in my judgment, be most likely to succeed by securing a hall and protracting services until "the common people" were enlisted, instructed and aroused. These "birds of prey" are not scattered like a flock of partriges by a single swoop down upon them. They know their power, and how to use it. Proffering timely assistance, lucrative positions and official emoluments, they employ demagogues and preachers to "rope in raw recruits," while from behind breastworks and with masked batteries the wise ones fight an adversary they dare not meet in an open field. Such an enemy can be dislodged and their robber-camp broken up only by pointed steel explosives from well-directed seige guns.

"SATAN CAME ALSO."

St. Paul, Minn., Oct. 21, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—The literature sent by Secretary Phillips for the Minnesota Baptist State Convention was distributed. There was a large attendance at the Convention, the principal speakers being Rev. Dr. Henson, pastor of the First Baptist church of Chicago; Rev. Dr. Mabie, of Boston; Dr. Northrop, president of the Minnesota State University, and Dr. Harper, president of the Chicago University.

The Presbyterian Synod, which met in this city the week previous, sent a Sir Knight Templar with fraternal greetings, which were most cordially received. The Sir Knight stated that they hoped for the restoration of the Covenanters to the present Presbyterian church, before they could hope to convert the Baptists to Presbyterians; but they hoped for the union of all denominations. Now this same Sir Knight Templar has told me that Anti-masonry advocated in the Presbyterian denomination would destroy that denomination.

Therefore, what can his hopes mean but an insinuation of the devil that he intends to debauch and defile all Christendom with his lying abominations of lodge-devil worship? I had given Lodge Lamps to a trio of delegates, two of whom appeared as though they might be pastors, as they passed me on the street. The eldest said: "I have not been in a Masonic lodge for 40 years." And he added, attendance upon the lodge makes a man indifferent to his church. And I thought, just as a wife's attendance upon a brothel might make her indifferent to her home and husband; while he proceeded to say that if a man could live so as to be a true Mason he would be absolutely perfect; that the most perfect man that he knows is a neighbor of his, who is a most zealous Freemason, and his companions heartily agreed with him.

Then I thought, how opportune that I have given them these Lodge Lamps, if they will read them. Doubtless they have read in their Lexicon of Freemasonry that, "A man by living in strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of Masonry is free from sin." And the devil has made them wicked or foolish enough to believe it. One of their young men, who is a member of a Baptist church, to whom I had given an Anti-masonic tract, discovered to me that he had taken one degree of Freemasonry; and upon conversation with him about it he proved himself to be a most incorrigible liar, precisely what the first degree of Masonry is designed to make a man, namely, both a liar and a murderer, like Masonry's father —the devil—as our Lord Jesus Christ would say. The young Baptist is so infatuated with Masonry that in spite of all that I could say to him he is determined to go on in that way of hell's devising, and the great Baptist denomination will sustain him in the iniquity even to the damnation of his soul.

While some of the churches revile us and cast us out, others receive us gladly. So we will take courage, believing that we are in the way of righteousness, and also in the way of the Lord. I have spoken to the students in two of the theological seminaries in Minneapolis upon the Bible as it relates to the lodge, and am to speak in another upon the same subject on next Saturday evening.

A SOLDIER'S DIARY.

Oakdale Station, Pa., Oct. 22, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—The Grand Lodge of the A. O. U. W. has been in session in Pitsburgh this week.

Like all assessment secret societies, they find themselves moving toward the graveyard. There has been a falling off in the membership during the past year, while the assessments, owing to the increased number of deaths, has multiplied alarmingly. Something must be done or this so-called "ancient" order of modern date will soon be defunct, leaving some 300,000 mourners.

After an excited discussion it was decided to change the plan. Instead of assessing all alike, in the future they propose to assess the veterans in the order a much larger sum than the younger, as the risk on their lives is regarded as greater.

Some of the veterans claim that this is unfair; as they have borne the burden and heat of the day, they should not be compelled to pay heavily or leave now that they are more likely to need some of the money they have contributed.

It seems to be another case of the devil or the deep sea. In trying to escape from either they will likely encounter both. It will not be many years until they will go the way of their illustrious ancestors, the hundreds of like orders that have lived and flourished for a time, but now are dead and buried.

My reception at Scottdale was most cordial. My home, as usual, was with Bro. J. C. Berg. Sabbath morning I preached in the United Presbyterian church, but owing to the cold rain the attendance was not large, but the Master gave us a blessing. The pastor, Rev. Morehead, who has been absent on account of sickness, is well enough to return. He expects to fill the pulpit next Sabbath.

I was very glad to meet with Mennonite brethren in conference at this place. The sermons to which I listened were given by a young brother from Elkhart, Ind.; Hoffman I think was the name. He is laboring as an evangelist, and gave evidence that he was fitted for the work to which he has been called. Your agent was invited to speak on the lodge evil Sabbath afternoon. The church was well filled and the closest attention was given. A collection was taken, and many warm handshakes spoke more than words of the approval felt. Several brethren from distant churches expressed the wish to have me visit them. Arrangements were made with Rev. Durr, of Masontown, to address his people on Wednesand Thursday evenings, Oct. 28 and 29. This brother has a large church, and we expect a splendid time.

I shall reach Washington (D. V.) Oct. 30, and hasten on to Oaks, Pa., to make out the program and such arrangements as may be necessary for the splendid State convention we are soon to have.

Yesterday I met friends at a meeting of Pittsburgh U. P. Synod, meeting at Wilkinsburg.

The theme at the East End Covenanter prayer meeting last evening was repentance. "They went out and preached that men should repent." Mark 6:12. If there was more preaching of the same stamp as that of the apostles, the church treasuries would not be so dry. When the church is filled with unrepentant sinners what can be expected? Thousands of ministers are afraid to tell much-needed truths, because they think they may lose the little they now get. They may remember when too late, "He that saveth his life shall lose it." The sure foundation is best if the house does go up slow.

MODERN WOODMEN, H. Y. T. B. C.

Northwood, Ia., Oct. 23, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—During the session of the Albert Lea special conference of the Lutheran church in Hartland, Minn., from Oct. 20 to 22, one evening was set aside for the discussion on secret societies.

For the benefit of the English speaking people, your correspondent was requested to give an address in the English language, which was done. The church was full, and to the majority of those present the contents of the lecture was a revelation.

The Modern Woodmen seems to boom in Hartland, and consequently special attention was paid to that order.

The cheap insurance argument was ventilated. The order promises now to give their members a $1,000 policy for about $170. Counting the average life of man thirty-four years, and paying the present rate of about $5 a year, that is certainly a splendid business. A groceryman who would sell 100 pounds of sugar for $1 would undoubtedly for some time do a rousing business, but the end of that business would be a closing-up scene. That business would not work in the long run.

And this is the history of these fraternal secret societies. They lived, talked cheap insurance and died for want of new blood. Nor is it possible that the classified or graded flow of assessment, now proposed by the Supreme Lodge of the A. O. U. W., can save these fraternal institutions from going the same way as others have gone before them. They are doomed to die. But people wish to be humbugged, and these secret societies are here to do it.

After the lecture a Woodman examined the ritual and declared, in the presence of several witnesses, that the ritual was all right, but he was not ashamed of it. He did not exactly fancy the idea that those photographs should be publicly exhibited, showing the death-watch and sawmill in operation, but otherwise the mysteries were of no account.

When the speaker translated the words, H. Y. T. B. C. by "Have You the Brazen Coin?" and I. H. T. B. B., by "I Have the Brazon Balance," there was twisting and turning among the Woodmen, indicating that the speaker had touched some sore spots.

It is hoped that this meeting would help the young people to think and keep out of those societies.

METHODISM AND MASONRY—MISSIONS.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 21, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—The laying of the corner-stone of the Hall of History, the first of the group of six buildings which are to constitute the American University, was a significant event in the world of religion and of education. The laying of the corner-stone was in accordance with the ritual of the Methodist Episcopal church, the concluding exercises being conducted by the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of the District of Columbia. Mr. John E. Andrews, of New York, president of the board of trustees of the American University, presided over the celebration.

The introductory address was by Bishop John F. Hurst, chancellor of the University; addresses by ex-Gov. Pattison of Pennsylvania, Bishop Charles H. Fowler of Buffalo, N. Y., Dr. Charles H. Payne, Dr. Buckley, editor Christian Advocate of New York, Bishop John P. Newman of California, and Bishop Charles C. McCabe of Texas. The corner-stone is of granite and weighs five and one-half tons.

The Hall of History, the walls of which are now well above ground, will be a strikingly beautiful structure when completed. The style will be Ionic, and the material of which its outer walls will be built is pure white marble. It stands upon one of the highest pieces of ground in the neighborhood of Washington, and will present an imposing appearance from all approaches.

The University will open to students, probably in the fall of 1896. As your readers probably know, the American University is to be strictly a post-graduate institution, and only those will be permitted to matriculate who have obtained degrees from other institutions, or who desire to pursue advanced courses of study, the idea being to obviate the necessity of Americans having to attend foreign universities for higher education. Although the American University will be a Methodist institution, to the same extent as the Columbia University of this city is a Baptist institution, its board of trustees contains representatives of the Baptist, Presbyterian, Protestant Episcopal and Congregational churches, and its courses of study will not be denominational in any sense of the word.

No greater compliment was ever paid to the work done by the Central Union Mission than was contained in a few remarks made at the closing meeting of the anniversary week, by the aged Dr. Byron Sunderland, pastor of the First Presbyterian church; and certainly nothing was ever publicly said which gave greater pleasure to the men and women who have helped to make the Central Union Mission what it is. This is the mission which owes so much for its establishment and successful work to Prof. E. D. Bailey and wife, well known to readers of the Cynosure. Dr. Sunderland said: I consider the Central Union Mission one of the chief glories of the national capital. It is one of the institutions that God has developed. I like it for the work that it is doing, and I believe that no church could do it so well. I believe that if Christ were here in person there would be nothing in all our society and condition that would please him more than this mission, for its work is Christlike. It comes also the nearest to anything that I know of to solving the problem of Christian unity." In order that you may know the work which called out Dr. Sunderland's commendation I append the statistical report of the mission for the year ending Oct. 17, 1896: Religious services held, 1,882; total attendance, 248,569; requests for prayer noted, 4,072; converts cards signed, 740; persons visited by missionaries, 2,111; Bibles and Testaments distributed, 240; tracts distributed, 1,100; lodgings furnished, 31,306; meals furnished, 29,271; persons clothed, 674; persons for whom employment was secured, 77; persons for whom transportation was secured, 35; persons sent to hospitals, 119; bulletins distributed, 283,500; free dispensary—cases and visits, 1,731.

CHRISTIANITY VS. ODD-FELLOWSHIP.

Larwill, Ind., Oct. 9, 1896

Editor Cynosure:—In Odd-fellowship it cannot be Christian love and friendship that prevails, but rather a love and friendship bought and paid for in advance, "earthy, sensual, devilish; for, as soon as the dues cease to be paid up, all this so-called love and friendship ceases, and then who reaps the benefit of what has been paid? What is it that will soften the heart with sympathy? Is it not the love of God shed abroad in the soul by the quickening influence of the Holy Ghost? Most undoubtedly. Think of a Christian minister who professes to have been quickened by the Holy Spirit, uniting with Odd-fellowship in order to learn love and friendship.

After some preliminary nonsense the candidate is blindfolded and put in chains. The chain is put across his shoulders, brought around under his arms and tied behind. After all is in readiness, the candidate, by the aid of others, is slowly led around the lodgeroom while the following is being repeated by the conductor:

"Man in darkness and in chains, how mournful the spectacle; yet it is but the condition of millions of our race who are void of wisdom, though they know it not."

Reader, is not this a mournful spectacle indeed for a Christian, especially a minister of the Gospel, who ought to be enlightened daily by the study of the Bible, to allow himself to be put through such a course of humiliating nonsense, the tendency of which is to blind him spiritually. Odd-fellows tell me that if the rules and regulations of the lodge are lived up to, it will take them to heaven. I usually ask them, in reply, if Odd-fellowship teaches repentance toward God, and faith in our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ? This is a question they cannot answer. Old men who enjoyed the grace of God before they united with the order, deny that the lodge will take them to heaven. Those ministers who are engaged in helping to deceive young men, instead of starting them heavenward, start them toward hell. Men thus engaged will surely, according to the Word of God, receive the greater damnation.

The initiation through the entire ceremony is made as solemn as possible, in order to produce the same effect upon the candidate as coming to the altar of prayer by the penitent. His blind is taken off when the candidate is halted before a coffined human skeleton or an imitation of a corpse, and the conductor's charge is:

"Behold a representation of the effect of death, that silent lecturer—to vice, confusion, but to virtue peace—is all that remains on earth of one who was born as you were born, who live as you now live; who for many days enjoyed his possessions, his power and his pleasures: but now alas! nothing is left of him save that sad memorial of man's mortality. The warm heart that throbbed for others' woes, or the cold one which held no sympathy, has mouldered away and joined its kindred dust. Contemplate the scene (a solemn dirge may be sung or played) should it not humble the human pride? Should it not awake the soul to a just responsibility to its God—of duty to itself? And in view of this the coming lot of all, should it not enlist the tenderest of human sympathies? My friend, that gloomy monitor is but an emblem of what you are sure to be, and what you may soon become."

Now I wish to ask the question, what will effectually humble the pride of man, and bring him to a just sense of responsibility to his God, and his duty to himself and his fellowman? It is conviction of sin, of righteousness, and of a judgment to come. What these bodies of ours will be in the course of time, we all know full well, without looking on a coffined human skeleton. Repentance toward God and faith in our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ will bring us into a just and righteous relation with God and our fellowman. Odd-fellowship points out the frailty of man by showing him his mortal remains, the tendency which is downward. The Christian's faith points upward to the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world; and believing on his name, and accepting him as our personal Saviour, we may all come a saving knowledge of true friendship, love and truth.

John Helfrich.

OUR RESPONSIBILITY.

Boston, Mass., Oct. 14, 1896.

When the armies of Israel had conquered Sihon, the king of the Amontes, and Ogg, king of Bashan, the elders of Reuben, of Gad and of the half tribe of Manassa came to Moses and desired to have these cities and lands as their inheritance on the east side of the Jordan. They promised to go armed before the children of Israel until the Lord had driven out the Canaanites beyond Jordan, and all the other tribes had received their portion. To this Moses consented. And he said, if you go armed before the Lord until all the tribes have received their inheritance it will be well; but if you do not, you have sinned against the Lord, and be sure your sin will find you out.

The anti-secret society host has agreed together to go armed before the Lord's people until the secret empire is driven out of church and state in every land. If they do this it will be well, but if they do not, behold they have sinned against the Lord, and be sure your sin will find you out. A trust has been committed to them. This trust involves entire separation from the secret lodge system. It is not the size but the quality of the army that determines its strength.

Gideon had 32 000 troops to go out against Midian, but they were almost all half-hearted cowards. The 300 brave-hearted soldiers would be carried away in the panic created by the 31,700 fleeing before the enemy. The faint-hearted must be sent home, so that the 300 may have a fair oppartunity to overcome the foe. And the 300 must break the pitchers and swing the lamps and shout, "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon"

Every unscriptural lodge that hides the truth must be broken by separation from it, that the light may shine and the witnesses' mouths opened to proclaim the truth. Moses in Egypt refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt; for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward. He knew the Abrahamic covenant. It promised that the man should become a family, the family should become a nation, out of the nation should come a Deliverer, the Deliverer should establish a kingdom, and that kingdom would become universal.

Moses recognized that Israel had an immeasurably greater future than Egypt. He chose wisely in separating from Egypt and becoming the leader and law-giver of Israel. Why should not all Christian converts in Egypt to-day do the same thing? Paul required his converts in Corinth to separate from the political idolatry of their city. "Come out from among them and be ye separate." Why should not all Christians in Corinth, Athens and all Greece separate from the idolatrous civil powers there to-day? The Head of the church called the reformers in Europe in the 16th century to separate from the papacy. "Come out of her, my people."

Why should not all Christians to-day separate from every Romanized civil power that curses the earth to-day? The Abolitionists refused to vote or hold office under the Constitution of the United States because it protected that sum of all villainies, human slavery. Why should not the witnesses against the secret lodge system refuse to exercise their political privileges under that Constitution, so long as it permits charters to be granted to lodges, and lodge members to have full liberty in political action? So long as white differs from black, day from night, right from wrong, so long the good should be separated from the bad.

In the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, Paul gives a long list of Old Testament witnesses. Then he says in the twelfth chapter, "Seeing we are compassed about by so great a cloud of witnesses, let us run the race," etc. In Revelation, seventh chapter, John saw this company clothed in white robes, having come forth out of great tribulation. Then he saw under the altar the souls of those that had suffered for the testimony of Jesus. And they cried and said: "How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?" And God answered: "Rest yet for a little season until your fellow-servants and your brethren, that shall be killed as ye were, be fulfilled." Here was one class of martyrs and another promised.

In the twentieth chapter we have both classes. "I saw thrones and them that sat on them." First class. "I saw the souls of them that had been beheaded for the Word of God and the testimony of Jesus." These were the martyrs under Rome pagan. Beheading was the mode of execution under Rome pagan. Paul was beheaded. Second class. "I saw the souls of them that had not worshiped the beast, nor his image, neither received his mark in their forehead." These were the martyrs under Rome papal. Now all these, the Old Testament saints, the martyrs under Rome pagan and the martyrs under Rome papal, are our exemplars in separating from the lodge system and witnessing for the whole truth. May God make us faithful even to death.

THE LODGE AND THE SALOON.

FIFTH LETTER.

Blanchard, Iowa, Oct. 19, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—On the morning of the 4th of July, before the cheap patriotism of our town had time to spend much strength or squander much money in powder explosions, the artillery of heaven began to roll as if to mock the punny efforts of man; and by daylight the heaviest rain of the season was pouring down. Soon the little creek south of town was filling its valley from hill to hill, sweeping everything before it. One of the main roads leading into town crossed this stream, and the bridge over it was undermined. The storm and flood had passed by seven o'clock A. M., but it looked as if our celebration had also been swept away; but with a bright sky in the forenoon the roads became passable, the bridge was repaired, and by noon the people were pouring into town.

General Prentice, a hero of the battle of Shiloh or Pittsburgh Landing, was the orator of the day, and the celebration was in the main a success. One of the local speakers told a story that fit our saloonist so nicely that he and his friends immediately clothed him with it, and the editor termed it a most terrible insult, and the only thing that marred the bright glory of the nation's natal day. He took pains also to say that there was no drunken men in town. When I met him with the facts, he simply said, he didn't see any. He wasn't the first lodgeman that has been blinded to his "fraters" doings. He could have seen them.

The druggist saloonist took in over $200 that day. The back alley was literally full of drunken men, and they were not wanting on the front street, and in proof of this the executive committee of the Law and Order League obtained evidence that could be relied on, for over forty counts that day.

The druggist and his father sold with a reckless frenzy that would have done justice to a mad man. The evidence in hand, the next thing was to catch the culprits. Dispalring of justice in Iowa, they sought to catch them in Missouri, as the door of the little 8x10 red-house was only four feet from the State line, and as the druggist was looking for an arrest, it was no easy task. It could not be accomplished in daylight, so they waited until after night.

The plans of the officers from Missouri were well laid, and late in the evening they caught the druggist's father in the little red-house, and his son coming to his aid was caught by Sheriff Sother Johnson at the State line and pitched over the State line into the arms of Deputy Sheriff J. H. Walkinshaw, who acted so coolly that he handled him tenderly as a babe (as the druggist himself afterward testified), but nevertheless held him, and at the same time kept his father (who was acting somewhat like a hyena in a cage) in the little red-house.

The news spread rapidly, and friends and foes began to gather. The lodgemen, headed by the lodge mayor, demanded their release. A collision seemed imminent, but the coolness and firmness of the temperance people won the day, or rather the night; the fight and the right. Not a blow was struck. The $200 bond was paid in clean cash, and the lodge-saloon was doomed. J. R W.

INCONSISTENCIES.

How inconsistent of a minister who has been ordained to preach the Gospel and be an example in the pulpit and out of it, worthy of imitation, to be addicted to the use of tobacco. It is true as a rule, he does not allow himself to be seen on the street smoking and chewing, still in his home, or private apartment he does indulge; yes, he will participate on the sly in the habit with certain comrades or followers, who are given to the evil, and who will not give him away. Then as he hears the bell call to the prayer meeting or public service, he will carefully and quickly put off the Indian weed-scented garments, cleanse his mouth, don an untainted costume, spray his face and hair with the attar of roses, violet or musk, and then hie away to his duties as though he had just come from his closet, arrayed in the savory of all that is good and pure.

Of course his lips are now sealed against his saying a word in opposition to the use of tobacco, and the lion in spite of the sheep's clothing and all the painstaking, becomes exposed. The very fact of his trying to conceal, reveals the truth. Now outsiders look upon him as a slave to his appetite and a hypocrite, and those within the fold, who are living up to their profession, cannot feel that they have a true shepherd leading them in green pastures.

What a hindrance such a minister is to the real progress of the Gospel! A ministerial shuffler and Janus is to be abominated above all other jockeys. Men of the world are never drawn by such dissemblers into the pale of the Christian church, unless it be for a cloak to render themselves more successful in some iniquitous work. Such inconsistency and such religion are very far from being Christian.—S. H. McC., Manchester, Ia.

HOW TO BOIL WATER.

Too Little Care of the Fluid We Drink Constantly.

The secret is putting good fresh water into a neat kettle, already quite warm, and setting the water to boil quickly and then taking it off to use in tea, coffee or other drinks before it is spoiled. To let it steam, simmer and evaporate until the good water is all in the atmosphere and the lime and iron and dregs left in the kettle is what makes a good many people sick.

More frequently than otherwise the breakfast kettle is set boiling with a remnant of yesterday's supply in it and the coffee urn has been neither washed, dried, sunned nor aired. Possibly in the interest of a rigid and mistaken economy some of yesterday's coffee is also boiled over, and the partakers wonder at their lassitude and dyspeptic conditions. Whatever is neglected, the tea kettle and its associate pots should be thoroughly cleansed, dried and aired every day, and in no case should water that has stood over an hour in pitcher, pail or kettle be used for cooking.

If people will drink tea and coffee, let them at least have it as nearly free from poisonous conditions as possible. That much benefit may be derived by many people from drinking hot water is not disputed, but the water should be freshly drawn, quickly boiled in a clean and perfect vessel and immediately used.

How to Make Artificial Fruits.

The latest luncheon favors are reproductions in silk of the early radishes, the tempting hothouse cucumbers, big, luscious strawberries and all such fruits and vegetables as lend their color to decoration.

The primary object of their being is ornament, but secondarily they serve a practical use. As a prosaic matter of fact, they make pincushions or emeries according to size, and can be carried away as permanent souvenirs. Each model is copied as closely after nature as possible. The shape is obtained by careful piecing together of the various sections of white silk.

The color is applied with the brush, and is made so realistic as to suggest a practical test of their quality. But the ideal interest they excite is due to color and effect. Radishes with their tender, green tops surmounting the red, carrots with their splendid orange, and cucumbers that show the peculiar vivid green of the hothouse growth are the favorites.

How to Reduce a Double Chin.

A double chin can be banished by correct breathing. The woman with a short neck must hold her head high, even stretching her neck until conscious of the tension of the cords. She should also practice dropping her head and letting it roll listlessly about. This will give a graceful poise to the head, and the exercise of the muscles will help consume the extra amount of fat. Lung exercises in breathing are the best cure for excessive stoutness. The best time for this is before dressing in the morning and after undressing at night. Five or ten minutes' exercise every day will reduce the flesh in a wonderfully short time. Stand erect with the head and chin well up, and rise upon the toes at each inspiration, holding the breath a moment, then expelling it forcibly and completely, coming down on the heels at the same time. Another good breathing exercise is to draw in a full, deep breath. Retain the breath while counting 15 and then slowly expel it.

How the Whale Breathes.

Close observers maintain that the whale in breathing never spouts water from the nostrils, as the ordinary pictures represent. When it rises to the surface, a foot or more of water over the head is blown away by the breath escaping from the lungs. This is followed by the vast body of air expelled, surcharged with moisture hot from the lungs, which, cooling, changes to vapor, and its circling descent resembles a shower of spray.

How Tigers Are Sometimes Caught.

The natives of Singapore have a novel method of catching tigers which is found to be very effective. When they come across a trail, they gather together a large quantity of dry leaves and mix them up in a kind of bird lime made by boiling holly bark and then mixing the juice with nut oil.

They scatter these leaves on the trail and await their prey. Presently a tiger comes along and a leaf sticks to him. He raises his paw and tries to get it off. This he does several times, until the paw is covered with leaves. Then he rolls over, and his fate is sealed. In a moment he is smothered in twigs and leaves until he resembles a huge, shaking ball, from which issue terrific roars.

He struggles for a long while, when he becomes exhausted. Then the natives come forward and either dispatch him or put him in a wicker basket and carry him off.

How to Make Cheese Custard Pudding.

Place a layer of thin buttered bread in a shallow pie dish. Sprinkle over this any small pieces of dry cheese and a seasoning made of mustard, salt and cayenne pepper. Repeat this till the dish is full and pour over a custard made of 1 or 2 eggs beaten up in a pint of milk. Bake in a slow oven till quite set. Serve grated cheese on a separate small dish.

How to Make Whole Wheat Rolls.

Sift two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, with a cup each of wheat and whole wheat flour, adding half a teaspoonful of salt and two of melted butter. Mix to a thin batter with milk and bake in gem pans in a good oven.

"LODGE LAMP" DAZZLES MASONS.

MASONIC POLITICIANS PROPOSE TO BLOW OUT ITS LIGHT.

The lodge politicians are evidently congratulating themselves on having hit on a plan for squelching the little Lodge Lamp.

Their hope is in the Third Postmaster General, that he will forbid it the rights of second-class matter. We believe their hope is doomed to disappointment.

The exposure and wide publicity through the Lodge Lamp, of the expulsion of Dr. Jackson by the Hartford Masonic lodge, because he regarded his civil oath superior to his Masonic oath, must have been a bitter dose. It was proof, from Masonic sources, of the treasonable character of Masonic oaths.

The following letters will be read with interest since they bring out so clearly the attempt to interpret the law in one way for the rich, popular Sunday-school and political campaign publishers, and in quite an opposite way for the struggling and unpopular reform publications:

CHICAGO, Oct. 23, 1896.

To the Third Postmaster General, Washington, D. C.

SIR:—I am asked to show cause why the privileges of second-class matter should not be denied the Lodge Lamp.

The only objection raised by Mr. J. A. Montgomery, superintendent of mails, Chicago, was to the genuineness of the Lodge Lamp subscription list. He claims to have received, through the Secret Service Department, letters showing that some of those who had received the Lodge Lamp had not personally subscribed or paid for it.

In reply would say, that my recent affidavit as to the bonafied character of the subscription list was, to the best of my knowledge and belief, correct.

As business manager of the National Christian Association, and publisher of the Lodge Lamp, I affirm that the Association received pay for the subscriptions in question; and furthermore, that notwithstanding the large number of papers which have been distributed in conventions and in other ways without going through the mails at all, the income from the Lodge Lamp has paid expenses. No one has had any reason to complain that due-bills were sent them for none have ever been sent.

Neither has a request to discontinue the paper gone unheeded on our part. A standing card in the paper requests any one who may possibly receive the paper through some friend, and yet does not desire it, to notify us. Papers are always discontinued upon receipt of such notice.

It is an unheard of thing that a publisher is required to know who furnishes the money which pays for the subscription that is sent in to the paper which he publishes.

Every publisher seeks to extend the circulation of his paper through the volunteer efforts and gifts of its friends, as is shown, for example, in the following extract from an editorial in the Christian Statesman of Pittsburgh, Pa., Oct. 17, 1896, page 4:

Our plan is to send to as many leaders of public thought, particularly the ministers, as we can possibly reach. They are nearly 100,000 of this class in our country. Let all who wish to aid in this campaign of education, send lists of names, to each of which the Statesman will be sent one full year for fifty cents. If any such contributors prefers that we select the names we shall gladly do so, and send the list to the contributor that he may know the persons to whom his money is week by week giving the reading of the Statesman.

Consider the amount of literature that is being sent out this presidential campaign and paid for by interested supporters of the different political parties. Of one such paper there are issued every day nearly 500,000 copies, most of which are scattered as campaign documents.

Your attention is also called to the well-known fact that with rare exceptions, single subscriptions for Sunday-school papers are refused by their publishers. The great publishing houses of Sunday-school papers and quarterlies send their literature to the schools in large packages for distribution, without any regard as to the source from which the pay comes for these papers.

Your attention is called in connection with the above to the decision of ex-Postmaster General Howe, as set forth by Mr. E. A. Cook, a member of our Board of Publication, in a letter which I enclose herewith. This decision is evidently the spirit and intent of the law, and entitles the Lodge Lamp, as well as Sunday-school and campaign papers, to the privileges of second-class matter.

Yours very truly,
WM. I. PHILLIPS, Publisher.

CHICAGO, Oct. 6, 1896.

Third Asst. Postmaster General, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR:—In behalf of the Publication Committee of the National Christian Association, I address you in reference to correspondence concerning the admissability of the Lodge Lamp to the mails at second-class rates.

When Judge Howe was Pomaster General, objection was made to the Illinois American on the same grounds, and in a personal interview I presented the case to Postmaster General Howe, and he promptly ordered the admission of the paper to second-class rates on the same grounds that Sunday-school papers are admitted at these rates.

It is a notorious fact that fully ninety-five per cent of such papers are intended to be, and are distributed gratuitously.

Judge Howe decided that the evident intent of the law is to restrict publishers from taking advantage of second-class mail rates to circulate gratuitously publications designed primarily for advertising purposes rather than the dissemination of useful knowledge, and was not intended to restrict subscribers who paid for them from receiving publications, either in bulk for distribution gratuitously, or from having them sent direct to others. He admitted that the only valid plea for the law making second-class rates at a fraction of the cost of service, was to encourage the dissemination of knowledge, and it was a self-evident fact, that to restrict any person from paying for the dissemination of knowledge among his neighbors, was to violate the spirit of the law.

Mr. Montgomery has questioned whether the subscription price of the Lodge Lamp is sufficient to cover the cost of publication. Many of each issue are paid for and distributed at conventions (not mailed at all), and these receipts, with receipts from subscriptions, the business manager of the Association shows are sufficient to more than cover expense of publication, and if required he will make affidavit to that fact.

For Publication Committee National Christian Association. EZRA A. COOK.

THE DEBARRING SERVICE.

It is the custom of the Reformed Presbyterian church to read their testimonies against popular evils at each Communion service. This is called the "Debarring Service," or by older members, "Fencing the Communion Table."

The reason for these testimonies is shown from Scriptures by the pastor, and the Debarring is a warning lest any eat or drink unworthily, not discerning the Lord's body; and at the same time an invitation is given by the pastor to all who are penitent, though they have sinned in these matters, yet if truly penitent they are invited to partake of the Communion.

The United Presbyterian, the Weslyan Methodist and some twenty other testifying church bodies, as well as several independent churches, have in one way or another the "Debarring Service." The Wheaton College Congregational church has had the custom, for a few years, of reading its testimonies at each Communion season, but has recently changed its rule, putting the matter into the hands of the pastor so that he is at liberty to read them every three months or not as he chooses. The world cares little to-day about articles of faith, for Catholic and Protestant, orthodox and hetrodox, hold very much the same form of words. But testimonies against popular evils are obnoxious to the world, and it hates the church that lets its light shine upon their darkness, and marks the separation line between church and world so as to be seen and read of all men. Hence the church ought to take the responsibility for the public reading, and see that it is done. Let the hatred of the world and worldly Christians be upon the church and not upon the pastor.

The pressure upon testifying churches and their pastors is seen in the changes that have taken place—a shrinking from openly testifying as at first. It is with great regret that we confess that there is hardly an exception to this trend to withhold public testimony. As an illustration, we call attention to the law of the Weslyan Methodist church, that its members shall read and explain their General Rules to their congregation once every quarter. These rules include Anti-secrecy, Prohibition, Sabbath and other reforms. It is a most excellent law and if followed out as intended would make a people intelligent and strong in the battle against popular evils. No one can be counted on for much who is ignorant of the scriptural reasons for the church's position. About two years ago at an annual meeting in Wheaton, the chairman on Reforms did as he was appointed to do, and a number of Weslyans expressed their surprise at portions of the report. "They did not know that the General Rules had in them anything on that subject."

The Weslyan minister who made that report told the writer that he had heard Weslyans many a time say that they did not know such and such a subject was in their General Rules. The excuse that ministers give for not reading the rules is that "every one knows where we stand," and hence what is the use of repeating these rules? The following are some reasons why these testimonies ought to be read and amplified several times during the year:

1. A pastor should be faithful to his covenant that requires him to read the church testimonies.

2. Church members should be warned against eating and drinking at the Lord's Table unworthily.

3. It tends to keep the church pure. Dancing, smoking, lodge-going, saloon-voting, world-loving Christians will stay out until converted.

4. It makes intelligent and strong Christians, and the light of the church organization is made to shine out upon the congregation and the world.

PROF. JOHN ROBISON'S MASONIC EXPERIENCE.

The author of "Freemasonry a Conspiracy Against All Religions and Governments," Prof. John Robison, of Edinburgh University, who published in 1797 this first warning cry against the danger from Freemasonry, says in the preface to his marvelous book:

"Being at a friends house in the country during some part of the summer 1795, I saw a volume of a German periodical work, called Religions Begebenheiten, i. e., 'Religious Occurrences,' in which there was an account of the various schisms in the fraternity of Freemasons, with frequent allusions to the origin and history of that celebrated association. This account interested me a good deal, because, in my early life, I had taken some part in the occupations (shall I call them) of Freemasonry; and having chiefly frequented the lodges on the Continent, I had learned many doctrines, and seen many ceremonials, which have no place in the simple system of Freemasonry which obtains in this country. I had also remarked, that the whole was much more the object of reflection and thought than I could remember it to have been among my acquaintances at home. There, I had seen a Mason lodge considered merely as a pretext for passing an hour or two in a sort of decent conviviality, not altogether void of some rational occupation.

"I had sometimes heard of differences of doctrines or of ceremonies, but in terms which marked them as mere frivolities. But, on the Continent, I found them matters of serious concern and debate. Such too is the contagion of example, that I could not hinder myself from thinking one opinion better founded, or one ritual more opposite and significant, than another; and I even felt something like an anxiety for its being adopted, and a zeal for making it a general practice. I had been initiated in a very splendid lodge at Liege, of which the Prince Bishop, his Trefonciers, and the chief Noblesse of the State, were members.

"I visited the French lodges at Valenciennes, at Brussels, at Aix-la-Chapelle, at Berlin and Koningsberg; and I picked up some printed discourses delivered by the brother orators of the lodges. At St. Petersburgh I connected myself with the English lodge, and occasionally visited the German and Russian lodges held there. I found myself received with particular respect as a Scotch Mason, and as an Eleve of the lodge de la Parfaite Intelligence at Liege. I was importuned by persons of the first rank to pursue my Masonic career through many degrees unknown in this country. But all the splendor and elegance that I saw could not conceal a frivolity in every part. It appeared a baseless fabric, and I could not think of engaging in an occupation which would consume much time, cost me a good deal of money, and might perhaps excite in me some of that fanaticism, or, at least, enthusiasm that I saw in others, and perceived to be void of any rational support.

"I therefore remained in the English lodge, contented with the rank of Scotch Master, which was in a manner forced on me in a private lodge of French Masons, but is not given in the English lodge. My Masonic rank admitted me to a very elegant entertainment in the female Loge de la Fidelite, where every ceremonial was composed in the highest degree of elegance, and everything conducted with the most delicate respect for our fair sisters, and the old song of brotherly love was chanted in the most refined strain of sentiment. I do not suppose that the Parisian Freemasonry of forty-five degrees could give me more entertainment. I had profited so much by it, that I had the honor of being appointed the brother orator. In this office I gave such satisfaction that a worthy brother sent me at midnight a box, which he committed to my care, as a person far advanced in Mason science, zealously attached to the order, and therefore a fit depositary of important writings.

"I learned next day that this gentleman had found it convenient to leave the empire in a hurry, but taking with him the funds of an establishment of which her Imperial Majesty had made him the manager. I was desired to keep these writings till he should see me again. I obeyed. About ten years afterward I saw the gentleman on the street in Edinburgh, conversing with a foreigner. As I passed by him, I saluted him softly in the Russian language, but without stopping, or even looking him in the face. He colored, but made no return. I endeavored in vain to meet him, intending to make a proper return for much civility and kindness which I had received from him in his own country."

PROF. ROBISON'S MYSTERIOUS BOX.

Prof. Robison thus describes the contents of the mysterious box above alluded to:

"I now considered the box as accessible to myself, and opened it. I found it to contain all the degrees of the Parsait Macon Ecossois, with the rituals, catechisms and instructions, and also four other degrees of Freemasonry, as cultivated in the Parisian lodges. I have kept them with all care, and mean to give them to some respectable lodge. But as I am bound by no engagement of any kind, I hold myself as at liberty to make such use of them as may be serviceable to the public, without enabling any uninitiated person to enter the lodges of these degrees.

"This acquisition might have roused my former relish for Masonry, had it been merely dormant; but, after so long separation from the Loge de la Fidelite, the Masonic spirit had evaporated. Some curiosity, however, remained, and some wish to trace this plastic mystery to the pit from which the clay had been dug, which has been moulded into so many different shapes, 'some to honor, and some to dishonor.' But my opportunities were now gone. I had given away (when in Russia) my volumes of discourses, and some far-fetched and gratuitous histories, and nothing remained but the pitiful work of Anderson, and the Maconnerie Adonhiramique devoilee, which are in every one's hands.

"My curiosity was strongly roused by the accounts given in the Religion Begebenheiten. There I saw quotations without number; systems and schisms of which I had never heard; but what particularly struck me, was a zeal and fanaticism about what I thought trifles, which astonished me. Men of rank and fortune, and engaged in serious and honorable employments, not only frequenting the lodges of the cities where they resided, but journeying from one end of Germany or France to the other, to visit new lodges, or to learn new secrets or new doctrines. I saw conventions held at Wismar, at Wisbad, at Kohlo, at Brunswick and at Willemsbad, consisting of some hundreds of persons of respectable stations. I saw adventurers coming to a city, professing some new secret, and in a few days forming new lodges, and instructing in a troublesome and expensive manner hundreds of brethren."

CALL FOR THE PENNSYLVANIA CONVENTION

To the friends of the anti-secrecy cause in Pennsylvania, greeting: It has been thought wise to hold our annual convention this year in autumn rather than spring as heretofore. You are hereby invited to assemble in the Green Tree Brethren church, Oaks, Montgomery county, Nov. 18th, at 2 P. M., to listen to addresses, engage in discussion and transact such business as may come before the convention. The convention will continue its sessions through the following day and evening. Rev. W. B. Stoddard will arrange and report details. Let all come who can. Come in the fear of God and in prayer, believing that he will be present in the mighty operations of his spirit, and the wonderful manifestation of his truth. We request earnest supplication, by all the friends who read this call, for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon this convention. We go forward believing that our Lord will be present to work mightily for his own cause, and assured that he will not disappoint our expectation. "According to your faith, so shall it be."

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Rev. Simpson Ely began his work as pastor in Kirksville, Mo., Sunday, Oct. 11th.

—Editor M. A. Gault has been giving a few days' work to Wisconsin in the neighborhood of Waukesha.

—The Cornish church will probably invite the Maine Anti-secret Christian Association to hold its next session with them.

—The three Protestant pastors of New Market, N. H., are all young men of much promise, and connected with no secret lodge.

—Elder S. C. Kimball has accepted a call to the pastorate of the church of Cornish, Me. He will continue to reside in New Market, N. H.

—Bro. M. L. Worcester, of Kingston, Ill., sends us $5 as a donation to the cause; also $3 to be sent to Bro. F. J. Davidson, New Orleans, La.

—Rev. J. P. Stoddard writes: "I attended four church services at Cooperstown on Sabbath, Oct. 18, and had an opportunity to take part in two of them, I trust, with profit to the Lord's cause."

—Elder J. L. Barlow, through failing health, has been forced to leave his pastorate at Hagedorn's Mills, and retire to Bemis Heights, N. Y., at which place correspondents will now address him.

—The Unitarian minister at Laconia, N. H., who was also a Knight Templar Freemason, was about to be exposed in great sin and shame. He escaped further earthly judgment by killing himself.

—General Secretary Phillips attended the German Lutheran Conference at Arlington Heights, Wednesday, Oct. 21, and addressed them on the N. C. A. work. His presentation met with a cordial reception.

—Do our friends realize that we have no reserve capital? That we can spend in the work only what is given each year? All the loans which the Association has made are to protect annuity funds.

—Miss Flagg's recent letters on "Romanism" have attracted considerable attention. One writer says: "Those Flagg letters 'Romanism and Masonry' should be printed in pamphlet form. Perhaps some would send money to print them if asked through the Cynosure. I would take $2 worth if so printed." Let us hear from as many as possible, and if the demand is sufficient they will be issued in pamphlet form.

—After twenty-one days of hard work, Secretary J. P. Stoddard returned to Boston last week in time to put some good testimony with the delegates to the annual gathering of the great American Missionary Association.

—Rev. A. W. Parry, pastor of the Free Methodist church, Pekin, Ill., (house 914 Henrietta St.), has recently removed to that place. Cannot our friends in that part of the State open the way for him to address them on secret society questions?

—Secretary P. B. Williams reports a rousing meeting on the 18th, in Clearwater, Cal. He writes: "Truth is gaining ground there. There were three saved since I wrote you last; one man saved from two lodges. I lecture to-night at Los Angeles; to-morrow night at Santa Ana."

—Bro. Geo. W. Clark, of Detroit, says: "I have just enjoyed a good visit from my old and dear friend, Bro. J. F. Browne, who is an efficient worker for righteousness. I knew him when at New Iberia, New Orleans, and Berea, Ky. Such workers are few. God bless and multiply them."

—The November Century will contain the opening installments of three serials: "Campaigning With Grant," by General Horace Porter, illustrated by C. S. Reinhart; Dr. Weir Mitchell's novel of the Revolution, "Hugh Wynne, Free Quaker;" and "A Rose of Yesterday," by Marion Crawford.

—In New England the Woman's Christian Tempersnce Union is gravitating strongly against secret lodges. There are two reasons for this: lodge women have little taste for real Gospel work and are busy with their secret folly; real Christian women naturally dislike the duplicity, vain show and silly titles of the lodge.

—John F. Hanson, the well-known lecturer for the "Peace Association of Friends in America," writes of the coming Iowa State anti-secrecy convention: "At the yearly meeting of Friends at Oskaloosa, I advertised the convention and urged our ministers to attend the anti-secrecy convention. I hope it will be largely attended, and be a great blessing to that community."

—Secretary Williams has just ordered the following tracts to be sent to Portland, Oregon, for use there: 500 "Selling Dead Horses," 500 "Secrecy and Sin," 200 "Pastors at Rival Altars," 200 "Extracts from Masonic Oaths," 200 "Masonic Oaths Null and Void," 100 "Ought a Seceding Mason to Keep his Oath?" 100 "Testimony of Statesmen," 200 "Cynosure Advertisements."

—Baron Fava, the Italian ambassador, visited the White House, Oct. 19, by appointment, for the purpose of presenting to the President, by direction of the king of Italy, a testimonial of esteem in the shape of a set of volumes of the greatest historical value, touching the early history of America. The work is in fourteen volumes, being a collection of papers relative to the discovery of America and the enterprise of Christopher Columbus, as well as the Italian explorers in the hemisphere who preceded the great navigator. It was compiled by a special commission appointed by the king of Italy and printed by the Italian government.

—The Masonic attack upon the Lodge Lamp can be repelled by our friends even if the post-office officials shall violate the spirit and intent of the law, at the behest of the lodge leaders, and arbitrarily refuse to receive the Lodge Lamp into the mails as second-class matter, on the ground that some to whom it is sent did not personally subscribe for it. We will double the present list by getting single subscriptions that can be relied upon. Let everyone interested, address our business manager, W. I. Phillips, about as follows. (Several members in a family may each help by subscribing.) After dating your letter, write: "Send the Lodge Lamp, one to each of the names below, and enclosed find amount of the subscription price." Each one must sign their own name and pay their own money. Four members of one family have already sent in their subscriptions. Remember, club rates are only 10 cents per year. Let us see how many will respond next week. Read the article in this paper, "The Lodge Lamp Dazzles Masons."

LEADVILLE MINERS.

TRUE STORY OF THE STRIKE, LOCK-OUT AND SUBSEQUENT TROUBLE.

An Agreement That Did Not Represent the Miners—The Wages Proffered Less Than the Men Can Live Upon—Backbone Displayed by the Federation of Miners.

[Special Correspondence.]

The Leadville struggle, which at the moment of writing is commanding a great deal of anxious attention, is in many respects one of the most remarkable contests on record—first, for its length; secondly, for the wonderful determination manifested on both sides; thirdly, for the independence and resources of the strikers, and, lastly, for the peaceableness of the struggle. Exceptions may be taken here in view of the reports that have come out from there and the companies of militia that have marched in. Nevertheless it is true that for three months of the most relentless opposition between the two parties not a stick of property was destroyed, not a person injured in connection with the strike. During that time not a single appeal for outside help was made by the idle miners, not a word of complaint, not a suggestion of yielding was ever uttered by the men or their families, and the union watchers were the best guardians of the peace the town could have. If there have been changes in the situation since, they do not detract from the straightforward, consistent attitude of the miners for that long duration of time.

Of course much has been said to foster the idea that these are "bad, dangerous men" in Leadville and that rigorous measures are necessary to "keep them under." It is very difficult to establish the truth in this case, as it is in every instance where laborers oppose capitalists. The contention of the mine owners is that the miners agreed to work for $2.50 per day until silver sold for more than 80 cents an ounce, and that now they are breaking an agreement.

The truth is this: In 1893 a mixed assembly of the Knights of Labor, a small number of members being miners, did come to an agreement of $2.50 a day. It was done, according to a statement of the miners, "at a time of panic, when all plans and all calculations of all classes were demoralized." Less than 5 per cent of the working miners were represented in the assembly. Now the miners are all identified with the Western Federation of Miners, and as far as they are concerned the old assembly ceased to exist. At the time the agreement was made it was hoped that merchants, dealers and railroads would acknowledge the concessions made by the miners and furnish them with necessaries at the lowest possible cost.

But as time went on it was seen that men could not live on $2.50 per day at the rate of their necessary outlays. Gradually and without any definite demand or agreement wages rose to $3 a day in nearly all the mines, clearly showing that that was as low at least as was natural under the prevailing conditions. At the time of the strike in the latter part of June only 600 men were working for $2.50 a day. For their own sakes and for the security of the union it was necessary that wages should be uniform.

These $2.50 a day men were distributed among three or four mines. They were refused their respectful demand for $3 and went out in a body. It was not at first supposed to be a serious affair, but as time went on it was seen that neither side had any idea of yielding. Then several of the large operators closed down, locking out over 2,000 men, in the expectation that they would induce their comrades to resume work at their old wages. But they were determined to uphold the demands of the first strikers. About 3,000 men, counting those connected with the mines in various ways, were thrown out of work, and thus the opposing interests rested.

To the masses of dollar a day men and their employers it may seem unreasonable to stand out so stubbornly when $2.50 a day could be earned. But of course the real value of wages is always determined by what it costs to live. Rent is high in Leadville. Living is high. Water is bought and paid for by the barrel, milk is 10 cents a quart and other things in proportion. The miners in that altitude must dress in good, warm clothing. A system of compulsory insurance and medical tax has been generally adopted, which makes a heavy draft on the income of the miner. He is constantly in great danger, and his work is unusually hard, tiresome and full of risks. They have nearly all settled and married in Leadville and desire to make their homes there and help to improve the place. So that, taking all things into consideration, $3 a day is very moderate wages.

Probably there never was a case where 3,000 locked out and striking workers were so quiet, so confident, so immovable. In the beginning every arrangement was made for a prolonged siege. The funds in the treasury were plentiful and carefully guarded. Three large boarding houses where two meals a day were furnished to each one needing them at cost were established. The resources and needs of all were carefully recorded, and up to the third week in September no assistance from outside unions had been asked, though every union of the federation stood ready to help, the Cripple Creek boys offering 50 per cent of their wages. Probably among no wageworkers in the country is the feeling of fraternity and solidarity of interests stronger than among the miners of Colorado. So thorough is the sympathy, so resolute is the spirit among them, that they declare the Leadville miners shall stay out for two years before submitting to the $2.50 rate paid to part of the workers. It is the operators, the merchants, the business men of Leadville who are uneasy, restless and desperate. Many of the business men threaten to leave the place, and the fear of a complete disruption of the town prevails. The proprietors of several important mines, among them Mudd and Moffat, flooded their own mines, hoping thus to frighten the miners into going back to work. But the scheme did not work and the pumps were set going the next day. Several of the proprietors had expressed a wish to resume work at a uniform wage of $3, but they were silenced by this move. Moffat, Mudd and others declare they will starve the miners into submission if they desert their mines and ruin the town to do it. With such relentless, stubborn parties set face to face it is hard to anticipate the outcome.

And then came the explosions of Sept. 20, the shooting of several men and the sending of Colorado's boyish soldiers to the scene of excitement. No one knows the men implicated, the unions know nothing, the men killed have not been identified. It is too early yet to explain the real cause of the attack. Up to that time few outside men had been brought in for work. When they came in small squads, they were soon interviewed and the place would know them no more. The Coronado mine was to resume work on Monday morning with a force of 150 men, it was said, behind the great stockade which had just been completed. The record of peace was broken that night, but by whom no one knows.

However this may be, the cause of the Western Federation of Miners is as just today as ever. They are brave, sturdy, intelligent men, the kind who can best build up a prosperous state and who possess a strong desire to do this. They know what they can do this on better than any one else. They are bringing forth from the bowels of the earth that which enriches the community, they have a right to be heard. Their position has been calm, reasonable, determined and worthy of all respect.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Nov. 1. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—The blessedness of entire surrender to God.—John xv, 1-10.

This passage is found in that familiar last discourse of Christ to His disciples just before His crucifixion. It is the parable of the vine and the branches—God the husbandman, Christ the true vine, and the disciples the branches. This parable can only illustrate entire surrender to God, in that the branch depends upon the vine for its life and its fruit and both vine and branch are under the absolute control of the husbandman. In this completeness we are taught to submit ourselves to God.

God demands an entire surrender of ourselves to Him. He is satisfied with nothing less. His demands, though so absolute and complete are not unreasonable. God created us. The creator has a just right to the things created. We belong by creation, by preservation and by redemption to God. Therefore in giving Him all—all our love, all our service—we are giving Him only what belongs to Him. This is not unreasonable. "Ye are not your own, for ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God's."

The Bible gives us many noble and inspiring examples of entire surrender to God, and the blessings that have come upon those who have thus surrendered themselves to God prove the blessedness of entire surrender to God. Abraham in offering Isaac at God's command submitted himself to God, and the Lord said, "Because thou has done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son, in blessing I will bless thee." And God did bless Abraham, David, Peter, Job, Paul and others submitted themselves entirely to the will of God and in blessing God blessed them.

The blessedness of entire surrender lies in a number of things. 1. There is the blessedness of fulfilled duty. In submitting ourselves to God, we do our duty. He who does his duty is always blessed. He has the blessedness of a mind at peace with God, than which there is no more blessed thing in this life. 2. There is the blessed fruitfulness that comes to one who puts himself completely in the hands of God. What power one has who loses himself in God! He no longer lives and works, but God lives and works in him. If the branch abides in the vine it is fruitful. So are we if we abide in Christ; for in so doing we submit ourselves to God. 3. There is the blessedness of escaping failure and unfruitfulness in life. It is blessed to succeed. It is blessed not to fail. He who trusts self fails in life. He who submits himself to God does not fail.

Aiding the Colleges.

In few better ways can Christian Endeavor societies prove their denominational loyalty than by aiding the colleges and other educational institutions of their denominations. The Plymouth Congregational Christian Endeavor society of Weeping Water, Neb., has recently set aside $25, and taken steps to increase this amount regularly, as a nucleus for a Christian Endeavor endowment fund for Weeping Water academy, and they urge other Congregational societies of eastern Nebraska to co-operate with them in this worthy enterprise.—Golden Rule.

A Perfect God.

Men think that God should avert the effect of their foolish and wicked blunders, yet expect to go right on repeating their follies. If God should conform His will to their notions, they would monopolize all His time and service. Because it is written and proved that "whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap," many hard things are spoken against Him. But a perfect God makes possible a perfect faith.—Philadelphia Methodist.

My Doctrine.

My doctrine makes no distinction between high and low, rich and poor. It is like water, which washes and purifies all alike. It is like the sky, for it has room for all—for men and women, boys and girls, rich and poor.—Lutheran.

Preach the Word.

The people are hungry for the word of God. Essays do not feed them. The exhortation of Paul to Timothy is as apt in the nineteenth as in the first century. "Preach the word."—Philadelphia Methodist.

Love.

Love is the glory of God and the supreme attribute of His being. Love makes glorious the smallest service.—Episcopal Recorder.

To Christian Endeavorers.

Christian Endeavorers, hand locked in hand,
One is your mission by sea and by land!
Wide as the world is the gospel ye bear,
Rich in redeeming love, free as the air!

Christian Endeavorers, true to your creed,
Strengthen your brethren and bid them godspeed!
Wide keep the banner of freedom unfurled,
This be your motto—for Christ and the world!

Christian Endeavorers, do not delay.
Work as your Master did, while it is day;
Nor till tomorrow leave what should be done
Ere in the western sky sinks the red sun.

Christian Endeavorers, fervent in zeal,
Ring out the message with clarion peal!
Yours 'tis no longer your colors to hide:
Speak for the Master, be true to your Guide!

Christian Endeavorers, look not behind!
Strength for the present day's work shall ye find.
Dwell not on failures, but resolute be,
Still to press onward, unfettered and free!

Christian Endeavorers, look to the goal!
Seek ye no resting place here for your soul.
Christ as your Captain, His word as your sword,
Forward, and, fearing not, praise ye the Lord!

Velvet! We shall surely wear it.

If present indications do not fail, velvet will be the material of the season, and black velvet at that. So every maid must be prepared to have her best gown of this material.

These gowns will be severely made, with little attempt at adornment. The skirt will be narrow, although cut to flare considerably about the feet. They will be long enough to just sweep the ground. The sleeves will be tight fitting, with a small puff. Many of the gowns will have jet trimmings.

Indeed, we are on the verge of another black and white wave, to judge from present indications.

Large black hats, with waving plumes and white wings, are appearing on cooler days.

A charming gown for a young matron's at home is of white satin, rows of narrow jet passementerie outlining the seams. Careful handling reveals the fact that the satin is of poor quality, but the effect of an expensive material has been secured by interlining it with thin shaker flannel. It is wonderful how much this device improves its appearance.

White satin and jet will be a favored combination.—New York Advertiser.

A Woman "Foreman."

It is quite uncommon to find a woman "foreman" in a pressroom, but Miss Rena Challender of Manistee, Mich., holds that singular distinction. When only 16 years of age, she began her career at the case on the Luther Lance. At one time, while the editor was away, she did the entire work of the office—editing, typesetting and presswork. After a consolidation of the paper with another she worked at typesetting for a year and then was made foreman and intrusted with the management of the mechanical department. She was last year elected a member of Typographical union No. 39. She is also a member of the Woman's Press club of Michigan.

It Levels Rank.

In the London Pioneer Club for Women, to which all the "advanced" women belong, there is a simple device for leveling all the members, irrespective of their rank and title. Members are known by numbers instead of names.

On joining, each woman is given a number, based on the order of her membership, and to some extent she is known by the number, although addressing a person by her name is not prohibited. No. 2,903 may be a countess or a duchess, but, being an "advanced" woman, she is not vain of her worldly position and would rather be known by the numerals than by her title.—Pearson's Weekly.

So One Would.

One would think that woman, like the Roentgen rays, had only just been discovered, to judge from the incessant clamor, the virulent abuse, the exaggerated praise, with which she is daily greeted in newspapers and books.—Lowell (Mass.) Daily Mail.

Woman as a Mahout.

Woman can do her best work in the world by turning her own talents to account to smooth the path of a man whom she can sway and who has all the possibilities before him. So the woman does her utmost to use her brain in his interest, to attend to all tiresome details so as to leave him as free as possible from petty cares and worries. Then the man can concentrate the whole of his energy in his work, and the woman's ambition is vicariously satisfied. She watches the friend, brother and husband and feels, with a half amused complacency, that but for her his end would never have been attained. And this eternal watching and criticism develop in woman a great power of knowing what men will do in particular circumstances. She has seen so often before that particular circumstances have particular effects in determining the actions of the workers.

In the stress and hurry of the fight the man is not conscious which way the action is tending. He is absorbed in doing the duty immediately before him. The woman looking on coolly can say to him: "See, this line of conduct must lead to this and this consequence. You have only to take advantage of it and your success will be assured." It is therefore because woman is essentially a looker on that she is so invaluable as an adviser to man. To many a great man the advice of an Egeria, even an Egeria of an obviously inferior intellectual caliber to himself, is almost essential.

She can watch and weigh the motives of his adversaries, she can calculate the probable effect of his own actions and still more of his words, she can criticise his past decisions and indicate the best chance of success in the future. In fact, to be a woman is to be a mahout—a driver of elephants. The goad with which she steers the animal is in her hand, but yet she knows, as according to Mr. Rudyard Kipling every mahout knows, that some day, sooner or later, the great beast will get beyond her control and may turn on her with a terrible punishment for the insult of having kept him in subjection, for the ultimate force in life, physical strength, is against the woman as it is against the mahout.—London Spectator.

Horses.

In an old book written at the beginning of this century a man who had a great deal to do with horses makes an assertion which one would like to see verified. He says that while a horse always lies down in its stall to sleep, if the groom, as sometimes happens, lies down there first and falls asleep, the horse never disturbs him, but invariably stands patiently all through the night and allows the man to slumber peacefully, no matter how near the horse's legs he may be or how tired the animal. Another interesting point about horses is the way they are trained to become showy, high stepping animals. A horse that steps high, you know, presents a very dashing, spirited appearance. He is trained to do this and to act showily by being driven along a path on which rails are set crosswise. He steps high to avoid stumbling, and in time always steps high.

REFUSED TO TREAT.

A Candidate Wouldn't Buy Whisky For the Boys and Was Elected.

"I was elected to my present office," said R. C. Arnold of Winston, Ala., at the National, who is now serving his second term as alderman, "because I would not buy a jug of liquor. The contest was a very close one, but I thought my election was assured when, two nights before the voting was to be done, a delegation came to me and wanted money with which to buy a couple of gallons of whisky. I refused to give it, and the next day my friends told me that my opponent had furnished four gallons, and 30 men who had been relied upon to support me had gone on a picnic and had agreed to vote for the other man.

"This I knew would defeat me, and after carefully polling my strength, a comparatively easy matter in a community where every voter is known, I concluded that the liquor had settled it against me. Election day came and not a man who went on the picnic returned. The polls closed, and I was elected by 10 votes. We subsequently learned that the crowd had got drunk and been arrested, keeping them away from town. Had I given the liquor my friends would have gone and those of my opponent remained at home."—Washington Star.

NO ROOM FOR DRUNKARDS.

The Habitual Tippler Finds There Is No Demand For His Services.

There is very little room in the modern business and industrial world for the drunkard or the habitual tippler. Sober men are wanted, and the man who cannot or who does not keep sober finds it difficult to rise to responsible positions.

The Washington Post very truly says: "It is becoming more and more difficult for a tippler, and almost impossible for a toper, to get a situation under any corporation. Banks, insurance companies, merchants and business men generally demand temperance as a qualification for their employees. The doctor or lawyer who drinks to excess finds that his business is decaying. The teacher who frequents saloons soon finds his occupation gone. Not many years ago there were notorious drunkards in congress, but this nuisance has been greatly abated. The legislatures of all the states show a similar change. Public sentiment is becoming less and less tolerant of inebriety."

Inebriates and Idiots.

Statistics show that 50 to 75 per cent of all the crime committed in the United States is done by persons while under the influence of alcohol. The reason for this is plain. The person committing the crime is anæsthetized, his brain is paralyzed, he cannot think or act right. The monomaniac, the dipsomaniac, the idiot, the epileptic, the inebriate and the feeble minded are increasing at a greater ratio than the normal increase of the population, and it is this class of defectives which largely compose the criminal class.—Dr. I. N. Quimby.

Queer Temperance Law In Saxony.

In Saxony there is a town of 1,750 inhabitants in which persons who have not paid taxes for three years are not allowed to frequent public houses and landlords are liable to penalties for serving them.

A list of the names of 116 persons who have not paid taxes since 1891 is exhibited at the inns. The tax defaulters set an example of sobriety, anyhow, to their law abiding brethren.—Chambers' Journal.

The Dying Drunkard.

Here is a picture of human life and death where alcohol has mixed the colors and sin has played the roll of artist. The breadwinner is dying. Tears are frozen in their bed, but his family in tatters look on at the last agony. No need to moisten these dying lips with wine. Alcohol has drowned his brain and heart. He is only passing from the coma of drunkenness and poison to the oblivion of death. There is no poetry in utter wretchedness, no beauty in such a crime as this. Alcohol took the bread and the clothing from these heartbroken children and their mother, paid his license fee and murdered the husband and father in his own house. Love died first. Then happiness fled. Poverty came in at the door and was the only heritage that alcohol permitted its victim to leave his family except the bequest of shame.—Banner of Gold.

Expectation of Life.

A total abstainer from strong drink at the age of 20 years, if he lives the average duration of life, will reach the age of 64 years, while a drinking man of the same age cannot expect to live beyond the age of 35½ years. A man free from drink, aged 35 years, may reasonably expect to reach 66½ years; his tippling friends must be prepared to go at 43¾ years. One who is strictly a cold water man, 40 years of age, may reach his average of 68½ years, but the old soak is booked for the other world at 51½ years.—Exchange.

Beer No Longer Popular.

Half a century ago a chemist was not needed in a brewery. Today no eastern brewery is complete without its chemical staff. Honest beer, brewed of hops and malt, such as the confiding public supposes it buys with its money, needs no chemist to assist in the work of production. The truth is that the beer of today is very bad indeed, and that is why it is ceasing to be a popular beverage in these parts.—New York Advertiser.

Even the Children Drink.

The temperance women at Ayr recently gained some statistics regarding public house patronage in their city by counting the customers. In 18 houses, between the hours of 7 and 10, 3,048 persons entered, an average of 67 patrons per hour. About one-third were women and children.—Union Signal.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON VI, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, NOV. 8.

Text of the Lesson, I Kings viii, 54-63. Memory Verses, 62, 63—Golden Text, Hab. ii, 20—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

54. "He arose from before the altar of the Lord, from kneeling on his knees, with his hands spread up to heaven." In that position on a brazen scaffold (II Chron. vi, 13), in the light of all Israel had Solomon prayed to the Lord as he dedicated to Him the temple which he had been privileged to build. The temple being finished, they brought to it the ark of the covenant from Zion, and the tabernacle from Gibeon, with all the holy vessels, and put all in the temple (verse 4 and II Chron. i, 3, 4). We are not told that any of the tabernacle furniture was used in the temple except the ark of the covenant. Everything but the ark was on a much larger and grander scale. They had ten tables and ten candlesticks, etc., but the same ark containing nothing but the two tables of stone (verse 9). When Solomon had made an end of praying, the fire came down from heaven and consumed the burnt offering and the sacrifices, and the glory of the Lord filled the house so that even the priests could not enter into the house because of the glory (II Chron. vii, 1, 2; v, 13, 14).

55. "And he stood and blessed all the congregation of Israel with a loud voice." The eight divisions of his prayer may be easily recognized by the eight times repeated, "Hear Thou in heaven" (verses 30, 32, 34, 36, 39, 43, 45, 49). The object of the temple is seen in the oft repeated phrase, "An house for the name of the Lord," or "For Thy name" (verses 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 43, 44, 48), in order that "all people of the earth may know Thy name, to fear Thee, as do Thy people of Israel (verse 43), for there is no God in heaven above or on earth beneath like the Lord God of Israel (verse 23), who doeth wonders for His servants, requiring of them only that they walk before Him with all their heart. His people are a separated people unto Him from all the people of the earth to be His inheritance" (verse 53).

56. "Blessed be the Lord that hath given rest unto His people Israel, according to all that He promised. There hath not failed one word of all His good promise, which He promised by the hand of Moses, His servant." Before he prayed he also blessed the congregation, referring to the Lord's goodness and faithfulness in having fulfilled with His hand all that He spake with His mouth (verses 15, 24). In Joshua's farewell he also said, "Ye know in all your hearts and in all your souls that not one thing hath failed of all the good things which the Lord your God spake concerning you" (Joshua xxiii, 14).

57. "The Lord our God be with us, as He was with our fathers. Let Him not leave us nor forsake us." God had, through Moses, His servant, spoken of this rest for His people, and this place where He would cause His name to dwell (Deut. xii, 10, 11), and He had also given them these promises: "The Lord thy God, He it is that doth go with thee; He will not fail thee nor forsake thee. Fear not, neither be dismayed" (Deut. xxxi, 6, 8). His great encouragement to Moses himself and to Joshua and Gideon was "I will be with thee" (Ex. iii, 12; Joshua i, 5; Judg. vi, 16). We may well be content with such things as we have since He hath said, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee" (Heb. xiii, 5).

58. "That He may incline our hearts unto Him to walk in all His ways." To know Him is the greatest thing on earth, and perhaps in heaven too. It is better than wisdom or riches or might (Jer. ix, 23, 24). He said in His great prayer, "O righteous Father, the world hath not known Thee, but I have known Thee" (John xvii, 25), and in verse 3 He said that it was life eternal to know God and Jesus Christ.

59. "And let these my words, wherewith I have made supplication before the Lord, be nigh unto the Lord our God day and night." Solomon asks this in order that the Lord may maintain his cause and the cause of Israel as each day shall require. See margin and R. V., and also Jer. iii, 34, where the Hebrew phrase is the same. It is a daily relying upon the Lord to manage all that concerns us, and He will surely do it for all who truly rely upon Him, not only day by day, but every moment (Isa. xxvii, 3).

60. "That all the people of the earth may know that the Lord is God, and that there is none else." For that reason was Jordan divided (Joshua iv, 24), and for the same reason will God yet do wondrous things for Israel (Ezek. xxxviii, 23). He would do wondrous things for His people today if they would but live wholly for Him and serve Him in sincerity with all the heart. He is still saying, "Call unto Me and I will answer Thee and show Thee great and mighty things which Thou knowest not" (Jer. xxxiii, 3). It is written that "the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in His hand." And if His saints would be cheerfully in His hand and at His feet for His pleasure, what might He not do? (Isa. liii, 10; Deut. xxx, 3.)

61. "Let your heart therefore be perfect with the Lord our God, to walk in His statutes and to keep His commandments, as at this day." David, ere he died, admonished Solomon to serve the Lord with a perfect heart and with a willing mind, and prayed God to give him a perfect heart to keep His commandments (I Chron. xxviii, 9; xxix, 19). The Lord said to Abram, "Walk before Me and be thou perfect," and to Israel, "Thou shalt be perfect with the Lord thy God" (Gen. xvii, 1; Deut. xviii, 13). As to daily life there is no one perfect in the sense of being without sin, for of all men the Lord Jesus Christ was the only man that ever lived without sin, but any redeemed soul can by the grace of God live and walk uprightly and have a whole heart for God, which is the sense of perfect in these texts.

62. "And the king, and all Israel with him, offered sacrifice before the Lord." Notice the oneness of the king and all Israel in the matter of the sacrifice. Every sacrifice truly offered to God from the time that the Lord God made unto Adam and Eve coats of skins and clothed them (Gen. iii, 21) pointed to the only sacrifice that could take away sins—that of the Lamb of God foreordained before the foundation of the world (I Pet. i, 20).

63. "So the king and all the children of Israel dedicated the house of the Lord." And the Lord accepted the house and filled it with His glory, as we have seen. We are commanded to present our bodies a living sacrifice as temples in which God the Father, Son and Spirit may dwell (Rom. xii, 1, 2; John xiv, 17, 23). And as truly as we do this by virtue of His blood shed for us, He will accept the offering through the merits of Jesus Christ and fill us with His Spirit, even with all the fullness of God (Eph. iii, 19). Thus shall we know the exceeding greatness of His power toward us who believe (Eph. i, 19).

ILLINOIS MELANGE.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST TO OUR OWN PEOPLE.

Some of the Principal Happenings of the Week Reported by Telegraph and Placed for Convenience of Our Readers—Matters of Interest.

Danville, Ills., Oct. 24.—By a vote of 15 to 8 Rev. Frank B. Vrooman, of Chicago, ceases to be a Presbyterian clergyman. The verdict of the commission of twenty-five, which had been appointed to pass upon the action of the Chicago presbytery after the case had been taken from the judiciary committee, was rendered after a discussion lasting till midnight. The commission found that Mr. Vrooman had expressed his belief in language too sharply conflicting with the doctrinal standards and that the presbytery of Chicago had erred in receiving him.

It directed that body to reverse its action and return Dr. Vrooman's credentials. Dr. Vrooman left the Congregational church to accept a call to Kenwood Presbyterian church. His orthodoxy was questioned, but the Chicago presbytery admitted him last April by a vote of 69 to 28. An appeal was taken to the synod. An appeal may yet be taken to the general assembly. Galesburg, Ills., was selected by the synod as the next place of meeting.

HIS BOMB NOT DANGEROUS.

Emery Powder Mailed to Alexander Carlson Frightens Him.

Chicago, Oct. 23.—A thoroughly frightened man walked slowly into the East Chicago avenue station Thursday morning, carefully carrying an object which he said was a dynamite bomb. The man was Alex Carlson, a tailor living on Larrabee street, and he had just received the object by mail. The alleged bomb was a tin tube about eight inches in length. This was wrapped in two thicknesses of heavy paper. After tearing off the outside wrapper Carlson's fears were realized by what he saw on the inside covering. There was a picture of a skull and cross-bones and the following inscription:

"If nott this time will bee the next."

At one end of the tube was sealing wax and the words "open here." Carlson took the package to the East Chicago avenue station and it was opened by the police. The tube was filled with emery powder and it was perfectly harmless. The police sent the alleged bomb to the postal authorities for further investigation.

Illinois Presbyterians in Council.

Danville, Oct. 21.—The Illinois synod of the Presbyterian church met in this city last night at the First Presbyterian church with 176 delegates. Rev. F. B. THREE VICTIMS OF THE RAIL.

Train Crashes Through a Bridge Over the Platte, Near Des Moines.

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 21.—A freight train north-bound crashed through the Chicago Great Western bridge over the Platte river, seventy miles south of here, yesterday afternoon. Three men were killed. The dead are: H. T. Rhodes, conductor, Des Moines, Ia., and two unidentified men. The Platte river bridge is near the state line. Just south of the bridge the freight rested on a siding while the Twin City express, north-bound, passed.

The passenger train went over the bridge without accident, but was still in sight when the freight pulled upon it. The engine and part of the cars went over safely, when the bridge collapsed and eleven cars, including the caboose, were precipitated into the river and down the embankment. The dead men were crushed in the debris. The unknown men were tramps stealing a ride.

FIRE WAS OF INCENDIARY ORIGIN.

Two Men Burned to Death in the Akron Stoneware Works.

Akron, Oct. 23.—The burning of the Whitman, Robinson & Company's stoneware plant here was of incendiary origin, and in addition to the destruction of $200,000 worth of property two lives were lost. When the fire had nearly burned out the body of an unknown man was discovered in one of the red hot kilns. Evidently he had crawled in to sleep and was burned to death. His body was literally baked. The remains of Francis Harrison, who slept at the works, have not been found owing to the ruins being too hot to search for him. He was in an intoxicated condition and it is certain that he perished in the flames. Old clothes saturated in coal oil were found in the vicinity, and the fact that the fire started in two places leaves no room to doubt that it was started by an incendiary.

AMERICANS NOT WANTED.

The Workings of the Padrone System Shown on a Contract Near Paterson.

Within a few days hordes of idle men in search of employment have tramped from Paterson to the neighborhood of Stockholm and Canisteer, where a large territory of farm land, one church and a number of buildings are being turned from their present use for the purpose of affording storage capacity for a supply of water to Jersey City. In every case the applicants, nearly all of whom were American citizens, were doomed to disappointment long before they reached the scene of operations, for signs with "No more men wanted at the reservoir" met their gaze on almost every tree and telegraph pole along the highways.

As the idle men pursued their journey and reached a high peak overlooking the proposed reservoir they beheld not less than 1,200 Italian laborers carting, pulling and hauling stone, dirt and mortar.

Investigation brought them to the conclusion that American labor is being robbed there of thousands of dollars. All of the men at work on the Canisteer reservoir, with the exception of the foreman and a few masons and skilled mechanics, are importations who cannot speak a word of English and who have no desire to become Americans in the slightest sense of the word. The only thing American they want is the dollar.

Jose Di Lucca is the padrone who supplies them. They earn $1.25 per day and by sleeping in wretched hovels and eating macaroni and sardines their living expenses do not exceed 15 cents a day. In a few months they will go back to Italy and take with them in the neighborhood of $250,000, not one of which will benefit this country and every one of which is that much taken from honest American workingmen.

The padrone is accumulating wealth rapidly, and it is said that out of the Canisteer job alone he will net not less than $30,000. He supplies the men with their food and cheap clothing, besides receiving a commission from each for obtaining him employment. Some of the men have been here four or five seasons. They come in the spring and go back to Italy in the fall to live during the winter on the money they earn in this country.

A number of the workingmen of Paterson favor the organization of a society having for its object the abolition of such a system, and they will be supported in their efforts by those in more fortunate circumstances.

They hold that it is this system that is largely responsible for the impoverished condition of many honest families and confronts the municipal government with the necessity of providing for them either in the outdoor relief department or providing work for them on the streets.—New York World.

To Organize Musicians' Unions.

The president and secretary of the American Federation of Labor and the secretaries of the musical unions of Chicago, St. Louis, Indianapolis and Cincinnati have united in issuing a call for a convention of musicians to form a new national union of musicians in opposition to the National League of Musicians.

After reciting the troubles of the past that were due to the fact that the musicians were isolated from other organizations and prevented from federating by their officers, the call continues:

Having arrived at such a state where the musicians' unions have determined to organize a national union for the purpose of making it protective in all its features and in line with the struggles, the hopes and aspirations of the organized labor movement of the country, we have been authorized and do hereby call a convention of musicians who are organized in protective unions, associations or societies, to be held at the Hotel English, Indianapolis, at 10 o'clock on Monday, Oct. 19, and there to meet and form a national union of musicians in full affiliation with the other national unions under the banner of the Federation of Labor.

The representation in the convention will be one delegate of each organization represented by 100 members or less, and one additional delegate for each additional 100 members or a majority fraction thereof, provided that no organization be entitled to more than three delegates.

Value Given Wire by Labor.

In an address before an association of iron and steel managers in England some new statistics were brought up on the remarkable achievements that have been noted in the manufacture of fine wire. The speaker said that he had been presented by a wire manufacturer with specimens of wire for which $4.32, or more than $8,600 per ton, was paid. This wire was largely used in the construction of pianos and other musical and mechanical instruments. Accompanying these was a sample of pinion wire, which had a market value of $21.60 per pound, or $43,200 per ton. A still more remarkable illustration of how a piece of steel can be treated so as to become more costly than gold is seen in the manufacture of hairsprings. Of these it takes 754 to weigh an ounce of 437½ grains, and 27,000,000 of them to go to the ton, which would cost $400,000. Probably the limit of the value that can be given to steel by skilled labor is reached in the case of the barbed instruments used by dentists for extracting nerves from teeth, which are sold at the rate of some $2,150,000 per ton.

Union For Eight Hours.

Some of the most prominent members of the Central Labor union of the District of Columbia are seriously discussing a proposition made to them by some of the labor leaders in New York city to unite with the latter in the organization into one great body of all the crafts whose national organizations have expressed a preference for an eight hour day, and also that when formed the new union shall take up the question as a unit and push the subject to a satisfactory conclusion.

Result of a Shorter Workday.

In one of the largest paper mills in Russia the hours of labor have been reduced from 12 to 8, and the manager writes to an exchange as follows: "Instead of increased drinking by the workingmen, the only drinkshop in the place had to give up business. Between 400 and 500 of the operators regularly attend lectures, and orchestral, vocal and reading unions have been formed. These things were impossible under the old 12 hour system."

James G. Birney, Candidate of the Liberty Party for President, was a Freemason, "but never entered a lodge after he joined the church, and, as his sons grew up, he cautioned them against joining any secret order."—Gen. Wm. Birney.

Lewis Tappan, private journal. 1814: "Dr. Dixwell gave me lectures on Masonry at his house." "In September left the lodge." Letter, Jan. 21, 1829: "I am free to say that I henceforth renounce Freemasonry, considering it a useless and profane institution."

Disraeli, Lord Beaconsfield: "In conducting the governments of the world there are not only sovereigns and ministers, but secret orders to be considered, which have agents everywhere—reckless agents, who countenance assassination, and, if necessary, can produce a massacre."

Thurlow Weed: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the Anti-masonic excitement by a sincere desire, first to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of secret societies."

Charles Sumner, in a Letter to Samuel D. Greene: "I find two powers here in Washington in harmony, and both are antagonistical to our free institutions, and tend to centralization and anarchy—Freemasonry and Slavery; and they must both be destroyed if our country is to be the home of the free, as our ancestors designed it."

A. M. Sullivan, Irish Leader: "I had not studied in vain the history of secret, oath-bound associations. I regard them with horror. I knew all that could be said as to their advantages in revolutionizing a country, but even in the firmest and best of hands they had a direct tendency to demoralization, and are often on the whole more perilous to society than open tyranny."

JAMES MADISON, Letter dated Montpelier, Jan. 24, 1832: "I never was a Mason, and no one perhaps could be more a stranger to the principles, rites and fruits of the institution. From the number and character of those who now support the charges against Masonry, I cannot doubt that it is at least susceptible of abuses outweighing any advantages promised by its patrons."

Horace Greeley: "Many persons were brought to trial on account of the murder of Morgan, but no one was judicially found guilty of murder. It was established by seceding Masons that the oaths—at least in some of the highest degrees—that were administered, and taken by those admitted to Masonic lodges, disqualified them from serving as jurors in any case where a brother Mason of like degree was a party, and his antagonist was not."

JOSEPH RITNER, Governor of Pennsylvania, 1837: "If it be true as the lamented Colden (himself one of the initiated) declared, that many a Mason became a great man but no great man ever became a Mason, how nearly does it concern the youth of our country to pause and reflect before they commit their present standing and future reputation to the keeping of a society, which for its cold-hearted and selfish purposes could immolate even the fame of Washington at the shrine of its abominations."

GEORGE WASHINGTON, to Friends in 1794, Quoted by Myron Holley: "The real people occasionally assembled in order to express their sentiments on political sentiments, ought never to be confounded with permanent, self-appointed societies, usurping the right to control constituted authorities, and to dictate to public opinion. While the former was entitled to respect, the latter was incompatible with all government, and must either sink into general dis-esteem, or finally overturn the established order of things."

JOHN ADAMS: "The use of my father's name f the purpose of which Mr. Sheppard would now appl it, is an injury to his memory, which I deem it my duty, as far as may be in my power, to redress. . . . While Mr. Gridley lived, he was the intimate friend, personal and professional, of my father. He died in 1767. My father often resorted to him for friendly counsel, and, as he was Grand Master of the lodge, once asked his advice, whether it was worth his while to become a member of the society. In the candor of friendship, Mr. Gridley answered him—NO,—adding that by aggregation to the society a young man might acquire a little artificial support but that he did not need it, and that there was nothing in the Masonic institution worthy of his seeking to be associated with it. So said at that time the Grand Master of the Massachusetts Masons, Jeremy Gridley; and such I have repeatedly heard my father say, was the reason why he never joined the lodge. The use of the name of Washington, to give an odor of sanctity to the institution as it now stands exposed to the world, is in my opinion as unwarrantable as that of my father's name."—Letter of John Quincy Adams, Aug. 22, 1831.

BRAIN AT A FEAST.

Remarkable Gathering at the Princeton Banquet.

MANY EDUCATORS AT THE BOARD.

Great Universities of the World Represented—President Cleveland Makes the Speech of His Life, But Declines a Collegiate Honor Offered Him—A True Feast of Reason in the Historic Halls—Close of the Sesqui-Centennial.

Princeton, N. J., Oct. 23.—The history of Princeton during the past threee days will be a part of the history of the United States. Primarily the event was the celebration of the university's sesqui-centennial. Historically it was a congress of nations formed by the best brains of those nations. Learned savants from the shores of France; renowned schclars from metaphysical old Germany; living personifications of the centuries of lore embraced within the walls of ancient Oxford—touched elbow to elbow and drank toasts together. Prominent among all stood the chief executive of this nation—President Cleveland. Necessarily, the president was the main speaker of the day, and nearly every man here is saying he made the oratorial effort of his life. He spoke in Alexandria Hall to an audience comprising representatives of nearly every great institution of learning in the world, and men of mark in other walks of life.

College Yell for Mrs. Cleveland.

His theme was the duties and responsibilities that college men and educated men generally owe to the cause of good government. He spoke without any effort at oratorial effect. and with very little emphasis even, but the points in his address were quickly grasped by his hearers and he was frequently interrupted by hearty hand-clapping and cries of "Good, good" from the platform and body of the house. On each occasion of this sort the great crowd of students in the balcony yelled "Cleveland, Cleveland, Cleveland." He spoke for a half hour, and when he concluded the exhibition of enthusiasm was remarkable. Cheer upon cheer was given with hearty good will, and as a wind up the college yell was given for Mrs. Cleveland. She occupied a chair in the front row of the seats facing the benches on which the university delegates sat, and the unexpected attention of the students caused all eyes to turn in her direction.

The Tenor of His Address.

The tenor of the president's address is fairly given in the following extracts: "There are those here," said the president, "not of the family of Princeton, who see, with an interest not to be outdone, the signs of her triumphs on the fields of higher education, and the parts she has taken during her long and glorious career in the elevation and betterment of a great people. Obviously a government resting upon the will and universal suffrage of the people has no anchorage except in the people's intelligence. While the advantages of a collegiate education are by no means necessary to good citizenship, yet the college graduate, from everywhere, can not smother his opportunities to teach his fellow-countrymen and influence them for good, nor hide his talents in a napkin, without recreancy to a trust."

He referred to politics in urging college men to proclaim that natural laws (meaning the laws of supply and demand, etc.) are beyond political control and to cry out against the infliction on the nation of "this treacherous and fatal wound" — national dishonor. During his close he said: "I am certain that a more constant and active participation in political affairs on the part of our men of education would be of the greatest possible value to our country. I would have colleges not only counselors of those sent out by our universities and their fellow-countrymen, but the tribunes of the people—fully appreciating every condition that presses upon their daily life, sympathetic in every untoward situation, quick and earnest in every effort to advance their happiness and welfare."

BANQUET CLOSES THE FESTIVAL.

Eminent Men in Educational Circles Seated at the Board.

All present joined in the applause and as Cleveland caught his wife's eye he gave her an approving smile, receiving one from her in return. The great three days' celebration closed last night with a banquet in assembly hall, given to the university delegates. There were present more than 300 persons. Probably never before in the history of the country has such a gathering of renowned men been seated around the same board. It was an international assemblage, and included the most eminent educators of the time on both sides of the Atlantic. C. E. Green, president of the board of trustees of Princeton University, presided. On either side of him sat Governor Griggs and Francis L. Patton, president of the university. The other seats at the main table were occupied by Professors Edward Dowden, of Trinity College, Dublin; Henri Moissran, of the Paris Academy of Science; Rev. George P. Fisher, of Yale; President Seth Low, of Columbia; William R. Harper, of Chicago University; A. A. W. Hubrecht, of Utrecht University; Professor Goldwin Smith, of Oxford; President Eliot, of Harvard; FelixKlein, of Gottingen; President Gilman, of Johns Hopkins; President Angell, of Ann Arbor; Andrew Seth, of the University of Edinburgh, and Judge William B. Hornblower.

At the conclusion of the conferring of the degrees during the day Dr. Patton said: "It was our hearty desire to confer still another degree on this occasion, but the distinguished gentleman on whom we proposed to bestow the honor has seen fit to use the sovereign power of the people which he represents, in the interests of his own modesty. [Laughter, in which Mr. Cleveland joined.] There is nothing left for us to do but to regard his wishes as a command. It would have pleased us to honor ourselves in honoring the chief magistrate of our country, and to have publicly expressed our appreciation of his public services and strong patriotic position in this hour of his nation's trial." [Great cheering.]

CAUSE OF THE RISE IN WHEAT.

Dun Says It Is Based on an Extraordinary Foreign Demand.

New York, Oct. 24.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: The event of the week has been the sensational advance of wheat to 83 cents for cash on Tuesday, a rise of 5½ cents, and its fall to 77 on Thursday, gaining 1⅝ on Friday. The rise was magnified by covering of speculative sellers who imagined the advance had gone too far, but was at the bottom based on the extraordinary foreign demand which has engaged grain vessels from all Pacific as well as Atlantic ports for months ahead. How great the shortage in ordinary European supplies may be is the point of doubt and speculation.

But none now question that shipments from the Pacific coast to India and the decrease in the Russian yield are important, and the buying of enormous quantities for export, with engagements of freight room at higher rates, express the belief of European dealers. The most striking feature of industrial returns is the number of contracts conditioned upon the election. These already are enough to make business rather lively for a time, and many others are pending which will probably be held back until Nov. 1. The buying of materials not only advances prices but induces larger purchases of the finished products without conditions.

All markets are strong for pig iron, but not for finished products. But the tone of the market is better, and a decided increase of orders appears in plates, about 3,000 tons for building vessels on the lakes and in structural work at the west, owing to contracts taken at Chicago for buildings at Boston, Toronto, Detroit and Minneapolis.

Failures for the week have been 274 in the United States against 231 last year, and 60 in Canada against 38 last year.

FATAL FLAMES AT BROOKLYN.

One Life Lost, Several Hurt and a Property Loss of $250,000.

New York, Oct. 23.—A disastrous fire occurred in Brooklyn last night which resulted in the loss of one life, the injury of several persons and the destruction of property amounting to about $250,000. The five-story brick factory building situated on Seventh street, between Second and Third avenues, was totally destroyed. A large quantity of paints and oils and other inflammable material was stored in the building, and it is believed the fire originated in this section. In a very few minutes the entire structure was ablaze.

It was shortly after the fire began that Alfred Beaumon, a fireman attached to engine No. 39, with the assistance of Foreman Bixby and Fireman Quigley, was carrying a hose through the extension when they were caught in a back draught. Bixby and Quigley managed to gain the street, but Beaumon was unable to do so. A rescuing party consisting of James J. Ryan, assistant foreman of truck No. 1, and Franklin Furguson and Louis Blair, of engine company No. 5, attempted to make their way through the burning ruins. They were all severely burned, but managed to reach Beaumon, who, however, had been burned to death.

EX-SPEAKER CRISP PASSES AWAY.

Dies Very Suddenly in a Sanitarium at Atlanta—The Grim Terror Comes at a Moment of Anguish and Soothes Him into the Sleep That Knows no Waking—Columbus Delano, Grant's Secretary of the Interior, Goes Beyond the Veil.

Atlanta, Oct. 24.—Ex-Speaker Crisp is dead. He died at the sanitarium of Dr. Holmes in this city. At 2:15 o'clock p. m. yesterday. Crisp had been an inmate of the sanitarium for several weeks. His condition had been reported as very low, but no fatal conclusion to his illness had been expected so soon. When a rumor got abroa several days ago that he was sinking it was vigorously denied at the sanitarium, where it was given out that he was getting better. Mr. Crisp was the choice of the Democrats of Georgia to succeed Senator John B. Gordon in the United States senate and would have been chosen to that position by the legislature at its approaching session had he lived.

Death Came with Intense Pain.

Mr. Crisp had been in intense pain all day. Every few minutes he would suffer greatly. But no danger was feared at such an early moment. His wife, together with a sanitarium nurse Miss Sharp, was watching at his bedside. At about 1:45 o'clock Mr. Crisp was seized with another attack and quite suddenly he passed into the calm of death. The watchers saw it and sent down stairs for Dr. Holmes. Judge Crisp's two daughters, Mrs. Fred Davenport and Miss Bertha Crisp, and his two sons, Charles F. Crisp, Jr., and Fred Crisp, were at the Ballard House on Peach Tree street They were quickly summoned. When they entered the room Judge Crisp was still conscious. He gave them the look of recognition, breathed a few times and died. He could not speak.

Dread Messenger Comes Quietly.

So quickly had the dread messenger come that the stricken family stood appalled in the death chamber. Mr. Crisp's death, while apparently thus sudden, was not unexpected by the physicians who had been watching him. He had been declining for several years. His last illness, however, was occasioned by an attack of malarial fever which he contracted at his home in Americus a few weeks ago, but which itself yielded to treatment when he came to Atlanta. He was considered convalescent and only last Sunday had ridden out. But when renewed health seemed in view he was attacked by congestion of the lungs which, added to the weakness of the lungs and heart caused by two previous attacks of pleuro pneumonia, resulted in his death.

Affects the Poltical Situation.

His untimely death throws the political situation into chaos, and makes the choice of senator a matter of great uncertainty. The legislature is almost unanimously for free silver, however, and whoever is named will be an advocate of that policy. Crisp had been at the Holmes sanitarium five weeks suffering from malarial fever. The immediate cause of his death was heart failure.

He was born in Sheffield, England. In 1861 he entered the Confederate army as a lieutenant. After the war he studied law. He accepted the Democratic nomination for congress in 1882. He was elected speaker of the house for the Fifty-second congress and re-elected for the Fifty-third.

Will Be Buried with Honors.

Definite arrangements have not been completed concerning the funeral, but it is understood that his body will ultimately rest at his old home in Americus among the people who loved so well to honor him. Honors befitting the high station Mr. Crisp has occupied in the state and the nation will undoubtedly be paid his memory by the general assembly, which meets next Wednesday.

DEATH OF COLUMBUS DELANO.

Grant's Secretary of the Interior Dies Suddenly at Columbus.

Columbus, O, Oct. 24 —Hon. Columbus Delano, secretary of the interior under Grant, died at 11 a. m. yesterday at Lake Howe, his suburban home near Mount Vernon. He was 87 years old. Mr. Delano died suddenly and unexpectedly. There was no connection between his death and the accident to Mrs. Delano on Sunday. She is at the point of death.

Hon. Columbus Delano was born in Shoreham, Vt., June 5, 1809, and moved to Ohio in 1817. He was educated in the common schools, studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1831. He was a delegate in 1860 to the national Republican convention in Chicago, which nominated Lincoln and Hamlin. He was a memberof congress from Ohio in 1844, 1864 and 1866. On March 5, 1869, he was appointed by President Grant commissioner of internal revenue, and succeeded Jacob D. Cox as secretary of the interior in October, 1870, where he remained till 1875. He had for many years been one the trustees of Kenyon college, Ohio, which conferred on him the degree of LL. D.

Death for Eight.

St. Louis, Oct. 26.—Shortly before 10 o'clock yesterday forenoon two passenger trains on the St. Louis and San Francisco railraod, going in opposite directions, collided nearly opposite Windsor Station, about thirteen miles from this city, instantly killing eight persons and injuring over a score, some of them very seriously. The killed are all of St. Louis. Their names are—Adolph Hohl, engineer of the accommodation train; Charles Mobine, Conrad Kuntz, C. C. Blevins, H. Thall; Barney McKenna, in charge of the refreshments; Miss Maud McKenna, aged 14, his daughter; John Cartwright. The collision was between the second section of an excursion train bound west and the 'Frisco Valley Park accommodation.

It Was Some Other Tanner.

Terre Haute, Ind., Oct. 26.—The Dr. Henry Q. Tanner who is reported to have lost his life in a fire at Akron, O., is not Dr. H. S. Tanner of fasting fame. Dr. Tanner lived here until a few months ago, and is now at Robinson, Ills., and he has been heard from within the last few days.

Big Registration at Chicago.

Chicago, Oct. 21.—The registration for the second day in this city was 90,008 which brings the total vote to 383,514.

See program of Iowa State Convention on our eighth page.

The Iowa State Convention at New Sharon in the Friends church, Nov. 17 and 18.

The Pennsylvania State Anti-secret Convention will meet Nov. 18 and 19 in the Brethren (German Baptist) church at Oaks.

The New England Christian Association will hold its annual meeting at 36 Bromfield Street, Boston, Dec. 1 and 2. The official call will be published next week.

One of Satan's most insidious and effective divices to paralyze all Christian reform effort is to induce the belief that the lodge and the saloon will not be destroyed until Christ comes in person to reign upon the earth.

Our Iowa readers will notice this week that we correct the misprint of the date of their State convention. It meets Nov. 17, 18. The program on our eighth page promises a convention of unusual interest. After the political excitement of the past months it will be an opportune time to warn the people of this great underlying evil which must be removed before any other reform can be carried to victory.

"I intend to vote for Levering," writes Rev. John Brown, of Clear Lake, Iowa, whose portrait we published last week, "because I believe him to be for prohibition and against secrecy. The saloon and the lodge are the greatest enemies of either church or state. Therefore, Christians ought to use all lawful means to put down both. Some ministers whisper objections to the lodge in private circles, but are tongue-tied in public. This ought not so to be. There are no saloons here, and, I suppose, very little drunkenness, but the town swarms with secret societies of every description. I attend the ministry of Bro. Bellman, the Baptist minister, because I believe him to be a good man; but I have no communion with the Baptist church because they hold fellowship with Freemasons."

REV. DAVID McFALL.

As the Cynosure each year is receiving large accessions of new readers, we think it will inspire them to be introduced, from time to time, to the heroes who once fought in the hottest of the anti-secret battle, but who have been promoted to their rest above. One of the most valiant of these, whose picture we give here, was Rev. D. McFall, for seventeen years the beloved pastor of Chambers' Street Covenanter church, Boston. He was born near Coloraine, Ireland, in 1846, and got his early education at the Coloraine Institute. He came to Allegheny, Pa., in 1867, and graduated at Westminster College in 1869, and from the Allegheny R. P. Theological Seminary in 1870. He was pastor for two years of the Oil City, Pa., R. P. church before going to Boston in 1873. He died Dec. 28, 1889.

Rev. D. McFall, in 1880, stood almost alone among the pastors of Boston in public opposition to the lodge. Rev. J. P. Stoddard went that year to Boston and arranged three meetings in Bro. McFall's church. Rev. D. P. Rathbun, a seceded Mason, was announced to work the first three degrees. A Freemason arose and severely denounced the church and its officers. The pastor boldly stood forward and declared that his church would always be opened to combat the enemie of Jesus Christ, and that Freemasonry was a system of organized infidelity. The next evening the Masons rallied early and strong, and filled the church so that there was not standing room for the members of the congregation or speaker. The mob shouted and stamped and threw psalm books and a variety of missiles at the speaker, and finally broke up the meeting.

The memorable convention at Music Hall, Boston, March 24, 25, in 1880, followed these meetings. The mobs that filled that noble hall with deafening and outrageous shouts, that assailed the delegates on the street with eggs and bricks, made a record for New England Freemasonry that must ever cover that order with disgrace. Through all those exciting days Bro. McFall was an intrepid leader, aiding to secure a large police force. Three times the police captain came to him in despair and begged the proceedings to close, saying that he could not control the rioters. But Mr. McFall's only reply was, "Never until we are through." He was frequently called upon to speak at anti-secret conventions. His address before the New York State Convention was published for wide distribution, and was one of the ablest ever delivered on this issue. He was for some years president of the New England Auxiliary Association.

The best medical skill of our times is learning to treat most diseases from the basis of the blood. Impure blood is discovered to be the fountain of disease. To purify this fountain is the effectual way to eliminate disease. The secret society evil, like blood poisoning, has diseased the whole social system, and until this fundamental derangement is cured, no special reform can be successful. The remedy must be applied to this fountain of our diseased body politic.

How the nations of the world professing to be Christian can permit the Turkish atrocities in face of God's command, "Thou shalt not kill," is more than we can comprehend. Our theology has taught us that this command requires us to use all lawful endeavors to preserve our own lives and the lives of others. If a murder is committed which we could have prevented, we must be held responsible for the crime. Our own and other nations are thus responsible for the murder of 50,000 Armenians, because we have not said "stop," even at the cannon's mouth if necessary. The Turkish government for over 400 years has been the most gigantic hindrance on earth to religious liberty and moral improvement.

We believe with Bro. Hinman's letter on another page that war is a fearful calamity and greatly to be deplored. It should not be begun except as a last resort. War is not the worst of evils however. The Turks in the last two or three years, in the noonday of this Christian century, have massacred 50,000 Armenians, and all the nations of the earth put together dare not say to them, "Stop, or we will make you stop." The woe-be gone survivors of this inhuman persecution have been fleeing from Turkey by every route they can find, but the Sultan has now given orders that this emigration shall cease. It remains to be seen whether the Christian powers, many of whose war vessels are on the Turkish coast, will only be lookers on while the bloody Turk wipes out the last remnant of this down trodden race.

"MEA PATRIA."

A PARODY, BY SIGMA.

My country 'tis of thee,
Dark land of secrecy,
Of thee I sing;
Land where the Negro cried,
Land where a Morgan died,
Must all now slaves abide
To Abiff king.

My native country thee,
O'er whelmed in lolgery,
Thy weal I love;
I love thy rocks and rills,
But thy Masonic halls
With indignation fills
Our God above.

Music shall wing the breeze,
And speed through land and seas
True freedom's song;
Let saints their faith awake,
Let mutes their silence break,
Till Satan's bulwarks quake,
All Christian forces make,
The strain prolong.

Our fathers' God to thee,
Though lodge enslaved we be,
To thee we sing;
Soon be our land made bright
By this world's one true Light,
Redeem us through Christ's might,
Great God our King.

ANCIENT AND HONORABLE.

BY C. R. H.

Ancient and honorable our order is called,
With its waymarks in the current of time;
It rears up its summit as a mountain peak bald,
And with great things makes harmonious chime.

It lifts up ideals of a beauteous life,
And honors those who possess its emblem,
Instructs its craft duly how to keep out of strife
By the badge of the A. F. and A. M.

Its province reaches out as wide as the world,
Like the spread of a great Banyan tree;
Against all who would meddle its missiles are hurled,
For here only the oathbound are free.

Oh Hiram! thy sanctity far outreaches all
The saints and celebrities of old;
We hail thee above all, from Moses to Paul,
Though lecherous and idolatrous we are told.

And now Christian, Mohammedan, Buddhist, pagan,
A concession is about to be made:
Though we admit you all, I tell you again,
Our order is good, but for the tricks of the trade.

WHAT A CONTRAST.

BY REV J P. STODDARD.

Many Cynosure readers know of the American Missionary Association meeting, recently held in this city, and have been praying for its success. To such, a word will be welcome. From its inception to the close it was more a "Pentecost" than a gathering of ordinary, or even extraordinary, spiritual power. It was a "jubilee" befitting the close of a half century of Christian work, and the beginning of a new era of enlarged usefulness. There was no sounding of trumpets upon the corners of the streets, or fluttering banners of welcome hung out from saloons and suspicious haunts, as when an army of Christian (?) Knights invaded our city, "sworn," as we were told, "to defend the Christian faith with their swords." There were no consignments of wine from California, or Bourbon whisky from Kentucky. No gaily attired females waited about hotels and headquarters at two or three o'clock in the morning with smiling faces to greet the "pilgrim stranger" retiring from the altar of worship.

It was simply a gathering of consecrated men and women, moved by the Holy Ghost to witness to the marvelous power of the Gospel of Christ in transforming the lives of men and the life of our nation by the simple preaching of the Word, and to encourage and inspire each other for new conquests in the name of the King of nations, and the only Saviour of sinners. There will be less Sabbath desecration, less profanity, less drunkenness and less poverty in the country as a result of this gathering, even though the religious press may not be able, as on a former occasion, to report that "a million dollars were expended in our city that was earned elsewhere."

The audiences exceeded the accommodations of the spacious Temple, necessitating frequent overflow meetings. Everything progressed in order and without friction, while the addresses, characterized by variety, ability and piety, were soul-stirring and inspiring. By the chairman of the business committee, I was accorded a respectful hearing, and given permission to place some of our literature with the "free for all" near the entrance. He assured me of his personal sympathy with the work which I wished to present, but said that owing to pressure of business, lack of time and the large number of memorials asking for recognition, the committee had decided to offer only a single memorial relating to the Armenian question which, under the circumstances, to me seemed reasonable and proper. While to many it would seem desirable that some definite expression should have been given against the lodge system, the friends will be glad to know that there was no discrimination against the resolution I presented, and that I met with only the most cordial treatment from members with whom I came in contact.

An incident was given me which, though not an exceptional case, so fairly expresses the supreme selfishness of Masonic charity that it may be worth repeating: Mr. —— owned a very desirable plot of land favorably located, upon a portion of which he conducted a fairly paying business.

The Masons were desirous of obtaining a portion of this land upon which to erect a hall. They made several offers which he did not care to accept. But when times became stringent and trade was correspondingly light they said, if you will sell us that lot we will give you our influence and boom your business, etc. He accepted the offer; and on the very day that the papers were made out the Masons begun to boast that they would start a rival store and drive the man from the town or reduce him to bankruptcy. The building was erected and the store started according to a pre-arranged plan, but it did not succeed. They crippled, but could not crush the innocent victim of their lying deception. They only revealed the perfidy and treachery of the reptile brood whose hypocrisy recoiled upon their own heads to their shame and disgrace.

Such is Masonic charity toward "cowans" who will not fall down and worship the beast or his image.

CHRISTIANS HAVE NO USE FOR THE LODGE.

BY REV P. B. WILLIAMS.

Another reason why Christians should not unite with the order is found in the following statement: "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished to all good works." If this be so, and none but an infidel will deny it, of what use is any other system of morals or religion?

A perfect man of God cannot be made better! And if he be furnished, fully furnished to all good works, how much better can he be by becoming a Mason? To suppose that he can become better is a reflection upon Christianity. And if he cannot, why divide his time, his talents and his money between pure religion and such a system? Christians are required to put into the Lord's treasury as he has prospered them. But suppose they divide their means between the Masonic and the Lord's treasury, how can they obey the injunction? It is impossible!

There are only two treasuries into which Christians are commanded to put their funds: one is the Lord's, and the other is that of the state or government under which they live. What right, then, has a Christian man to put his means into a Masonic treasury? He has none! What right has he to contribute of his means to the erection of Masonic temples and halls? Though dedicated professedly in the name of the "Great Jehovah," yet they are often used for theatrical, dramatic and other profane purposes, such as balls, dances, etc.

The Scriptures fully qualify the Christian for the practice of "all good works." Why, then, should he seek the dark mysteries, rites, ceremonies, secrets and precepts of Masonry? By so doing he confesses what is not true, that Christianity is not perfect, and that Masonry, in these respects at least, is superior to it. What, we ask, does the Christian lack, that he should blindly plunge himself into an institution which, right or wrong, he can never condemn? Why suffer himself to be tied hand and foot, and his lips forever sealed, for the sake of something whose chief attraction is mystery? We tell Christians, if the Gospel does not make you perfect you are doomed. Nothing else can.

In Christ Jesus are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge; what can you gain outside of him? If you are in Christ, a member of his body, why seek to be associated with men of the world, and to bind yourself by oaths and obligations which clash with your obligations as a Christian? We tell you, it cannot be done without guilt.

The Word of God is your rule of faith and practice. It is complete and perfect. What more can you learn from the Masonic symbols? What more can you learn from the implements of Masonry—the plumb, the square and the level? What can you learn from the chisel, the mallet, etc., that cannot be learned from the Word of God? Will you leave the inspired for the uninspired? the simple for the mysterious? the Word of God for hieroglyphics? Will you go back to Solomon, and even to Egypt, to learn the lessons of morality and religion? Will you leave the light of Christianity and go back to Judaism and paganism to learn your duty to God and man? If the Scriptures furnish you with all that is necessary for the performance of "all good works," what can Freemasonry, Masonic mysteries and obligations add to your qualifications? Does Masonry shed new light on your path of duty? If so, whence this light, from heaven or of men? If from heaven, is it not in the Word of God? Why leave that for the phosphorescent light of Masonry? But if that light be human, and not to be found in the Living Oracles, it is but an ignis fatuus, and will only serve to confuse, bewilder, deceive and lead astray. No human institution, ancient or modern, can add any lustre to Christianity. They may be even moral in character, and then in the light of Christianity they are dark. Like the stars in the firmament which disappear, one by one, before the glorious light of the rising sun, so all these human societies pale before the effulgent brightness of the "Sun of righteousness." If you can drink of the living waters of truth, flowing down fresh from the throne of God, why seek the muddy, corrupt and traditional streams?

SEVEN UNITIES OF CHRIST'S CHURCH.

BY REV. JOHN BROWN, A. M.

In my article last week I showed that the true church of Christ was characterized by, 1. One body; 2. One spirit; 3. One hope. Again we say:

4 There is "one Lord," "one Mediator between God and men, the man Jesus Christ." As Mediator he is invested with universal authority. "All authority is given unto him in heaven and on earth." Matt. 28:19. As God, all things ever were, and ever shall be, under his immediate control. "For by him were all things created that are in heaven, and that are on earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him." Col. 1:16. But all authority is given unto him as Mediator; and if all authority is given unto him, it is plain there is no authority anywhere else. All authority is given unto him in heaven—"who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God; angels and authorities and powers being made subject unto him." 1 Peter 3:22. All authority is given unto him on earth—"who is the blessed and only potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords"—"the first begotten from the dead, and the Prince of the kings of the earth." 1 Tim. 6:15; Rev. 1:5.

5. There is "one faith." Faith is here put by the figure of metonomy for the object of faith, or the doctrine believed. There is one belief—one creed. The word is used in the same sense in the following passages: "A great company of priests were obedient to the faith." Acts 6:7. "Felix heard Paul concerning the faith in Christ." Acts

24:24. Paul "preached the faith which he once destroyed." Gal. 1:27. "Striving together for the faith of the Gospel." Phil. 1:27. "Paul a servant of God and an apostle of Jesus Christ according to the faith of God's elect.....to Titus mine own son after the common faith." Tit. 1:1 4.

The faith of God's elect, or the common faith, comprehends the Scriptures in general, but more especially the facts of the death, burial and resurrection of Christ. "Moreover, brethren," says the apostle, "I declare unto you the Gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye received, and wherein ye stand; by which also ye are saved, if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain. For I delivered unto you, first of all, that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures." 1 Cor. 15:1 4. In this passage the Gospel is summarily comprehended in three grand facts—the death of Christ, as an atonement for sin; the burial of Christ, as the last and lowest step of his humiliation; and the resurrection of Christ, as the ground of our justification before God. These central truths constitute the faith of the Gospel, and the saving faith consists in the sincere belief and constant remembrance of them.

6. There is "one baptism." The judicious McLean, from whom I seldom differ, says: "This is not the baptism of the Spirit as some affirm; for the apostle mentions the one Spirit before, verse 4, and therefore cannot be supposed to repeat it again in this enumeration." But may not the apostle distinguish between the "one spirit" and the "one baptism" of the Spirit? Are they not two distinct things? Is not the Spirit one thing, and the baptism of the Spirit another? Does not the apostle say, "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body?" 1 Cor. 12:5. In this passage the apostle cannot certainly mean water baptism, because this baptism is not performed by the hands of man—the Holy Spirit himself is the administrator. It is expressly declared that "by one Spirit we are all baptized"—not into water, but—"into" the "one body of Christ." All the members of his body are baptized by one Spirit into one body; but many of them never were baptized in water. It does not follow from this, however, that water baptism is unnecessary. The baptism of the Spirit is the "inward and spiritual grace" of which the baptism of water is the outward and visible sign. "The baptism of the Spirit is so far from superseding the necessity of water baptism that it is the strongest argument for the observance of the holy ordinance. "Can any man forbid water," asks the apostle Peter, "that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost?" Acts 10:47. To refuse to baptize those who have received the Holy Ghost, is in direct opposition to the authority of Christ. It is to "withstand God." Acts 11:17. No man ought to be baptized who has not the spirit of God, however orthodox he may be, and no man who has the spirit of God ought to be hindered from baptism, however ignorant he may be in other respects.

7. There is "one God and Father" who is "above all," as "the Father of the whole family in heaven and earth," who is "through all by his Son as the medium of grace, and "in them all" by the indwelling of his spirit. "For though there be that are called gods whether in heaven or in earth, (as there be gods many and lords many) but to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we by him: and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him." 1 Cor. 8:5.

Thus, notwithstanding the differences of opinion among the people of God, there are seven points of union about which they are all agreed. They are all members of one body, of which Christ is the head, and from whom they all receive life and nourishment; they are all animated by one divine spirit of illumination, sanctification and comfort; they all possess one hope of a glorious inheritance beyond death and the grave; they all obey one Lord as their judge, lawgiver and king; they all hold one faith concerning the sacrifice and intercession of their great High Priest; they are all baptized with one spiritual baptism, by the one Spirit of God; and they all worship one God, subsisting in three distinct persons the same in substance, equal in power and glory.

From this subject we may learn—

1. The character of a church of Christ. A church of Christ, as we have already seen, is a visible representation of his body. A Christian church must, consequently, be a holy society, "For the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are." 1 Cor. 3:17. Consecration to God is the fundamental principle of all church communion. The apostolic churches are uniformly addressed as saints and faithful brethren. No church ought to be acknowledged as a church of Christ that admits unholy persons into its communion. That true Christians may be found in such mixed communions is readily granted; but the command of God to them is: "Come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord." 2 Cor. 5:19.

2. The unity that subsists between the members of the human body is a beautiful figure of the unity that ought to subsist between the members of a Christian church. As all the members of the human body obey one will, and co operate together under one head, so all the members of a Christian church directed by one spirit ought to be of "one heart and one soul"—"holding the head from which the whole body by joints and bands, having nourishment ministered, and knit together, increaseth with the increase of God." Col. 2:19. "The eye cannot say to the hand, I have no need of thee; nor again, the head to the feet, I have no need of you. Nay, much more those members of the body which seem to be more feeble are necessary, that there should be no schism in the body; but that the members should have the same care one of another. And whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it." 1 Cor. 12:21,22 25,28.

3. In the preceding context, the apostle exhorts us to "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." In similar terms he writes to the church at Corinth: "Now, I beseech you, brethren, by the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." 1 Cor. 1:10. And again: "Be perfect; be of good comfort; be of one mind; live in peace; and the God of love and peace shall be with you." 2 Cor. 13:11. Believers ought to be perfectly united, not only in affection, but in sentiment. They ought to be exactly of the same mind about everything that God has revealed; and if the saints were perfect there would be no difference of opinion on any subject whatever. If they all understood every part of the Word of God, they would of necessity think alike. It is true this perfect unity cannot be attained on earth; but we ought to press toward it, and the way to reach it is to leave all human opinions and prejudices behind, and follow the teachings of Scripture alone. But whilst all the members ought to aim at perfection, yet we must bear with the imperfections of each other. If a member of the body be diseased or dislocated we must not cut it off, but heal or put it into joint again—amputation should be the last resort. "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual put such an one into joint again—in the spirit of meekness." Gal. 6:1.

Finally.—Christ as Lord of all is invested with universal authority. As such he demands universal obedience. We are required by his authority to obey rulers in church and state, in so far as their laws coincide with his commands, but beyond that point obedience to them would be treason against God. Whenever the commands of men and the commands of God disagree, we must obey God rather than men. In every action of life let us have a view to the authority of the Lord; for, however good the action may be considered in itself, if it be done merely to please men, it is not done is obedience to the Lord.

THE STORM CLOUDS GATHERING.

Men slay the prophets; fagot, rack and cross
Make up the groaning record of the past;
But evil's triumphs are her endless loss,
And sovereign beauty wins the soul at last.

At the beginning of the year 1857, the Pro-slavery legislature in Kansas met at Lecompton, and ignored all of Gov. Geary's wise reform recommendations. It passed such obnoxious bills that he vetoed several of them. They were passed over his veto, and he soon discovered it was practically a unit against him. Judge Lecompte was his open enemy and embraced every opportunity to thwart him, and the Judge's example was necessarily followed by his subordinates. Letters were written to Washington against Geary, and his position rendered wellnigh intolerable. The Free State legislature met now on Jan. 6th, and at the instance of Sheriff Jones, with the connivance of Judge Cato, of Tecumseh, the United States marshal went to Topeka and arrested a dozen of the leading members, including the presiding officers of both houses, necessitating an adjournment. They were taken before Cato and admitted to bail in sums of $500 each. The plot was unknown to Geary, and there being no resistance, there was no excuse for calling on him for troops, and the plot miscarried.

Sheriff Jones now resigned in favor of one Sherard, an ignorant and debauched bully of the most brutal Pro-slavery type. Hence Geary delayed Sherard's commission, at which Sherard cursed and threatened him, causing further delay. The county tribunal now requested Geary to not commission him at all and it would make another nomination. Sherard, chafing under delay, assulted the Governor's clerk, and threatened Geary's life. Thoroughly armed he met the Governor on the stairs of the legislative hall and tried to provoke a quarrel, heaping upon hin opprobrious epithets and finally spit upon him.

Geary applied to the legislature for redress and protection, which was refused. Then he appealed to the commander of United States troops at Leavenworth, but to no purpose. But the order loving people of both parties, especially at Lecompton, held meetings, offering sympathy to Geary and condemning Sherard. This so exasperated Sherard that he denounced anyone as a coward, liar and scoundrel who would endorse the resolutions of the meeting at Lecompton. To this one Shepard took exception, when both Sherard and Shepard emptied their revolvers at each other, Shepard being seriously wounded.

Sherard then advanced upon the Governor's clerk, who was now prepared, and shots being exchanged, Sherard fell mortally wounded. Sherard had friends of a mysterious character, who met and passed resolutions paying a glowing tribute to the excellency of his character. By this Geary understood that his life was still in jeopardy, and from time to time discovered men lurking about suspiciously and shadowing his movements. After repeated warnings he secretly sent his resignation to the President, and at once liberated all the prisoners under sentence. Then he told Secretary Woodson he would be absent a few days "on account of his health," but never returned as Governor. Like his predecessor, he had to steal out of the Territory, a wiser and better man than when he entered it.

SWORN TO PUT DOWN SECRET SOCIETIES.

One hundred and ninety delegates from all parts of the United States and Canada were present when the forty-third session of the International Typographical union was called to order Oct. 12, at Colorado Springs, Colo., by President William B. Prescott. Rev. E. Carrington, of Pueblo, delivered an address which aroused great enthusiasm. In his biennial address, President Prescott said that in spite of adverse conditions during the past five years the union was stronger today numerically and financially than ever before in its history. Committees were appointed to arrange the work in convention, and delegates spent the afternoon visiting points of interest in the vicinity.

The most important committee to report is the one appointed to investigate the condition of the Child's Drexel Institute, and to make suggestions as to the course to be pursued for the relief and care of indigent printers. The principal matter of business to-day was administering to the delegates an iron-clad oath, binding them to do all in their power to put down certain secret societies, known as the Brotherhood in St. Louis, the Carton League and the Juanita in New York. It is claimed these secret societies exist in the unions in the above cities, and that they are formed to control the election of the officers and the legislation of the international union in favor of certain subordinate unions throughout the country. The matter created considerable excitement, but finally every delegate present and some fifty ex-delegates rose and took the oath.

CALL FOR THE PENNSYLVANIA CONVENTION

To the friends of the anti-secrecy cause in Pennsylvania, greeting: It has been thought wise to hold our annual convention this year in autumn rather than spring as heretofore. You are hereby invited to assemble in the Green Tree Brethren church, Oaks, Montgomery county, Nov. 18th, at 2 P. M, to listen to addresses, engage in discussion and transact such business as may come before the convention. The convention will continue its sessions through the following day and evening. Rev. W. B. Stoddard will arrange and report details. Let all come who can. Come in the fear of God and in prayer, believing that he will be present in the mighty operations of his spirit, and the wonderful manifestation of his truth. We request earnest supplication, by all the friends who read this call, for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon this convention. We go forward believing that our Lord will be present to work mightily for his own cause, and assured that he will not disappoint our expectation. "According to your faith, so shall it be."

REFORM NEWS.

INTERESTING PITTSBURGH CAMPAIGN.

ON B. & O. TRAIN FOR SMITHFIELD, Pa., Oct. 28, 1896

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Rev. H. B. Hemmeter, of Pittsburgh, was recently inquiring the reason why religious exercises were conducted in connection with the so-called beneficiary secret societies. He was officially informed that these exercises were to enable them to evade the law applying to insurance societies. I requested that he send this interesting information, together with such comment as he may desire to make, to the Cynosure. I do not think that the majority of those who connect with such minor societies as the Royal Arcanum are aware that these organizations use religion as a means of evading law.

I stayed last Thursday night at the home of Bro. J. J George, of Primrose, Washington Co., Pa. His horse and carriage conveyed me through mud and rain the following day. Quite in contrast with the weather was the cordial reception to the homes of friends. All subscribed for the Cynosure, when asked.

Saturday found me in Allegheny attending a district meeting of the Joint Synod of Ohio Lutherans. There were eighty or more pastors present. Though much pressed with church work, they unanimously voted to give me a hearing, and set the time. The reports of church work indicated an encouraging degree of progress. The treasurer's report was gratifying. That these brethren are not only committed against the lodge but actively engaged in seeking its overthrow, was very evident. In concluding my remarks I called attention to Bro. Phillips' notification that more subscriptions to the Lodge Lamp were desired. Twenty-five subscriptions were given, several taking two copies.

Sabbath was spent with my brother-in-law, Mr. Steele, of Wilkinsburg. He is a Cynosure reader and thoroughly orthodox. I attended the Covenanter church, and responded to the invitation to take part in the services. Our work was remembered in prayer by Dr. Wylie, the pastor.

Monday evening I preached in what is known as "Hope Mission," 111 Market St., Pittsburgh. This mission is located in a dark part of the city. It is proving a blessing to many. Benighted and besotted souls are brought to behold the light of life and rejoice in its illumination. Many glowing testimonies told of lives, almost wrecked, rescued by the Mighty to save. A Sister Morgan spoke of being especially glad to meet your agent. She had been told of our work by Sister Ella Reidy, and had a desire to know more of it. She related many interesting experiences in her opposition to lodgery. A bright young man who dropped in from Tarentum, Pa., subscribed for the Cynosure. He will use it in mission work at home.

Yesterday afternoon at 2:45 I filled the appointment kindly made by the professors of Allegheny R. P. Seminary. I requested in opening my remarks that the students ask questions. If they had met any obstacles in replying to the so-called lodge arguments, they were asked to make them known. The questions indicated a fair knowledge of the subject, and no little interest. Dr. Wilson, in introducing your agent, spoke of the special need of pastors informing themselves, and read a clipping from a paper reporting a speech made by a Baptist minister to lodgemen. This man took the "Good Samaritan" as his text. His misapplication of Scripture was amazing. It was what one would naturally have expected from an agent of the devil, turning the truth of God into a lie to please his sin-blinded comrades. A unanimous vote of thanks, together with fourteen subscriptions to the Lodge Lamp, were given. God bless these young men. They are all reformers.

Friends who are expecting to attend the State convention will be glad to know that there is a prospect of having Pres. C. A. Blanchard with us. He is wanted for lectures near Pittsburgh. A week's work is planned, including his presence at the convention. Look for definite information next week. I hope then to send the program in full. By all means make your plans to attend this great meeting.

Our train nears Smithfield. A friend is to convey me five miles from there to fill my appointments for Wednesday and Thursday evenings. If all is well I reach Washington, D. C., Friday evening. On to Oaks Monday. Friends can address me at Oaks, Montgomery Co., Pa., until the State convention.

OCT. 30 —My two lectures given in the Mennonite church near Masontown, Pa., were largely attended. It is said the church will seat 550 persons. It was nearly filled the first evening. On last evening many stood at the windows and doors, unable to obtain seats. The attendance was no doubt due to the thorough advertising of brethren Durr, Barre, Debolt, Loucks, and others interested. I was taken from and to the train and fed on chicken.

I gave my audience, in which were many connected with the lodges, the best I had. All were interested. The comments varied to harmonize with the character, belief and condition of the one making them. Other churches were promised near by, if I would return and lecture at any future time. The most of those asked, subscribed for the Cynosure.

S. T. Gray, proprietor of a large distillery at Masontown, died yesterday. As he was a good Mason he has no doubt reached their "Grand Lodge." The remains of this dispenser of damnation are to be buried Saturday. No doubt his brother Masons will deposit the white apron in his grave as an emblem of his innocence.

This was my first visit in the western part of Fayette county. There are many plain, honest people there. I hope soon to visit them again. Now for the State convention work. Ere this reaches Cynosure readers I hope to have the program arranged. W. B. STODDARD.

BRO. P. B. WILLIAMS IN CALIFORNIA.

SAVING MEN FROM THE LODGE.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Oct. 19, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The meeting at Clearwater has taken on considerable interest. Quite a number have been saved. Some professors have sought and obtained entire sanctification. The members of all churches participating in the meeting claim great spiritual benefit from it. The community is considerably stirred, and deep conviction rests on many. Oh, that they may yield to Jesus. I wish to say here, that I have been very kindly treated by all the dear people. Very hospitably entertained by strangers who are now dear friends. The people of Clearwater have so endeared themselves to me, that I am compelled to say, I hate to leave them.

I commenced on Saturday night the 10th, preached three times on Sabbath the 11th, and each evening during the week, and three times on yesterday, being the second Sabbath of the meeting. Yesterday afternoon I spoke for two hours on "The Evils of Secret Societies." The hall was well filled with attentive listeners. It was, to say the least, a model crowd to speak to. The lodgemen present stood fire well, and though they made an attempt afterward to justifiy their "order," it was a weak defense, for the reason it cannot be defended.

One man said, "One member of my lodge (Odd-fellows) has drawn out in sick benefits over six thousand dollars." Counting him at twenty-four dollars a month, he would have to be sick over twenty-one years. And allowing for the time in the intervals between the thirteen weeks' allowance according to their laws, it would make him an old man indeed, He would answer for their patriarch they use in their initiation without any "dressing up." I venture the remark that there is not an Odd fellow in the State of California who has received one-half of six thousand dollars, unless it be some one who has stolen it from some subordinate lodge or the Grand Lodge.

There were men present who had belonged to the order, and testified that I gave it straight; and many were the expressions of gratitude, even by outsiders, for the address. One gentleman said to Elder Tibbett, "I had gone so far as to send in my application to join the Freemasons." The elder says to him, "What do you think about it now?" He answerd, "I am glad I did not get in before I heard that address. I will never join them now."

Mr. Editor, such words are encouraging to us, and we love to hear them, and thank God for them and take courage to press the battle on. One brother here, who joined the church, agreed to leave two secret societies. Quite a number subscribed for the Cynosure and two for the Lodge Lamp, and we feel that it will take the lodgemen and their sympathizers a long while to smile away the arguments and the impressions we made at Clearwater yesterday. May the Lord bless all, and open all eyes to see the great evil of organized secrecy. P. B. WILLIAMS.

FROM OUR MISSOURI COLPORTEUR.

ST. JOHN, Mo., Oct. 21, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have been at work since Oct. 10th in Yates Center, Americus, Emporia, Moody and Kansas City, Kan., also at Chillicothe, Gault and Lucerne, Mo. In Moody a young lady, who was a Star Mason, looked over the exposition and said it was not correct, and that Masonry could not possibly be exposed. Here also I met a commercial traveler for a Kansas City firm, who said that they made him saw wood while being initiated in the A. O. U. W. It made him angry, and when his friends taunted him about it he denied it, and then went back and helped to work the same mean trick on the next man who was initiated.

In Americus I found Bro. J. G. Bignol, who, I believe, is the third preacher I have met that is preaching openly against secrecy. Bro. Pyle here tells me that a few years ago an anti-secret lecturer was mobbed six miles west of here, and walked to Americus, arriving at 2 A. M. under the escort of friends. While I was on the street here showing my literature, one man denounced as false all that was in the books. He appealad to an old Freemason in the crowd, but the old man said that every word he saw in the exposition was true. He testified that he was now a Christian and denounced Freemasonry. His wife, who had been a Star Mason, has also renounced that order, with two other secret orders to which she belonged. It was at Americus I met one of the most devoted Christians, Mrs. H. Pyle, who is sighing and crying for the sins of the people of that town.

The Free Methodists are holding prayer meetings and regular preaching services each week. But there are high degree Masons who declare before God that all expositions of Freemasonry are false, and that a man who has taken the higher degrees can't help but be a Christian, for he has sworn to defend the cause of Christ. No wonder that some say while there is a great cry for missionaries to go to the heathen lands, yet we have worse heathenism in all of our cities and towns, and practiced by ministers themselves. I pray God to hasten the time when we will be delivered from such dangerous leaders.

John the Revelator says: "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last; blessed are they that do his commandments that they may have a right to the tree of life and may enter in through the gates into the city; for without are dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolators and whoever loveth and maketh a lie." Paul says to the Corinthians, "Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived," Christ says, "they will say unto me in the last day, have we not prophecied in thy name, and have we not cast out devils in thy name, and in thy name done many wonderful works, and yet will I say unto them, depart from me ye workers of iniquity, I never knew you."

RAPIDLY APPROACHING A CRISIS.

St. Paul, Minn., Oct. 28, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—If Sabbath-school papers published the truth which the Lodge Lamp publishes they likewise would be forbidden transportation in the mails as they are now carried. It is a well-known fact that they do not publish such unpopular truth, and the Freemasons also know it. To hold back the truth in unrighteousness as the majority of Christian publications do, is falsehood, against which the wrath of God is revealed from heaven. Read Rom. 1:18.

I am doing all that I can do to get subscribers. I met a Methodist D. D. on the street the other day; he is a pastor, and I asked him if he received the Lodge Lamp. He replied in the negative; his subscription has expired. I asked him to renew. To this he replied: "I cannot afford it." Now he belongs to two secret societies, G. A. R 's and G. T.'s, and while he says that, he knows that his bishops and brother pastors are Masons and good Christians, he cannot believe that what their "Ecce Orienti" say that Masons swear to is true. And if he did believe it to be true he would think it is all right, because his lodge gods blind his eyes to the truth. It is extremely difficult to get any one to subscribe for the Lodge Lamp or any other paper that tells the truth. However I will do all that I can.

A Freemason takes possession of this postoffice on the 1st of November. And if McKinley is elected, a Freemason will be President of the United States. Last Monday I called on the pastor of one of the most luxurious and wealthy churches in this city; he is a 33rd-degree Mason, loves Masonry, preaches in favor of it, and has the Masons assemble in his church as such on Easter. Says that Masonry is a great blessing to the world, and that when young men ask him in regard to it he always advises them by all means to join; it will keep them, he says, from the saloons, clubs and bad places; that it puts him in fellowship with Jews, and by means of Masonry he had been able to bring them to unite with his church, many of them while he was a pastor in Boston. He says that he is acquainted with the Masonic works of Oliver, Mackey, Sickels, etc. Oh, dear me!

A pastor who subscribes for the Cynosure said, that all he knew about the paper was, that an Episcopal pastor, who is a Freemason, showed him a copy of it on the sly, and ever since he saw it he has been wanting to get it. "The whole world lieth in the wicked one," and things are approaching a crisis with amazing rapidity.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NO INTERFERENCE WITH THE TURK.

Beloit, Ala., Oct. 20, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—I see in your issue of Oct. 22d, a quotation from the speech of Hon. E. F. Wheeler before the American Board of Missions, in which he urges the sending of a powerful fleet to the Mediterranean accompanied by a sufficient number of troops to demand at the commonwealth what has been denied to our diplomacy.

I yield to no one in my detestation and horror at the cruelties of the Turkish government, and her utter disregard of treaty obligation, but war is not the remedy.

1. It would be a departure from our traditional policy of abstaining from all European affairs. It would almost inevitably involve us in war with Turkey, and perhaps with Russia and other European powers.

2. It would inflict suffering and death upon great numbers who are in no way responsible for the wrongs done to Americans or to our missionaries, while the persons really guilty would escape any personal penalty.

3. It would give our national endorsement to the spirit, the practice and the methods of war, all of which are wholly un-Christian.

4. It would be a confession of the failure of diplomacy, arbitration and all other moral influences as the methods for the settlement of international wrongs, and would put back the time when there can be a general disarmament and men can "beat their swords in plowshares, and learn war no more."

Far better it would be to adopt the plan recommended by Mr. Gladstone in his recent speech at Chester, England, of withdrawing all diplomatic relations from the Turkish government until such times as it should show itself worthy of belonging to the family of nations. Should the United States, together with Great Britain, do this, it would more strongly appeal to the fears of Turkey and the moral sense of mankind than any fleet or army that could be sent into Turkish waters. Such withdrawal of national recognition would be strictly in harmony with both human and divine law, and be open to no objection, even from those who regarded it as but a preliminary measure.

But would not that be leaving our missionaries as well as the Armenians to the mercies of the Turk? No more so than when they first went there sixty years ago. No more so than were the apostles and the primitive Christians at the mercy of the Roman empire. The truth is, that all our foreign missionaries are presumed to go out in the name of the Lord, and dependent on him for protection, and on moral influences solely for success in their work. It was by these methods that the primitive church made such wonderful progress and modern missions have been such a marked success. Wherever Christian work has been made dependent on the power of the sword it has ignominiously failed. When the Armenians will cease from their vain attempts to right their own wrongs by a resort to war, and together with the missionaries will appeal to Him who is mighty to save, they may expect deliverance.

SAD CONDITION OF ARMENIA.

Chicago, Ill., Oct. 21, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—One of the saddest results of the massacres in Armenia is the helplessness of the thousands of orphaned children, some of whom have lost both parents by death, and others whose fathers have given up their lives for the love of Christ, and whose mothers are suffering the torments of the lost in Turkish harems. From the district of Silvan, near Diar, comes the following report of their condition:

"In our going about among the villages, we saw girls, not a few, who had returned from the hands of their captors, weeping bitterly, shrieking and crying, 'We are defiled, defiled! No one will take us in marriage, for not only are we defiled, but those who would, notwithstanding that, take us, dare not for fear of our captors; and, also, the young men are few, most of them having been slain by the sword. Our fathers and mothers have been killed and we are become vagrants. What shall we no; whither shall we go; to whom shall we turn for protection? Alas!' The writer continues.

"How pitiable, how hard and bitter such a lot, especially for girls in their weakness, bodily, mentally, morally, spiritually. With my loudest voice I beg you to find some relief for them. We have already found a great many such; they can easily be brought away, and are anxious to be delivered at the earliest possible moment. Wherever we see them, they are imploring, crying out and begging for deliverance. There are, also, many children in a most pitiable condition. There are many other things, even worse than what I have mentioned, that I have not time to write."

From Malatia one of the Relief Committee writes: "There are between 2,500 and 3,000 orphans here. The greater part of them have mothers living, as not many women were killed. About 1,500 were killed, and they were almost entirely of the bread-winning class. This leaves the population extremely destitute."

Later a member of the Relief Commitee at Harpoot writes: "One feature of the situation calls for serious thought and effort. It is the large number of widows and orphans left without any bread winners on whom to depend for support. A careful canvass of the city of Malatia and seven near villages, shows that there are 1,883 orphans and 630 widows there. The number in Arabkir is said to be even larger. In the village of Haboosi there are between thirty and forty orphans who wander about the streets as the dogs do, eating and sleeping where they can. Every town and village furnishes its contingent of widows and orphans, and the villagers are too engrossed in the struggle to provide bread for their own families to care for these helpless ones as they would ordinarily do. What is to become of them?"

THE CAUSE OF HARD TIMES.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 28, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—Endorsing the efforts to lessen the number of licensed saloons does not prevent the expression of emphatic opinions against the entire license system. For instance, at a "no-license" meeting held in the Fifteenth Street M. E church, under W. C. T. U. auspicies, Rev. W. W. Van Arsdale, pastor of that church, said: "The greatest foe with which the community and the country has to contend is the liquor traffic. It is equally the greatest enemy of the home, the church and the nation. No matter how high an authority may be, it cannot make legitimate or respectable that which is neither. There are more crimes and fouler crimes traceable to the saloon than to any other source. People who advocate high license merely desire to regulate crime for money.

"The liquor crime is on a par with murder. The legalized fee placed by the government on iniquity and crime makes it a participant in it. Any man who enters the liquor business loses his self-respect. Licensing the traffic has been tried for 400 years, but in all that time the sin has increased instead of diminished. God never intended that a protecting shield should be thrown over iniquity. One who is guilty of knowingly signing a petition for the licensing of a saloon in his block is as guilty of sin in the eyes of God as the man who sells the liquor."

Rev. E B Bagby, pastor of the Ninth Street Christian church, and ex-chaplain of the House of Representatives, preached an interesting sermon on "Hard Times and How to Make Them Easy," this week, from the text, "Charge them that are rich in this world's goods that they be not high minded." He said in part: "A glance backward over the last twelve months will give an idea what makes, and who are crying hard times. Last year over a billion dollars were spent for liquor and another billion for theatre tickets; six hundred million for tobacco and cigars, and millions for baseball tickets."

THE LODGE AND THE SALOON.

SIXTH LETTER.

Blanchard, Iowa, Oct. 19, 1896.

Editor Cynosure:—It is due to the Missouri officers, to say that there was no plot laid to drag anyone across the line; it was an inspiration of the moment. We state this because litigation grew out of that arrest. Its legality was at first disputed, but it was proved by other arrests of a similar character to be all right; nevertheless the temperance people, to gratify the clamor of the lodgemen, set the druggist free, and had him arrested by requisition of the governor.

They did this also to show the magnitude of his crime, for requisitions are not given for small offiences. There are lodgemen in power in Missouri, but the temperance people had them bound beforehand by word and honor to go by the law; and because of the magnitude of the crime and the operations of local circumstances they could not do otherwise than keep their word.

The first trial was appointed to be held at Hazel Grove schoolhouse, two miles south of Blanchard, and when the hour arrived the good people were there in such numbers that the officers realized that the law must be executed. Here we want to say that we had an officer worthy of honor in Justice Hurst. He stood nobly by the law and the right from the beginning to the end.

The criminals took a change of venue to Rockport, the county seat of Atchison county, Mo. This town is noted both for its lodges and its saloons, but this much can be said to its credit, they do everything according to law. They even get drunk according to law. But our men had violated the law, and when this was known, they found no sympathy in Rockport. They were found guilty, and their crime was so great that it was impossible for them to pay the fines that might have been imposed.

The good people now showed that they were good and Christlike. They did not thirst for their brothers' blood as the lodgemen reported. All they asked was that goodness and peace and law should reign in our town. Hence, they did not insist on these criminals being sent to the pen, as we know now that they should have done. Under these circumstances the court only imposed what the criminals were able to pay, and set them free. Temperance had won the day; the saloon was a thing of the past, and all good people were willing to forgive and forget, and to move on in sobriety, love and peace. But the lodge druggist had no thought of this. He was no sooner set free than he began to plan for revenge.

J. R WYLIE.

CHRISTIANITY VS. ODD-FELLOWSHIP.

LARWILL, Ind., Oct. 16, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In studying the nature and tendency of Odd-fellowship, I find it more subtle in deceiving those who are drawn into its magic net than other secret societies. In the initiatory degree the candidate passes through a ceremony of high-sounding words and solemn Scripture quotations which no doubt make him feel serious. Like the fly lured into the spider's web and held there until dead, so the candidate goes on until he has taken one, two and more degrees. Finally, after being solemnly advised by the Vice Grand that "it is my duty to administer to you a solemn and binding obligation, one which we have all taken, but which will not conflict with any of those exalted duties you owe to your God, your country, your family or yourself,—with this assurance, are you willing to take such an obligation?"

The candidate answers, "I am," and takes the third obligation, which firmly fixes the web of Satan's craftiness around him, where he will be left to die spiritually unless the saving grace of God comes to his rescue.

Dear reader, do you think the candidate is told the truth when the above assurance is given? In order that we may rightly decide this question. I will quote the obligation in full:

I, —— ——, in the presence of the brothers of the order now assembled, do solemnly promise that I will never communicate to anyone, unless directed to do so by a legal lodge, the signs, tokens or grip, the term, traveling or other passwords belonging to the Independent Order of Odd-fellows. Nor will I expose or lend any of the books or papers relating to the records or secret work of the order to any person or persons, except to one specially authorized to receive them; that I will never reveal any private business which may be transacted in my presence in this or any other lodge. I also promise that I will abide by the laws, rules and regulations of this lodge, of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd-fellows of (here name of State) or any other Grand or working lodge to which I may be attached. I further promise that I will never wrong a Subordinate or Grand Lodge to the value of anything. Nor will I take part, or share directly or indirectly, in any illegal distribution of the funds or other property of the lodge, but will, to the best of my ability, endeavor to prevent the same. Nor will I wrong a brother or see him wronged without apprising him of approaching danger, if in my power so to do. Should I be expelled or voluntarily leave the order, I will consider this promise as binding out of it as in it. To the faithful performance of all which I pledge my sacred honor.

After this the Vice Grand gives the following instructions, which I give only in part:

"Stranger, you have now entered into a society that is far more important than you may at first imagine. It conforms to law, to religion and sound morality, and does not permit anything contrary to the allegiance we owe to our country or the duty we owe to ourselves. Let good conduct procure you the esteem of your family and friends."

Now, dear reader, go back with me and see whether or not it will do what they claim for its members.

I claim it is a falsehood. In the first place, it conflicts with the exalted duty man owes to God, by breaking his divine command, Thou shalt not forswear thyself. It binds to do, under oath, you know not what; it may be positively sinful.

2. By surrendering liberty of conscience; that is, instead of deciding whether or not it is right to take such an obligation, the candidate surrenders it entirely to the man that administers the same.

3. The name of Jesus Christ is entirely excluded.

4. It denies free thought and free speech in the clause of the obligation which reads: "Should I be expelled or voluntarily leave the order, I will consider this promise as binding out of it as in it." So you see, if a man afterward sees that it is wrong, it forever forbids him saying anything about it to anyone.

5. He binds himself to abide by the laws, rules and regulations of the Grand Lodge of the State, or any other Grand or working lodge of the I. O. O. F. Look at the inconsistency of a Christian, and especially a minister of the Gospel, who has never been asked to make such a vow by any church or class of God-fearing people, binding himself to abide by rules and regulations of which it is not even expected he should know or understand the first principles; men who ought to be, by precept and example, warning the people of the unfruitful works of darkness, and crying aloud, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." But, alas! alas! we have a goodly number of ministers who, instead of ascending the hill of the Lord and abiding until endued with power from on high, they ascend the steps leading to the lodge-room; and after being blindfolded and going through a lot of tomfoolery, then comes out and, owl-like, looks wise, and thereby deceives many who are in need of being warned of the secret combinations which are not for good but for evil.

I cannot see how Christians, especially ministers, can escape the righteous indignation of a just God; and if they do not truly repent they will, in the day of judgment, receive the greater damnation.

6. And he further promises that he will never wrong a subordinate or Grand Lodge to the value of anything. Nor will he take part or share, directly or indirectly, in any illegal distribution of the funds or other property of the lodge, but will, to the best of my ability, endeavor to prevent the same; nor will he wrong a brother (Odd-fellow) or see him wronged without apprising him of approaching danger, if in his power to do so. I wish to raise the question, how much protection or safety, in the above obligation, is assured to a man or men as the case may be, that they will not be taken advantage of in any kind of a business transaction with Odd fellows? Is an Odd-fellow under any obligation, in accordance with the above, to be either truthful or honest with his fellowman outside the brotherhood?

No, he is not; but on the contrary, it gives him license to take advantage of his fellowman outside the brotherhood regardless of right or wrong, and this is contrary to the divine command, "thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," or as you wish that others should do unto you, do ye even so unto them.

JOHN HELFRICH.

THE A. M. A.'S JUBILEE.

BOSTON, Mass., Oct. 22, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The fiftieth anniversary of the American Missionary Association was held in Tremont Temple, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, Oct. 20, 21, 22 The addresses of welcome were delivered by Governor Roger Wolcott on behalf of the commonwealth of Massachusetts, and Mayor Josiah Quincy for the city of Boston. The responses were by Rev. Samuel E. Herrick, D. D., pastor of Mt. Vernon church, on behalf of the church, and President Merrill E. Gates, LL D, president of Amherst College and society, on behalf of the president of the association. The annual report of the executive committee was read by Rev. A. J. Lyman, D D., of Brooklyn, N. Y. It set forth that the debt of the association had been reduced from $96 000 to $66 000. The association has received in contributions and legacies $26,000 more than last year. Of this amount $20 000 has been subscribed and paid into the "Jubilee Share Fund."

Last year the expenditures were $75,000 less than those of 1893. Work has been done on behalf of five different races in our land. This consists in establishing and supporting churches, missions and schools of all grades, primary, normal, high school and college. This work is carried on among 8 000,000 colored people through the South, 2,000,000 poor whites in the Appalachian Highlands, the Indians of the Dakotas, Montana, Nebraska and Washington, the Eskimos of Alaska and the Chinese of the Pacific Coast

In the South there are six chartered institutions, 43 normal and graded schools, 27 common schools, 413 instructors and 12,449 pupils. The number of colored people who could not read and write in 1890, was the same as when they were emancipated in 1863, but then there were only half so many, and 4,000,000 have been taken from the ranks of illiteracy. In the past ten years the illiteracy among the poor whites has been reduced fourteen per cent. There are 218 churches established among the colored people, with 10,708 members, and 127 ministers and missionaries.

Among the Indians fifteen churches have been established with 929 members, 82 missionaries and teachers, 21 schools, 520 pupils and 26 missionary out-stations. The funds available for this work have been reduced from $57,880 to $35,000 during the past year, and this has crippled the work. The Santee Normal Training-school for Indian boys and girls has been reduced from 241 pupils in 1893, to 93 in 1896. Of the native Indian missionary societies of the Dakotas, six jubilee share pledges of $50 each, making a gift of $300, were pledged to the A. M. A.

The Alaska mission at Cape Prince of Wales, Alaska, is the only one under the auspices of this association in that northland. It was temporarily closed, but now is open. The missionary, in connection with his school and church work, keeps a herd of reindeer. They furnish food and means of transportation to the Eskimos.

The Chinese Missionary Society was organized in 1866. They commenced work in Canton, China, in 1890. They have already contributed $15,000 to mission work in China. They have a property in Canton valued at $4,000. They have property in Hong Kong valued at $9,250. They have also a twenty-years lease of a chapel in Ci Ning. The Chinese missions in California have educated and sent back to China, Chinese workers who have reached 300,000 Chinese with the Gospel. An interesting mission was also established among the Chinamen in Salt Lake City. The Women's Missionary Union has contributed $229,000 to the A. M. A's. treasury. During this year $29,021 21, the largest amount ever given in one year, has been contributed.

In the evening Rev. Lyman Abbott, D. D., delivered a sermon from Matt. 23:8. "But be not ye called Rabbi, for one is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren." Each nation gave a message. The Greek's message was truth; the Romans, order; the Germans, liberty, and the American message is brotherhood. Every national campaign is an educational force. Our questions are to be debated and settled in a good-natured and courteous way. How shall the superior treat the inferior race? The old Roman method was to conquer and make tributary. The Turkish method is to exterminate. We treated the Negro after the first method and the Indian after the second. But Christ's method is to create a brotherhood. Free the slaves, give the Indians their rights. Educate the poor whites, the Negroes and the Indians. Lead all to Christ, whose blood cleanses from all sin. And thus, whether white or black or red, a man's a man for a' that and a' that.

The Fisk University Jubilee Double Quartette rendered fascinating music at each session. On Wednesday morning, Rev. Joseph H. Twichell, Conneticut, gave his experience as a worker among the Chinamen; and Rev. A. I. Riggs, D.D, Nebraska, and Arthur Tebbetts, Cannon Ball Mission, North Dakota, described their work among the Indians. Rev. Henry Hopkins, D. D., Missouri, gave the address of the morning. At noon on Wednesday and Thursday a patriotic meeting was held in Faneuil Hall. The addresses were worthy of the occasion and the men.

On Wednesday afternoon Rev. James Brown, of Alabama, a graduate of Talladega University, and for six years a pastor of a large congregation of colored people, spoke of the church work among the Negroes, and J. R. Savage, for several years a professor in the above university, spoke of the school work among his people. They urged that the church and the schoolhouse were the agencies for lifting their people up. The idea that work means slavery and freedom means idleness must be rooted out, and the dignity of freedom to work inculcated. The hand and head must be developed proportionately. And the heart must be moved by the life of Christ Jesus our Lord.

How to Treat the Eyes.

Never poultice an eye under any circumstances whatever. Binding a wet application over an eye for several hours must damage the eye, the assertions of those professing to have personal experience in this to the contrary notwithstanding.

The failure to aggravate an existing trouble by binding a moist application over an inflamed eye, which application is supposed to remain for an entire night, can only be explained by the supposition that a guardian angel has watched over that misguided case and has displaced the poultice before it had got in its fine work. All oculists condemn the poultice absolutely, in every shape and in every form. Tea leaves, bread and milk, raw oysters, scraped beef, scraped raw turnip or raw potato and the medley of disgusting domestic remedies popularly recommended are, one and all, capable of producing irremediable damage to the integrity of the tissues of the visual organ.

How to Wear Your Handkerchief.

Just now the only proper way is to tuck the little square of linen and lace in one's sleeve at the wrist, allowing it to fall and partially conceal the hand, somewhat after the manner of the pretty wrist flounces on the new sleeves. Do not commit so marked a breach of good form as to tuck your handkerchief in at any part of your bodice, but if you want to get the full ornamental value from its pretty border of point de venise or Irish lace, no more effectual method could be devised than this newest fashion.

How to Steady Pictures.

A housemaid with a duster is everlastingly setting askew small pictures and the average room after dusting looks sadly awry. All sorts of picture hooks have been invented which are supposed to so grip the picture cord that it will always hold the picture evenly on the wall. Then, again, corner clamps have been brought out, one for each corner of the picture, the clamps being driven into the wall, but everything of that sort has some objection. The simplest and most infallible way of holding a picture immovable is by making a small gimlet hole in the extreme lower point of the inside of the frame, where it touches the wall, and at this point drive a small brad into the wall, leaving about half an inch protruding. The hole in the frame caps this brad like a socket, and the ordinary dusting of the picture does not move it in the least.

How to Make Tomato Jelly.

One can of tomatoes or eight medium sized ones skinned and stewed. Pass through a sieve and add to them one-fourth of a box of gelatin which has been dissolved in a little hot water. Season with pepper and salt, stir well and pour into a mold and place on ice. When cold and set, garnish with crisp lettuce. This is excellent for salads.

How the Thimble Originated.

Holland claims to have invented the thimble, though it is also claimed that explorers in the ruins of Herculaneum have found many of these useful little articles.

The Anglo-Saxons called it a thymel, or thumb stall, as it was first worn on the thumb, as sailors now wear it when making their sails, etc.

The manufacture of them was first introduced into England from Holland in 1695, and they were then made of iron, horn and leather, but in the progress of civilization and art the precious metals were used, and now they are often set with precious and semiprecious stones, adding to their beauty, but not to their usefulness.

How to Remove Mildew.

Mildew may be removed from cloth by rubbing the piece discolored with soft soap and then covering it with chalk and putting it in strong sunlight.

How to Make Sachet Powder.

An agreeable perfume which is also a preventive to moths is made as follows: Take of cloves, caraway seeds, nutmeg, mace, cinnamon and Tonquin beans each an ounce; then add as much Florentine orris root as will equal the other ingredients put together. Grind the whole well to powder and put it in little bags among your clothes. This will retain its freshness for a long time and will daintily perfume the clothes.

How to Treat a Sick Baby.

For children suffering with summer troubles the following will be found excellent:

Boil a cupful of water, and in it, mixed with cold water, put 2 teaspoonfuls of prepared flour; then take malted milk and mix with 2 spoonfuls of unsweetened condensed milk and pour on the flour. To prepare flour: Boil 2 quarts of flour for five hours (tie it up in a cloth); take off the outside when done, and you will find a solid ball of flour; grate as you want to use it.

Besides curing the complaint the malted milk assists digestion, the condensed milk will fatten and the flour makes bone and muscle, while as a blood producer nothing is better than to give the little one every day the blood from half a pound of meat very slightly broiled before pressing. Add a little salt to flavor.

How to Clean Burned Dishes.

Baking dishes that become burned in the oven and plates and platters that become blackened with the food scorched upon them should not go through the tedious process of scraping. Simply put a little water and ashes in the dish and let it become warm, and the burnt and discolored portions may be easily cleaned without injuring the dish.

The Christian Cynosure.

REV. M. A. GAULT, - - - EDITOR.
WM. I. PHILLIPS, - - - PUBLISHER.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 1896.

IMPOSSIBILITY OF CONCEALMENT.

"No man, when he hath lighted a candle, covereth it with a vessel or putteth it under a bed; but setteth it on a candlestick, that they which enter in may see the light. For nothing is secret that shall not be made manifest; neither anything hid that shall not be known and come abroad."—Luke 8: 16, 17.

Our Lord here warns against attempting to conceal or monopolize any principle or law of his religion. And he bases this warning upon two important features of Christianity:

1. Its absolute unselfishness. It finds its great happiness in sharing its blessings with others. It is at war with the practice of secret orders in confining their light and good things to a select circle. Secretism or concealment is hostile to the very nature of Christianity.

2. It is in vain to attempt to conceal, because by a law of Divine Providence every secret thing shall be revealed. "Murder will out" is a maxim framed out of the experience of the ages. The Freemason who walks our streets vainly imagines that the uninitiated do not know what he does inside the lodge. But the revelations of scores of Masons who have come out from the lodge, and published its inside workings to the world, so that to any intelligent reader it is clearly manifested what is done in these dark chambers. But however men may succeed in keeping secrets on this side the grave, yet in the intense light of the great white throne the last day must reveal every secret work.

PROF. JOHN ROBISON, LL. D.

Our readers will note that we have quoted frequently of late from a book entitled "A Conspiracy Against all Religions and Governments." It was written by an Edinburgh professor and published in New York in 1798 We attach great importance to it because it was the first Anti-masonic book on record. The prominence of the author, who was a Freemason and distinguished educator, and who had intimate relations with European governments, and who was familiar with the actors and history of the French Revolution, all contribute to make this book the most striking testimony against the lodge hitherto published. It is highly probable that this book had much to do in opening the eyes of William Morgan and the Anti-masons of his time.

The following facts regarding the life of Dr. John Robison, the author of this remarkable book, we take from Johnson's Universal Cyclopædia.

He was born at Boghall, Sterlingshire, Scotland, in 1739, and graduated at the University of Glasgow in 1756 He was employed as tutor in the British Navy, and accompanied the expedition to Quebec in 1759. He was called to the professorship of Natural Philosophy in Glasgow University in 1766 He went to Russia as secretary to Admiral Sir Charles Knowles in 1770, and was made inspector of the corps of Marine Cadets at Cronstadt, with the rank of Lieutenant Colonel, in 1772. He was professor of Natural Philosophy in the University of Edinburgh from 1774 till his death, Jan. 30, 1805

Besides his book on Masonic conspiracy, he was the author, in 1803, of two volumes of lectures on the Elements of Chemistry. In 1804 he published "Elements of Mechanical Philosophy." He was also the author of numerous contributions on natural science to the Encyclopædia Britannica, and of four volumes entitled "A System of Mechanical Philosophy."

"I LOVE THY KINGDOM, LORD."

"I love thy kingdom, Lord, the house of thine abode."

This couplet has been sung by many spiritual Christians, and presents the test standard of all genuine members of the Church of Christ. There are some things which act as an index to our love of the cause of our Redeemer. One of these is regularity in attendance upon worship. Wild animals visit their watering places regularly; saloon patrons visit their poisoned fountains regularly; lodge devotees with pride refer to their record of being absent from the raising of Hiram but once in five years. Christians should be regularly at church. The centers in which we are found most are those toward which we gravitate, from the law of affinity.

"I love thy kingdom, Lord,"

means a devotion of all our powers to the advance of this kingdom. Here necessarily comes in the removal of obstructions: lodge, saloon, Sabbath desecration, against all of which as loyal lovers of our Master, Christ, we will certainly be arrayed according to our enlightenment and fidelity. What are we doing? 'Tis well to talk with our past hours and ask them what report they have carried to heaven, and how they might have borne more welcome news.

KEEP THE "LODGE LAMP" BURNING.

The efforts of lodgemen, through the postoffice department, to put out the light of this little sheet, have called forth many protests from our workers and contributors.

Secretary J. P. Stoddard writes: "It shows the importance which the wily craft attach to this little paper with a great influence. East, west, north and south, and friends everywhere, must rally and stand together in this crisis. I send you, on enclosed blanks, subscriptions for the Lodge Lamp, and I will begin at once to canvass on receipt of further blanks. 'In the Lord Jehovah is our strength.'"

Rev. Wm. Fenton writes: "I have spoken to our present postmaster in St. Paul about the objection to the Lodge Lamp, because people subscribe for it and send it to their friends. He says that he believes he has a right to pay the Pioneer Press company for 100 copies of their paper to be sent through the mail to whomsoever he pleases."

Rev. W. B. Stoddard writes: "I attended a district meeting of the Ohio Synod in Allegheny, Pa., and gave them the situation regarding subscribers for the Lodge Lamp, and in a short time I took thirty subscriptions."

Secretary P. B. Williams, of Portland, Ore., writes: "I will push the Lodge Lamp to the extent of my ability. This is surely lodgery showing its hand at a high rate. Do we call this a free country?"

While the secret lodge is bringing its influence to bear in shutting out the little Lodge Lamp from newspaper rates in the mails, the following item from the Record will show how partial is the discrimination in favor of politics:

These are busy days for Washington Hesing and his assistants. They are helping along the campaign of education by their smooth manner of handling tons upon tons of political literature which is being sent out by the three parties. Yesterday they handled and sent out to the substations and the country postoffices of Illinois, 275,000 separate packages, which were mailed under franks by the gold Democratic committee. During the last ten days they have sent out from the central station more than 300 tons of printed matter from the Republican national committee, and more than half that amount from the silver Democratic national committee. Postmaster Hesing said: "It is somewhat of an expense on the government. Those documents cost eight cents a pound before the postoffice gets through handling them."

DEATH OF REV. J. L. BARLOW.

It is with sorrow and a sense of bereavement that we record the death of Rev. J L Barlow. It occured Oct. 24th at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Helen Rowley, in Bemis Heights, N. Y. He had labored during the past year as pastor of the Baptist church at Hagedorn's Mills, N. Y., and only a few weeks ago wrote us that he had demitted his charge on account of failing health. He was one of our ablest writers, and frequently wrote for the Cynosure ever since its first issue. He was pastor of the Wheaton Baptist church two years, and has many friends there. He was also pastor at Bloomingdale, Ill., for some years We hope next week to publish his picture and a more extended notice of this veteran worker in our cause.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Elder H. H. Tucker, of Bridgeton, Me., was made a Master Mason when a young man, but like a multitude of other honest men, he left it as soon as he found out what it really is. He is now a valuable witness against the lodge.

—On Tuesday the 27th, Rev. A. T. Pierson, whose teachings always awaken a great interest on the part of everyone, begins a month's lectures at The Moody Bible Institute of this city, in addition to the regular course. All of these Bible lectures are free, and the public are most cordially welcome.

—Every army needs privates as well as officers. No pastor can be a whole church. With Anti-masonic ministers our cause requires Anti-masonic congregations.

—A Chinaman after using opium thirty-nine years gave it up on being converted. Replying to the question as to how he could succeed in breaking off the habit he said: "I used my two knees."

—Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Powers have moved their Beacon Light Mission to Philadelphia, where we heartily commend them to all Cynosure friends in that city and vicinity. They will be found at 1231 West Dauphin street.

—"Facts and Photographs" is a booklet of some thirty pages, 5x8 inches. It has fine page portraits of Rev. A. J. Gordon, D. D, Rev. R. A. Torrey, Rev. W. G. Moorhead, Joseph Cook, Rev. B Carradine, D D, Rev. M. C Ranseen, Howard Crosby, Frances E Willard, John Quincy Adams, William H. Seward, Rev. Charles G. Finney and Pres. C. A. Blanchard. It contains the testimonies of men devout in piety, profound in scholarship and eminent in statecraft; also the testimonies of seceders from the lodge, as well as extracts from standard Masonic writers. Price postpaid only five cents.

—The Preacher's Magazine for November reaches us with rich and varied topics bearing upon Thanksgiving season. The excellency of the articles are notable. "The Daily Bread," by the Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, is a discourse of great merit. "How Men get their Sermons," suggestions from some living preachers, by the Rev. John Edwards, contains entertaining and valuable thoughts. The Homiletical department is liberally supplied with choice and short sketches and outlines. "Thanksgiving Offerings" (notes for an address): "How to Spend Thanksgiving," "Perpetual Thanks," by Anna Maria Hellier, is helpful. "A Bible Reading on Thanksgiving," Notes and Illustrations. It is a capital number. Fifteen cents a copy, $1.50 a year. Wilbur B. Ketcham, Publisher, 2 Cooper Union, N. Y.

SPECIAL OFFER.

Until Jan. 1, 1897, new subscribers to the Christian Cynosure for one year will receive The Peterson Magazine, if they state their wish to receive both. The price for the two will be only $1 55, practically the price of the Cynosure alone. The Peterson is an old and well-known magazine. MASONIC CATECHISM.

Q. What is a Republican?
A. Grand King, and most Worshipful Sir Knight and High Priest, etc., etc.
Q. What is a Freeman?
A. A man with a cable tow about his neck.
Q. What is liberty?
A. The most perfect specimen of liberty in the world is to be seen in the most Worshipful Lodge—to-wit—a man, stript and blindfolded dragging around the room by a rope, swearing to perform unlawful acts under penalty of having his throat cut for ear to ear.
Q. What is equality?
A. It is perfectly exemplified in the various degrees and magnificent titles of the craft—from the Entered apprentice to the King of Heaven.
Q. What is Morality?
A. Morality consists in concealing secrets, murder and treason not excepted, and in protecting our friends, right or wrong.
Q. What is humanity?
A. The highest possible instance of humane feeling is to put a seceder to death. It is our bounden duty so to do—and so strongly exemplifies our attachment to the craft and all worthy Masons.
Q. What is science?
A. True science is found only in the Lodge. It consists in the sublime ceremonies of Masonry—such as the resurrection of Hiram Abiff—the finding of the Ark—the murder of Akirop—and other edifying mysteries.
Q. When did Masonry begin to exist?
A. Long before the creation.
Q. How long will it continue?
A. Forever and a day.
Q. What was the greatest display of Masonic power?
A. The putting to death the author of Jachin and Boaz—for it was done with a secret hand.
Q. What was the most unfortunate event for Masonry?
A. The execution of Morgan—perfectly right in itself—but not skillfully done.
Q. Why are not the Masonic penalties executed upon all seceders?
A. All things are lawful, but all things are not expedient.—The Sun.

THE JUDGE'S CELEBRATED ARGUMENT.

Who the Judge is I need not say, for as soon as the argument is seen, or heard, it will be recollected what distinguished individual has frequently and familiarly used it. If anyone doubts who the individual mote be, let him ascribe him to the most honorable judge that he ever saw.

Whether the Judge is the real author of the argument, I confess I have myself some doubt. I think probably the members of the Lodge would attribute the sublime argument to Hiram Abiff. But whoever may be the author, the argument itself is extremely popular.

I have called it the Judge's argument, because he has entered, passed and raised it to the sublime degree of Mastership in this city.

The argument is this:—A man cannot travel with safety to himself in a new country, if not a Mason; whereas, he is perfectly safe if a Mason. This, the Judge says, he has realized in his own experience, when this country was new.

If this argument has any core in it—if it is not perfect nonsense—it implies that all robbers and pirates, and all other sources of trouble, come exclusively from the Masonic Institution. Masonry certainly cannot afford protection to a traveler from anything but Masonic difficulties.

I am not insensible that many enthusiastic Masons have pretended to believe that their divine art enabled the traveler to keep off the ague and fever, by the Masonic ceremony called Abracadabra. This is boasted of even in the Monitor. It would be ludicrous, indeed, to see the Judge traveling through a prairie, and "ever and anon" holding up the grand hailing sign of a Master Mason, to keep off the ague and fever!

But supposing that Masonry would enable one to understand the science of Abrac, that would not protect the traveler from all the perils of a new country.

Sometimes new countries are infested with pole-cats, and always with extensive mud-holes. Now, I confess I should feel myself very much amused to see our eminent Jurist making signs to one of the odoriferous animals above named, or to such a mud-hole as would remind one of Bunyan's slough of despond. I am confident, however, that the slough would not creep out of his path, nor the skunk (as the Yankees call it) give an answering signal at all to the liking of his Judgeship. My reason for coming to this conclusion must be obvious to all. It is this: Neither the mud-hole nor the pole-cat having been initiated into the mysteries, could possibly be supposed to understand the signs.

When I say that neither the mud-hole nor the skunk have ever been initiated, I do not, by any means, intend to insinuate that members who would powerfully remind one of these things are not sometimes met with in Lodges. All that I intend to show is that whether men or beasts, or Heroines of Jericho, or things without life, nothing could understand the signs or be kept at bay by the signs except the man, or things had previously been instructed so as to fully understand the mystery of these signs.

The celebrated argument of the justly celebrated Judge is not only inconclusive, but if I were a Mason I would say it was rascally; for, as has been stated, it implies that all the rascals are Masons.

I am far from believing that all rascals are Masons. I readily admit that taking oaths secretly, and for the sake of personal emolument, or taking oaths with unnecessary frequency, or taking oaths without intending to keep them very precisely, has a tendency to make men rascals, but the argument of the Judge goes much farther; for were we to admit, for the sake of giving the worshipful Judge a fair chance, that all Masons are rascals, it would not justify his conclusion, that a Masonic traveler is always safe, for other rascals may waylay his course who would not understand his signs and of course would not respect his siganls any more than the pole-cat or mud-hole.

I close with a well-known fact which entirely upsets the Judge's masterpiece. It is this: Many an individual who never tampered with his conscience by taking the unlawful oaths of Masonry has traveled extensively and met with no uncommon disaster.

Another argument much used by another Judge in this city, and one, too, of immeasurably transcendent excellence in the estimation of the worshipful craft divine, is that Anti-Masons are lice. What a sublime Lodge-manufactured argument. Do these sons of the handmaid imagine that all their pruriency is caused by the Anti-Masons? I think they itched a little for office before Anti-Masonry was much heard of.

But be it so that Anti-Masons are lice, I solemnly aver I would rather choose to be actually the most poverty-stricken louse that ever shaggled over the bare hide of a beggar, than ever to participate in the smallest possible part in the blasphemy of the Masonic Institution.

Lice have no future state unless Masonry should prove true, and then our future state be only transmigration, but Christianity proving true, how can Masons lift up their faces before him whom they have mocked and behold that he is no other than the Architect of the Universe.

One would almost be persuaded to think, from this last juridical argument, that the philosophic among the Masons are not such arrant hypocrites as they have generally been supposed. It is barely possible that as skeptics are often addicted to the most extravagant credulity, that philosophers may imagine themselves to be what they profess, the very ancient Egyptians, transmigrated through innumerable generations of monkies and gobblers, etc.

If we could bring ourselves to give this credit to these philosophic Solomons, the whole affair would become perfectly plain. The Egyptians, when chastised with the visitation of lice, acknowledged that it was the finger of God; so these philosophers, if real enthusiasts and not arrant hypocrites, imagining themselves to be these very Egyptians, now again come up in the form of human beings, after having been so long punished in the various shapes of all doleful creatures, feel as if the finger of God was still upon them in the form of lice.

I confess, however, that I cannot bring myself to a state of mind sufficiently indulgent to consider them philosophic madmen. I believe (though it is painful to think it) that they are deliberate deceivers. Their argument respecting the lice only shows them undignified as well as disingenuous.

MASONRY IN EUROPE.

Death, inevitable death, from which no potentate can protect them, awaits every traitor of the order.—Marquis Constanja.

Irreligion and unqualified liberty and equality are the genuine and original secrets of Freemasonry, and the ultimatum of a regular progress through all its degrees.—Abbe Baruel.

Same to same—in describing the Priest's degree—it is all one whether it be true or false, we must have it, that we may tickle those who have a hankering for religion.—Wieshaupt.

But not only are secret societies dangerous, but all societies whose effect is mysterious; the whole history of man is a proof of this position; in no age or country has there ever appeared a mysterious association, which did not, in time, become a public nuisance.—Prof. Robinson of Edinburgh University.

In a letter from Weishaupt (the infidel) to Zwack, in 1786, he says: "You can't imagine what respect and curiosity my first degree has raised; and which is wonderful, a famous Protestant Divine, who is now of the order, is persuaded that the religion contained in it is the true source of Christianity. O man! man! to what mayest thou not be persuaded? Who would imagine that I was to be the founder of a new religion?"

The fraternal equality professed in Masonic lodges is very flattering to those who have not succeeded in their scramble for civic distinctions—such persons become the most zealous Masons and generally obtain the active offices in the lodges, and have an opportunity of speaking with authority to persons whom in public society they must look up to with some respect.—Prof. Robinson.

A French author says: The horrible and sanguinary Oaths, the Daggers, Death-heads, Crossbones, the imaginary combats with the murderers of Hiram, and many other gloomy ceremonies, have a tendency to harden the heart, to remove its natural disgust at deeds of horror and pave the way for those shocking barbarities which made the name of Frenchmen abhorred in all Europe.—Lefranc.

"Christians and Jews, and Turks, and Pagans stand,
One blended throng, and undistinguished band.
We hope with good conscience to Heaven to climb
And give Peter the pass-word, the grip and the sign."

Free Masons ought not to be members of the Christian Church. It is important this should be distinctly understood. None of us will pretend that a man cannot become a Christian who has been a Mason, or that such as repent of this and all their other sins, should not be received into the church. What we maintain is that those who support Masonry, either by frequenting the lodge or by bearing a certificate of Masonic standing, should not be permitted to hold a membership in the Christian Church. If they declare for Pythagoras and Mahomet, let them not pretend a friendship for the Nazarenes. If the Lord be God, let them serve him; if Baal, let them go to the Temple of Baal.

Masonry, possessing corporate powers, acts in secret and shuns the corrective of public opinion—Republicanism acts openly, courts public opinion and thrives best where public opinion is unrestrained and has the most perfect influence. Masonry must, from its very nature (secrecy being essential to its existence) be confined in its benefits to a few—Republicanism, by its very name, indicates a directly opposite character, the securing the greatest possible degree of good to the whole community. Masonry enjoins on its votaries resistance to the execution of the laws of the land when endeavored to be enforced against a guilty brother. Republicanism requires its votaries, in all cases, to afford every facility in their power to the due operation of the laws. Brutus condemned his son to death. These three points are sufficient to show that Masonry is not Republicanism.

The Day That's Coming.

The heav'ns shall glow with splendor,
But brighter far than they
The saints shall shine in glory,
As Christ shall them array.
The beauty of the Saviour
Shall dazzle every eye
In the crowning day that's coming
By and by.

Our pain shall then be over.
We'll sin and sigh no more,
Behind us all of sorrow
And naught but joy before—
A joy in our Redeemer,
As we to Him are nigh,
In the crowning day that's coming
By and by.

Let all that look for "hasten"
The coming joyful day
By earnest consecration
To walk the narrow way;
By gathering in the lost ones,
For whom our Lord did die,
For the crowning day that's coming
By and by.

DARKEST LONDON.

What an American Newspaper Man Learned by Living Ten Weeks In Whitechapel.

"The squalor of east London and the miserable condition of its swarming thousands have been often depicted, but a man has to live in that wretched quarter, as I did for ten weeks this summer, to thoroughly understand its hopeless condition," said Mr. Edward Price Bell of Terre Haute, Ind., to a Washington Post man.

Mr. Bell went abroad for the express purpose of studying the social conditions of London's great submerged class, and he wrote for the Chicago Record a number of exceedingly interesting letters on that topic. He is the first journalist from this side the ocean to undertake such a task.

"For ten weeks," he said, "I lived in Toynbee hall, right in the heart of Whitechapel. It is an institution carried on by graduates of Oxford and Cambridge for the amelioration of the wretched denizens of that parish. Its methods are academic, not religious. The college men who are back of the cause are sincere and animated by the noblest impulses of humanity. They are doing much in a practical way for the people they are sacrificing themselves to lift up. They are having the rotten old houses torn down and habitations built fit for the residence of human beings. They are giving more air and sunlight and making sanitary improvements in quarters where all laws of sanitation have been ignored. They have never ceased agitating till some of their number gained membership in the county council, on the board of guardians for the administration of the poor laws and in parliament. In this way they are enabled to advance the work of reform to which their lives are dedicated. All who wish to study at Toynbee hall are heartily welcome.

"Some of the theories of the hall may seem a trifle impracticable, but doubtless they all make for good. One idea is that the Whitechapelites are bettered by having the privilege of listening to fine music and of seeing grand paintings. The doors of Toynbee hall are thrown open, and the hordes of the district pour in to hear the music and view the works of art, but whether they are improved by it or not I would not venture to say.

"The number of missions of charitable societies of religious bodies banded together for philanthropic work in east London is almost endless. Besides, hundreds are engaged in individual work for the same purpose. And what does it all amount to? So far as I could determine it was all utterly futile, utterly impotent. The task of reclaiming 1,000,000 of earth's most depraved and destitute inhabitants seems too great for human achievement.

"No doubt a little good is done, but in proportion to the amount of misery that cannot be reached the percentage of improvement is like a drop of water to a deep river. As far as raising the mass to a level of decent humanity is concerned it will take centuries. The destiny of the children of that region is a fearful problem. They swarm more like rats or ants in the dark courts and narrow lanes than like human beings. From infancy they are accustomed to rags, to constant hunger, to drunkenness, to vice in all its forms. A great per cent of them are of illegitimate birth, for the marriage tie is but lightly considered there. Their wretched mothers get drunk whenever they have the opportunity. All the barrooms are thronged night and day with outcast women, and the proportion of drunkenness is greatest among females.

"One of the schemes of reform is to colonize, and General Booth has carried out that plan with considerable success. But the few hundreds or even thousands that are sent out make no perceptible difference. The vacuum is quickly filled, for it seems that nothing can keep down the birth rate of east London, and the wretched continue to reproduce their kind.

Topic For the Week Beginning Nov. 8. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—The most interesting thing I know about foreign missions.—Acts xvii, 16-31.

The topical reference presents to us one of the most interesting foreign missionary incidents in the New Testament—Paul standing in the cultured city of Athens, in the areopagus on Mars hill, preaching "Jesus and the resurrection" to the philosophers of Greece. It should inspire us to select many interesting things concerning this important work of Christ's church.

When Christ came, the whole world was open to Christ. Rome was the one great power of the world, and under the protection of Rome the missionaries of the cross could go practically throughout the whole world. Later on many large sections of the earth were closed to the gospel, but today again the doors of heathendom stand wide open, and the missionary may enter. In two years (1858-60) 875,000,000 souls were opened to the gospel, 40,000,000 in Japan by treaty with Great Britain, 390,000,000 in China by Tien-tsin treaty, 260,000,000 in India by transfer of the government to the crown, 150,000,000 in Africa by Livingstone's explorations, 25,000,000 in Italy and 10,000,000 in Mexico. The doors of the world are wide open. Will we go in and possess the land for Christ?

This interesting incident in Paul's life suggests three important missionary facts:

1. Why the heathen need. Paul's soul was stirred within him at Athens because of the city's idolatry. Athens was the most idolatrous city in the world. It was wholly given to idolatry. It was a city of idols and even had one inscribed "To the Unknown God." It should have worshiped God in Christ. It was worshiping idols; hence its need. This is but a picture of heathendom today. It should be worshiping God, but instead is bowing down to nature, to gods of its own handiwork, or to the gods of the human heart; hence its great need. The number of these idol worshipers in comparison to the number of Christians and Christian workers among them is simply appalling.

2. What the heathen need. Paul saw the great need of the Grecian idolaters, and "he preached unto them Jesus and the resurrection." A resurrected Christ is what heathendom needs today. It is dead in trespass and in sin. It is blinded by ignorance and superstition. It needs a living Christ to give life instead of death, and to open the eyes of the blind.

3. How this need can be supplied. By the preaching of men. Prayer and pains, men and money are the agencies by which this living Christ may be sent to heathendom. Heathendom needs the best men. Paul was the best preacher of his day. God sent him to the foreign field. God needs His best men today in the foreign field.

Interesting and important missionary facts, taken from "The Missionary Pastor:"

DISTRIBUTION OF CHRISTIANS.

In United States, 1 to 4 4-5 persons evangelical Christians; in foreign field, 1 to 1,200 persons; in United States, 1 minister to 740 souls; in foreign field, 1 missionary to 200,000 souls; 1 medical missionary to 2,500,000 persons; in United States, 1 Christian worker to 50 persons; in foreign field, 1 to 24,000 persons.

ANNUAL EXPENDITURES IN UNITED STATES.

Liquor and tobacco	$2,000,000,000
Popular amusements	400,000,000
Dogs	200,000,000
Kid gloves and ostrich feathers	25,000,000
Foreign missions	5,200,000

Is it any wonder, in the face of these figures, that the world is not Christianized?

Christian adherents in foreign field in 1894	3,801,000
Those not Christians	1,200,000,000
Annual increase	8,000,000
Dying yearly without Christ	36,000,000

God's Works as Object Lessons.

And all God's works are object lessons—divine parables—that unfold to us under natural symbols God's wonderful goodness, the vastness of His providence, His fidelity to His covenants, and in the scenes that now surround us in this glorious springtime we may catch a glimpse of our own resurrection, and what heaven will be.—Presbyterian Messenger.

Our Strong One.

There is, there can be, no distress so great, no emergency so sudden, no enemies so strong, as to defeat or mar the plans of our strong one.—J. C. Vandeventer.

Protestants In Germany.

The latest statistics give the number of Protestants in Germany as 31,000,000 and the number of Catholics as 18,000,000.

LADIES' INTERNATIONAL.

Mrs. Florence Grey Is an Organizer of This Association.

Mrs. Florence Grey of Paris has arrived in Chicago. Mrs. Grey comes here in the interest of the Ladies' International association. The object of this association is to establish in every country in which a branch of it exists an academy of practical arts for women. The association is composed of many leagues, the first of which was started in Paris several years ago, with the object of establishing such an institution in France. The idea is to give all women who wish to perfect themselves in modeling, sewing, cooking or any other practical art an opportunity to study under the best teachers. If they arrive in a strange city, one of the league will look after their general welfare, see that board is obtained at moderate prices, and that their everyday life is comfortable. Charity is a word unknown to the organization, as the object is to make students pay a reasonable price for what they are taught, making them in turn self supporting. The plans for the Ladies' International association in America are arranged under the direction of Miss Elise Mercur of Pittsburg. Mrs. Grey, however, is practically the woman who keeps the American branch alive. She is devoted to the cause, and her enthusiasm keeps the movement before the people. Mrs. Grey is not, however, very well satisfied with what she has done in New York, but she has great faith in the west and expects to accomplish a great deal in Chicago. She will make arrangements during her stay here for a labor congress, to meet in October, 1897. The association has just issued the first number of its official organ. It is called The Iron Ring, and it will be published quarterly.—Chicago Herald.

The Women Are Losing Ground.

The Methodist Episcopal conference at its meeting in Cleveland last May directed the subsidiary bodies to vote again on the woman question. They are to say by their votes whether they desire to have the organic law of the church so amended as to make women eligible to seats in its supreme legislature and judicatory. Ten of the annual conferences have already complied with the general conference's direction. The vote in the ten conferences as reported stands as follows: For letting the women in, 282; for keeping them out, 283. Last year six of the ten conferences gave 298 votes for admitting the women against 150 for excluding them. It is noted that the "yes" vote falls off in every one of these conferences. It is not a case of heavy losses here and there, but of a moderately uniform loss all along the line. As the vote starts off it does not encourage the advocates of woman's right to sit in the general conference.—Elmira Gazette.

Women and the Bicycle.

The Wheelmen's Municipal league of San Francisco has declared for the woman suffrage constitutional amendment. An evening paper of that city pertinently remarks in this connection:

The wheelmen of the city, in deciding to vote for woman suffrage, are doing good politics. There is less of sentiment in this decision than of practicality, as there always is in good politics. The wheelmen are not proceeding to discuss theories, but to meet a condition. Their position is that there are 3,000 lady cyclists in San Francisco, all of whom earnestly desire good, smooth streets. These ladies, of course, have no votes, so all they can do is to lend their moral influence to the campaign for better roadways. Their moral influence is great, but truth compels the admission that votes are more effective than moral influence when politics is being done.

A Bed Cover.

A beautiful new bed cover of latest fashion is made from fine white organdie. In the center there is a square of the material bordered by a band of renaissance lace. Next this is a wide border of the muslin, then a narrower border of the lace. The spread is finished with a wide frill of the muslin. The pillow shams that go with the spread are also of muslin. The square of muslin in the center of each sham has a large ornamental letter, made from the braids used for renaissance laces. Book muslins of a good quality could be used for such a cover, which is usually over another of colored or white china silk.

A Skirt For Evening Wear.

As yet there is but little change in the width of the skirt for evening wear. It still consists of front, two side gores and three back gores. It must just touch the ground all round us; except for chaperons the skirts are still worn without train. Success depends entirely upon the care taken in hanging the skirt. Cut each width precisely by the pattern, taking the greatest care not to alter it at the waist. An additional length is added or a superfluous length removed at the same place—namely, at the foot. Commence all seams at the waist, tacking each one before it is machined, and whenever a gore and a selvage come together, tack the gore upon the selvage. Before commencing the machine sewing try your machine upon the same thickness of material as you propose to sew, in order to see that the tension is quite right, as in sewing silk or satin fabric it is of the utmost importance that you shall have no work to unpick; the pristine freshness of the material is so fragile, and once dissipated it can never be restored.

Fit the skirt at the hips in the lining first and note carefully what alterations

you make; then repeat these in the fabric. Press the seams lightly and tack the material and lining together at the waist. Now place them upon the waistband, which must be made up the correct size, and turn the skirt up at the foot upon the figure. From the skirt cuttings you can obtain the tiny frill to finish off the foot of your skirt, and it will hang exceedingly well if lined with linette of the same shade for preference, whereas if you have a silk lining contrast is better. It seems superfluous to add that the back gores must be stiffened in their entire length.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

BOYS' FIRE DEPARTMENT.

It Is Thoroughly Organized and Equipped For Quick Work.

Several Brooklyn boys have organized a fire department of their own. The ages of the little firemen range from 11 to 15 years, Ernest Grant, the foreman and organizer of the company, being the oldest. They have a complete patrol outfit, consisting of two goats seven hands high in their bare hoofs, one regularly constructed patrol wagon of small size made to fit the goats, one fire extinguisher improvised from a tin water cooler and a half inch rubber tube, one scaling ladder and all the appliances found among the equipment of a modern patrol company's headquarters. The uniforms are blue overalls and blouses, with rubber boots, rubber coats, fatigue caps and gaudy red fire hats of regulation block.

The goats' names are Tom and Bill, and they have been trained by the boys until there is not a horse in all the regular department which responds more faithfully and quickly to the clang of the alarm gong than do Tom and Bill. With them the boys have made a "quick hitch" record of ten seconds. No such sleek goats were ever seen on the rock ribbed hills of Shantytown. Tom is a wiry haired maltese, and Bill boasts a brindled yellow complexion.

The boys live near the house of engine company No. 35, and all summer long each of the lads was prompt at roll call at 8 o'clock every morning. Their names were duly registered in the blotter, and each was given an hour off at lunchtime. All fire alarms and the time they were sounded were entered in the blotter with red ink. In fact, everything about the place was conducted just as it is in a regular patrol house. All day the goats stood in their stalls back of the lilliputian patrol wagon ready to dart out and place themselves under the drop harness at the sound of an alarm. All was bustle and excitement about the shed at such a moment. Foreman Grant shouted his orders in a shrill voice as all were slipping on their boots, rubber coats and fire hats.

"Willie and Jakie, grab the axes! Davy and Jonas, take the hooks! Charlie, grab the roof rope!" he would shout.

The goats came clattering out, and the fire brigade was off with a bang, the gong on the front of the wagon clanging loudly. The company's mascot, a fox terrier dog, ran, barking, ahead. Around the corner they would speed to the house of engine No. 35, often arriving there before the regular company had started out. They remained at the firehouse ready to respond to any alarms that might come in while engine No. 35 was away.

Since school began the young firemen have taken a vacation, but next summer they will organize again.—New York World.

A LONDON RUMSHOP.

LOATHSOME DEN OF VICE AND HUMAN DEGRADATION.

Men and Women, Clothed In Filthy Rags, Swill Liquor Like Hogs—Mothers Feed Their Children on Ale, While Gray Haired Women Reel With Intoxication.

The promoters of the rumshops of east London have some nice sounding names for the dives in which manhood and womanhood are hourly perishing. One of the most loathsome dens out of hell, situated in the Whitechapel district, is called the Princess Alice. A place almost as bad, standing near the north entrance to Tower bridge, bears the title of the Angel. These resorts are beyond adequate portrayal in words. They are so thoroughly and frightfully wicked, so utterly and infamously low, that anything like a faithful description of them would read like the product of a diseased imagination. The Princess Alice is in the same block with Toynbee hall, the institution that is to London somewhat similar to what Hull House is to Chicago, and it is next door to Wadham House, a residence for students giving more or less thought to questions of social reform. Both Toynbee and Wadham have many times joined battle with their undesirable neighbors, but the latter have always come off with banners flying and without the loss of a single day's business. It is not on record that the reformers ever did so much as stop the sale of a pot of beer over the dirty counters of the Princess Alice. The Toynbee residents are all Oxford and Cambridge men, and they know full well the theories of advanced social life, but they are no match for the rumseller at the corner of the street.

England is a great country for compartments. You find them in railway carriages, in theaters and in restaurants. You also find them in the Princess Alice. One does not have to take one's drink along with other people, but can approach a section of the bar in a small compartment and drink in seclusion. At least that is the theory of the gin mill compartment. But the theory fails here as it does on the railroads and in the restaurants. The compartments of the railway carriages, when there is much travel, become ill ventilated miniatures of the roomy and airy American coach. The compartments in the restaurants, when there is any rush, have all the people they will hold, and so the compartments at the Princess Alice are never quiet and secluded. On the contrary, these holes in the wall are nearly always jammed and jammed with the lowest type of human beings on the face of this earth.

Saturday nights at the Princess Alice witness wholesale carnivals of drunkenness. At these times the compartments are crowded almost to suffocation, and the wretches gathered there struggle one with another for precedence at the bar. They are not all men by any means. Oftener than not more than half the crowd are women, and each woman not infrequently has a child or two with her. It is a mere commonplace to see dissolute mothers, the suggestion of every virtue obliterated from their faces, feeding their little girls ale or beer on the counters of this scandalous den. The men and women all crowd in together and swill liquor like hogs. Their dress, without exception, is the dress of desperate poverty. The men wear an infinite variety of hats, clothes and shoes, but none of them has any article of apparel that is not green with age and heavy with filth. Their faces are blotched, distorted and unshaven, and their eyes bear witness to awful eras of sleeplessness and dissipation. They drink until their money is exhausted or until they can scarcely stand, then they go out of their own accord or are forced out and stagger away with maudlin mutterings. When the crowds in the Princess Alice are great, one may often see a man in the advanced stages of intoxication braced against the wall, half asleep, held from falling by the crush about him. Sometimes he loses consciousness entirely and goes down in a heap. Then the bartender clears the compartment sufficiently to drag the wretch to the sidewalk. A policeman comes along, wakes the offender up, and if he can walk starts him off. If he is past walking, the officer calls for the wagon and sends him in.

The chief horror of the Princess Alice, however, is presented in the degradation of its female clientele. In America the large majority of drunkards, especially outside the large cities, are men. In Liverpool and London, according to the statistics of the Woman's Christian Temperance union, there are about six drunken women to one drunken man, and casual observation would indicate this proportion to be true.

Many of the females of the Princess Alice are mothers whom the curse of drink has caused to forget every obligation of motherhood and home. Many of them are little past girlhood. Drink is the overmastering passion of these outcasts. They seem to have no other pleasure, no other concern of any sort whatever. Numbers of them know nothing about home life, nothing of affection, nothing of any one of the fundamental humanities. The appetite for drink possesses and consumes them. It causes them to lie and cheat, to beg and steal. Any form of iniquity is welcome if it only holds out the promise of a quantity of rum. Like that of the man, the dress of these creatures is as poor as it can be. It seldom rises above rags, and very dirty rags at that. It is harrowing enough to witness the debauchery of the younger women, but when one sees an old woman, with gray hair and furrowed face, drunk and maudlin, staggering from the lethal portals of the Princess Alice without a friend, penny or a home, one is tempted to ask in agony of heart, "Is Christ really risen?"—Chicago Record.

The Ceylonese are pleading for the same prohibition of opium selling to natives as exists in England, or at least for the same protection to the people as has been afforded to the Burmese.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON VII, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, NOV. 15.

Text of the Lesson, I Kings ix, 1-9—Memory Verses, 4, 5—Golden Text, Prov. x, 22—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

1. "And it came to pass, when Solomon had finished the building of the house of the Lord, and the king's house, and all Solomon's desire which he was pleased to do." According to verse 10 the work occupied 20 years, and during all this time Hiram, king of Tyre, helped him with cedar and fir trees and with gold, according to all his desire (verse 11). For this service Solomon gave Hiram as a kind of present 20 cities in Galilee, which, when Hiram saw, were not pleasing unto him, and he called them Cabul, or displeasing (verses 11-13). It is impossible to please every one, and the great joy of a real servant of the Lord is that he seeks not to please men, but God, who trieth our hearts (Gal. i, 10; I Thess. ii, 4). Concerning all this work it is written that Solomon made all that came into his heart and prosperously effected it (II Chron. vii, 11). This was wholly due to the blessing of the Lord, which maketh rich and to which toil addeth nothing (Prov. x, 22, R. V., margin). The temple is suggestive of the New Jerusalem, the Bride, the Lamb's wife, which is to come down from God out of heaven and be a center and source of blessing to all nations on the millennial earth. It is now being builded and will be the pure and eternal home of the redeemed out of all nations. At the building of Solomon's temple there was neither hammer nor ax nor any tool of iron heard in the house while it was building, for the stones were made ready before they were brought thither (I Kings vi, 7). Believers are the living stones in the living temple and are all made ready down here in the quarries of daily life before brought to the place of building (I Pet. ii, 5). When we receive the Lord Jesus, we are by His blood made fit to enter heaven (Col. i, 12), but by all His healings with us from that time we are being prepared for our place in His temple. There is not a trial nor a blow too many in all the daily life, but a "needs be" for every one.

2. "That the Lord appeared to Solomon the second time, as He had appeared unto him at Gibeon." At Gibeon the Lord had said to him, "Ask what I shall give thee" (I Kings iii, 5). And the Lord was so pleased to have him ask only for wisdom that He gave him both riches and honor, which he had not asked (verse 13). Now, after 20 years He appears a second time to bless him yet more. Our Lord Jesus came the first time to give wisdom and righteousness to all who will accept Him. He will come the second time, without sin unto salvation, to bestow the completeness of His redemption (I Cor. i, 30; Heb. ix, 28). He is ever the same great giver, giving grace and glory to all who receive Him.

3. "And the Lord said unto him, I have heard thy prayer and thy supplication that thou hast made before Me." When we ask anything according to His will we know that He heareth us, and knowing that He has heard us we know that we have the petitions we desired of Him (I. John v, 14, 15.) The Lord accepted the house to put His name there, and assured Solomon that His eyes and His heart would be there perpetually. There is something very comforting in this for every believer, for if we present our bodies according to Rom. xii, 1, 2, we may be sure that He accepts the sacrifice, and if His name and eyes and heart would be upon a building of wood and stone, how much more will they be upon every member of the church which is the body of Christ.

4. "And if thou wilt walk before Me, as David, thy father, walked, in integrity of heart, and in uprightness, to do according to all that I have commanded thee." Compare chapters ii, 4; vi, 12; xv, 5. To walk before God in truth with all the heart is the sum of Christian living. To Abram God said, "Walk before Me and be thou perfect" (Gen. xvii, 1). The Lord being with us (Math. xxviii, 20), it only requires that we steadfastly believe it, and trust Him to live out His life in us, according to Gal. ii, 20. A walk with God implies agreement, humility and full control of the Spirit, but if we are only willing God will do it (Amos iii, 3; Mic. vi, 8; I John ii, 6; II Cor. vi, 16).

5. "Then I will establish the throne of thy kingdom upon Israel forever, as I promised to David, thy father." The promise to David was unconditional that his throne would be established forever (II Sam. vii, 12, 16). It will be fulfilled in Solomon if he will walk before God with a perfect heart; if not, it will have to wait for some other who will so do. The king has not yet sat on David's throne who completely filled the bill, but He lives and waits for it, and will do it when He shall come the second time. See Isa. ix, 6, 7; Luke i, 32, 33; Jer. xxiii, 5, 6; Acts ii, 30.

6, 7. "If ye shall at all turn from following Me then will I cut off Israel out of the land which I have given them, and Israel shall be a proverb and a byword among all people." The Lord had said about the same thing to Moses in Deut. iv, 26, 27, and 28-37, and for over 18 centuries the world has seen it fulfilled, for they continued as a nation to despise His word and misuse His prophets until there was no remedy (II Chron. xxxvi, 16). When in the fullness of time the Son of God Himself came to be their Saviour and King they cast Him out and killed Him, saying, "We have no king but Cæsar." Hence for all these centuries since our Lord was crucified the land has been desolate and Jerusalem trodden down of the gentiles.

8, 9. "Why hath the Lord done thus unto this land and to this house? Because they forsook the Lord their God, who brought forth their fathers out of the land of Egypt." Thus, said the Lord, would people ask and be answered when they should see the desolations of the city and the land, and so it has been. Whether the Lord deals with Israel or with the church, He desires to show the abundance which He has for and loves to give to His people, that He may be known and trusted in, to His glory and His people's good. See in Deut. xxviii, 1-4, the fullness of blessing which was within Israel's reach simply on condition of obedience. See in Math. xi, 27-30; John xiv, 13, 14; xv, 11; xvi, 24; Rom. xv, 13—some of the fullness that would be manifestly ours to God's glory if we would keep ourselves wholly for Him. Consider also Eph. iii, 20, 21, Jude xxiv and similar exceeding great and precious things which would be to His glory in us if we would be His obedient ones, living only unto Him. "Of the children of Israel did Solomon make no bondmen" (I Kings ix, 22), and while we who are redeemed delight to be the bond slaves of Jesus Christ there is no slavishness in His service, for we are at the same time children and friends, free in our Father's house to enjoy all that is His and to delight to do His will.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST TO OUR OWN PEOPLE.

Some of the Principal Happenings of the Week Reported by Telegraph and Placed for Convenience of Our Readers—Matters of Interest.

Chicago, Oct. 30.—The grand commandery of the Knights Templars of Illinois finished its business Wednesday. The principal matter transacted was the installation of the new officers and reports of the few remaining committees. The grand council of Royal and Select Masters was called to order by Grand Master Lord, who delivered the opening address. Representatives from forty councils were present. Among the officers elected were: Grand master, George M. Gross, Chicago; grand recorder, Gil W. Barnard, Chicago.

Terrible Scene at a Fire.

Arcola, Ills., Oct. 29.—With agonizing shieks and cries almost human in their intensity three horses, with manes and tails burned off, hide scorched and smoking, and eyes destroyed by flames, ran through the streets of this city at an early hour Wednesday morning. The animals belonged to Hon. Joseph Ewing, ex-member of the legislature, whose farm lies just east of here. His large barn and granary burned at 5 o'clock in the morning, inflicting a loss of $10,000, with but light insurance. It was evidently incendiary, and the work of an organized gang of firebugs operating in this vicinity. The injured animals were shot and put out of their misery.

Country Road of Brick.

Monmouth, Ills., Oct. 30.—Monmouth township, Warren county, has completed 3,000 feet of brick pavement, the first hard country road ever put down in the United States. The brick is single course, laid on six inches of sand, supported on each side by two and one-half feet of crushed stone. The cost will be less than $5,000 a mile. The township has several miles of crushed stone, which has given good satisfaction. A 3-mill five year tax is proposed for payment of the improvement.

He Charges Abduction.

Waukegan, Ills., Oct. 30.—August Peters, who disappeared from his home in Highland Park over a month ago, and was subsequently found imprisoned in a breakwater, located, it was said, by a clairvoyant, has commenced prosecution of his alleged abductors. George and Ben Goldberg, sons of Isaac Goldberg, are charged with the crime. They have been arrested. The Goldbergs are rival merchants to Moses & Son, who employ Peters.

Killed by His Wife While Hunting.

Vandalia, Ills., Nov. 2.—Near Haerstown, this county, Edward Armstrong, accompanied by his wife, who is a good markswoman, went hunting for quail. Mrs. Armstrong was in a cornfield and could not see her husband, who was on the other side of the fence. She fired at a covey of birds, the charge striking her husband in the back of the head and killing him almost instantly.

Wind Raises Lake Superior.

Superior, Wis., Nov. 2.—The water in this end of Lake Superior is the highest it has ever been, and has flooded the pits of the elevators and mills, stopping the shipment of wheat. It was 4 feet above normal, forced to this end by the heavy wind, but is now receding, after doing damage to low lands. The Duluth-Superior Bridge company is obliged to suspend operations.

This Outfit is the result of years of study, experiment, and correspondence in the manufacture of Iron Lasts and Repairing Outfits; and its practical advantages need only to be seen and tried to be appreciated.

Our Improved Iron Lasts and Standard are one of the handiest tools you can have about the place. The Lasts are four in number, smooth and solid, 4, 6, 8, and 10 inches long, thus enabling one to half-sole all sizes of foot-wear. The Standard is made with an iron base, which can be easily fastened to the bench. No method of half-soling is now used on common work, except that of iron last and wire clinch nails. The writer of this has been in the business 20 years, and has seen the changes from the old wooden lasts and pegs to the modern method, and knows it to be complete.

Our Improved Harness and Saw Clamp is an indispensable tool in sewing a harness or filing a saw. The jaws are thrown open mechanically by a coiled spring on the bolt.

The weight of this outfit is 18 lbs. Price, all complete, packed in a neat, strong box, only $3.00.

HORROR IN A MINE.

SIX MEN KILLED BY FIRE-DAMP BREAKING LOOSE.

Being Probably Set Loose by a Blast—Two of the Victims Lose Their Lives While Heading Rescue Parties — Possibility That More Bodies May Be Found.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Oct. 30.—A terrible explosion of gas occurred in No. 3 mine of the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal company in South Wilkesbarre between 1 and 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Six men are known to be dead and two injured. It is not yet known how many men were in the mine at the time of the explosion, but twelve are reported missing, and it is believed all of these have perished. The dead who have been brought to the surface are: William R. Jones, fire boss, married, and John Joseph, assistant mine foreman, wife and five children. Others known to be dead, but who cannot he reached because of the black-damp, are: Thomas Owens, miner, married and family; William Lacey, rock-miner, married and family; James Herron, laborer, married and family; Joseph Worth, fire boss, married and family. The injured. so far as known, are, David Williams and John Davis, both overcome by black-damp.

Cause Never Likely To Be Known.

The cause of the explosion will possibly never be known. The mine was idle for the day. Usually there are from 400 to 500 men employed in the mine. Had they all been at work when the explosion occurred the loss of life would have been fearful. The only men in the mine yesterday were the company hands and fire bosses, who were at work in the rock tunnel changing the air course. Among those at work in the tunnel were: Thomas Owens, William Lacey and James Worth. The place was very gaseous and the men worked with safety lamps. It is believed that the gas was ignited by a blast. David Williams, the driver boss, was at the head of the slope 500 feet away when the explosion occurred, and was hurled some distance and injured. He was the only one in that vicinity who escaped alive.

Work of Rescue Promptly Organized.

The explosion was so severe that it was plainly felt at the mouth of the shaft. The roof of the fan house was blown off and all the air-ways and brattices inside were wrecked and blown away. The alarm was promptly given, and hundreds of men, women and children rushed to the head of the shaft. The grief of the womanking who had husbands, sons or brothers in the mine was heartrending. The work of organizing rescue gangs was begun without delay. It was a perilous undertaking, as the sequel proved, but no man faltered. Fire Boss William R. Jones and Assistant Mine Foreman John Joseph selected the men for the first party, and themselves led the way. All were overcome by the dread after-damp, but not until they had found Driver Boss David Williams. All except Joseph succeeded in reaching the foot of the shaft and were removed to the surface, but the old fire boss, Jones, succumbed to the deadly after-damp and died in half an hour after being brought out, despite the efforts of the doctors, who did their utmost to revive him.

Four Men in the Rock Tunnel.

Joseph, the other hero, became separated from the first party, and the second rescuing party found his body and removed it to the surface. A number of company men who worked in a different part of the mine reached the surface by the No. 5 shaft, and also by another opening. It is thought possible to reach the four men in the rock tunnel until the air currents are opened. Superintendent Lawall and other officials of the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre company were early on the scene and did all in human power to aid the men below. Large streams of water were sent down the shaft to establish a temporary air current while the work of rescue was in progress. Lawall believes there may yet be six men inside, but an old miner insists that there are twelve. It is the general supposition that all are dead. On March 2, 1890, in this same colliery eight men were imprisoned and died before they could be reached by the rescuing party.

Later—The bodies of Thomas Owens, William Lacey, James Herron and Joseph Worth, who were at work in the tunnel, were found at 9 o'clock last night. They were horribly burned and hardly recognizable. The rescuers are now at work clearing the tunnel in the expectation of finding more bodies. It is believed, however, that six is the total number of dead.

THE TWO DANAS.

Utterances of Fifty Years Ago Rise Up to Haunt Plutocracy's Chief Scribe.

[Special Correspondence.]

Had the Anti-Interest league been in existence a couple of generations ago, it would no doubt have received an application for membership from C. A. Dana, the editor of the New York Sun. Readers of labor papers will remember a speech of his that went the rounds of the labor press about a year ago. The speech was delivered on the Fourth of July just 50 years before. He was at that time a member of the colony at Brook Farm. In fact, everybody who was anybody 50 years ago was either at Brook Farm or else wrote for its paper or spoke for it or showed sympathy for the undertaking. Among these we need only mention Emerson, Hawthorne, Parker, Lowell, Greeley and the Alcotts. While now the "scholar in politics" is making plutocratic appeals, the scholars of that period were working for social reform.

Just before the first half of the nineteenth century was completed the revolution swept the large cities of Europe. The one in Paris attracted the most attention. The most conspicuous figure in that revolution was Proudhon, the author of "The Bank of the People." At that time Mr. Dana wrote a number of letters to the New York Tribune, describing Proudhon's banking plan and giving it his most enthusiastic indorsement. Nothing that is being said in the present campaign equals them either for fearlessness or for thoroughgoing radicalism. Yet today Mr. Dana is the ablest and bitterest enemy of labor and reform and is the head of the goldbug contingent.

To show the shallowness of the plutocratic cry, these letters have been dug up and republished and are the sensation of the campaign. They are "mighty interesting reading," for they show the real opinions of the goldbug leader at a time when with the enthusiasm of youth he upheld the no interest and no robbery theory. And all this was before most of his confreres, the present puny apologists of privilege, had started or about the time they were beginning their careers of mediocrity. The chief being exposed, the rank and file are of no consequence. HENRY COHEN.

The Plain People.

The most resultful work in this world is done by the unpretentious people who toil on from day to day, unnoticed and unsung, often cast down, getting no cheer, hearing no commendation, anticipating no reward, but honestly performing their duties. These are the people that the world depends on. You cannot rely much on the extraordinary people. Phenomena are interesting as studies, but not of much value for service. You cannot depend on exceptional things. The lamp which continues its flickering is better than the rocket for steady illumination. The plain people do the world's work. And they are behind the leaders, giving them their place and their power. The renown of great men comes principally from men who have no renown in themselves.

Unknown people make other people known. The mountains rest upon the plain ground. The parsonage in Epworth, England, caught fire in the night. The father rescued seven children, but one was left in the building. He found his way through smoke and fire to the window and called for help. The call was heard by two peasants. They made a ladder of their bodies, one peasant standing on the shoulders of the other, and down the ladder came the imperiled boy, whose name was John Wesley. All Methodism salutes John Wesley, and all Christendom repeats the salutation, but God commands us to salute as well the two unknown peasants without whom Methodism would not have had a John Wesley.—Rev. J. F. Carson.

Prussian Miners.

According to an interesting report published by Franke in the Prussian official mining organ there were in 1893 in the mines of the Dortmund district 206 lavatories and 167 colleries, with 232 shafts. In these washing facilities were afforded to 132,450 men, or 95.7 per cent of the entire mining population. The lavatories are quite close to the mouth of shaft or pit, the average distance being 100 feet. At several of the pits the lavatories can be reached without the men having to go out into the open air, and most of them are so arranged that the surrounding buildings afford protection against the weather. In 117 cases entirely separate buildings are used, and in 92 lavatories form the chief portion of the buildings, the other portions being used for lamps and for offices. The buildings are usually brick, roofed with wood, corrugated iron or roofing felt. The floors are of cement, asphalt, flags, plaster, bricks or wooden grids. In many cases the washing and dressing rooms are distinct. In 139 lavatories there are 365 baths, averaging one yard depth of water, and in 90 lavatories there are 2,526 shower baths, 10 of which are supplied with cold water and 2,516 with warm water. The water used is usually river or well water, mine water being used only when it is clean and good. The water is in most cases heated by steam. The lavatories are usually heated by steam pipes.

Reached the Bottom.

President Knight of the United Mine Workers of Indiana has prepared a statement in reply to one recently made by President Talley of the Operators' association, in which he said the cheaper mined coal of Illinois has been encroaching on the place heretofore held by the Indiana product in the Chicago market. Mr. Knight says:

"It is true that our men have not had steady work for years past, but so long as the miners in this country can produce as much coal in seven months as the country can consume in 12 it is useless for any state to expect steady work. The miners of Illinois were only able to secure work for 180 days last year, and that, too, in spite of the fact that they had no strikes nor labor troubles, and a reduction of wages here in order to secure a part of their work would only result in a corresponding reduction there, so that in a short time we would all be getting the same work as now, only at less wages.

"As the average earnings of Indiana miners last year were only $201, or not quite enough to pay board at rates that prevail in mining camps, we think that we have now reached the bottom and that we can go no lower and live."

"The Blue Degrees are but the outer court of the Temple. Part of the symbols are displayed there to the initiate, but he is intentionally misled by false interpretations. It is not intended that he shall understand them, but it is intended that he shall imagine that he does understand them. Their true explanation is reserved for the Princes of Masonry."—Albert Pike, Grand Commander of the Supreme Council, Sovereign Grand Inspectors-General, in "Morals and Dogma," page 819.

GEORGE WASHINGTON. Rev. Ezra Styles, D.D., in the "Philadelphian," July 23, 1830: "Hitherto I have neither advocated nor opposed Masonry, unless it be in the relation of a conversation between General Washington and Governor Jonathan Trumbull the second, which the latter more than once repeated to my father. The latter, when aid de camp to the former, asked him if he would advise him to become a Mason. General Washington replied, 'that Masonry was a benevolent institution, which might be employed for the best or worst of purposes; but that for the most part it was merely child's play, and that he could not give him any advice on the subject.'"

"I belonged to two secret societies, and have bumped against nearly all of them, and know what I am talking about. Their sociability and benevolence may be all well enough; but they belong to the world. . . . . I have about made up my mind that the whole thing is of the world, and the enemy of God and his church Brethren, why don't you say Amen? You know I am telling the truth; and I pray that you may have grace to receive it in love, as I have spoken it. As Christ's disciples we can make no compromise with the world The friendship of the world is enmity against God."—From Bible reading, by L. W. Munhall, evangelist, on Separation, given Feb. 25, 1890, at Somerville, Mass.

"God's Word prohibits the believer from forming alliances with the ungodly in society. Whenever the Christian surrenders himself to the society of the unbelieving world, his heart will be led away from God. This is especially true of thousands of Christian men who have deliberately yoked themselves up with unbelievers in all manner of secret societies. This course of false alliance is doing more mischief to individual Christian men by turning their hearts away from God and his service, and to the church by depleting and robbing her of her male membership, THAN ANY OTHER ONE ENEMY OF CHRIST. There never was a time when the cry, 'Come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord,' was more needed than now."—From Dr. George F. Pentecost's Bible Studies, 1889, p. 389.

"We have, then, the implied testimony of Freemasons themselves, that the Christian church ought to have no fellowship with Freemasonry as thus revealed, and that those who adhere intelligently and determinedly to such an institution have no right to be in the Christian church. God demands, and the world has a right to expect, that the church will take due action and bear a truthful testimony in respect to this institution. She cannot now innocently hold her peace. The light has come. Fidelity to God and to the souls of men require that the church, which is the light of the world, should speak out, and should take such action as will plainly reveal her views of the compatibility or incompatibility of Freemasonry with the Christian religion."—From Pres. Finney's book, "Character, Claims and Practical Workings of Freemasonry," pp. 260, 263.

"I do not see how any Christian, most of all a Christian minister, can go into these secret lodges with unbelievers. They say they can have more influence for good, but I say they can have more influence for good by staying out of them, and then reproving their evil deeds. Abraham had more influence for good in Sodom than Lot had. If twenty-five Christians go into a secret lodge with fifty who are not Christians, the fifty can vote anything they please, and the twenty-five will be partakers of their sins. They are unequally yoked with unbelievers. 'But, Mr. Moody,' some say, 'if you talk that way you will drive all the members of secret societies out of your meetings and out of your churches.' But what if I do? Better men will take their places. Give them the truth anyway, and if they would rather leave their churches than their lodges the sooner they get out of the churches the better. I would rather have ten members who were separated from the world than a thousand such members. Come out from the lodge. Better one with God than a thousand without him. We must walk with God, and if only one or two go with us it is all right."—Address by Dwight L. Moody in Farwell Hall, Chicago, 1876.

THE WAY IT LOOKS

TO MEN UP IN THE TWO GREAT POLITICAL TREES.

Final Figures and Statements by Hanna and Jones—Bryan Makes a Suggestion to His National Chairman — Republicans Figure on 311 Electoral Votes and Democrats Insist That They Will Have 252.

Chicago, Nov. 2.—The campaign in the middle western states for the most part came to an end Saturday night. In Chicago and Cook county, where the heat of the fight has been, the rounding up for the candidates was finished Saturday evening, and the last speeches were made. Both parties claim to be sure of the result, and express confidence that the count tomorrow night will show a large majority for their men. The only change that has been made in the estimates of either party is the concession of Chairman Jones that Illinois is a doubtful state, a concession that Campau does not make. Jones says that Bryan has at least 252 votes in the electoral college, and nothing can take them away. Hanna is far more sweeping in his estimates of McKinley's prospects, and says the Ohio man will not have less than 311 votes, and others may come later. Both issued last appeals to the people Saturday, and said they had victory already won, and all that remained was to clinch the matter in counting the votes.

Bryan Gives Jones a Suggestion.

Chairman Jones last night received the following dispatch from the Democratic leader: "I suggest that you urge all members of silver clubs throughout the United States to give the entire day Tuseday, if possible, to our cause. In states where the bolting Democrats have been allowed to use the party name it will be necessary for our people to warn voters against the deception, and at polling places they will be useful to meet the misrepresentations which may be circulated too late to be answered by our speakers or through the press. The gold syndicate and the trusts are fighting for existence, and we must be prepared to meet them at every point. W. J. BRYAN."

Hanna Issues a Final Appeal.

Republican National Chairman Hanna Saturday evening issued a final appeal to voters to unite in "rebuking at the poles Tuesday the dangerous principles enunciated by the Chicago platform" and register their answer to "the attempts to excite passion, prejudice and selfishness for the benefit of a few who are willing to destroy the national honor and endanger the national existence for personal ambition and individual profit." The appeal continues: "It is, as recently said by Major McKinley himself, a 'time when the voice of the partisan is hushed in the chorus of patriotism which sounds from one end of the country to the other.' Let every loyal citizen take this thought to the polls with him on election day, and the country will be saved from the danger which confronts it; and saved by that same loyal devotion which obliterated party lines in defense of the nation on an occasion of equal, but not greater peril."

Jones Calls for a Fair Ballot.

Democratic National Chairman Jones has issued a statement which begins: "The great struggle to right the wrong of 1873 has been won. The only work remaining to be done is to see that the people have an opportunity to vote as their consciences dictate, and that the votes be counted as cast." The statement urges all lovers of their country to watch the polling places, to see that the law is not violated, and says that the Democratic committee has offered a reward of $500 for the necessary evidence to convict any one guilty of attempting to bribe any voter; also $500 for evidence to convict any one attempting to coerce or intimidate any voter.

ESTIMATES OF THE STATE LEADERS.

Both Parties Are Claiming All the Electors in the Middle West.

The Associated Press has obtained estimates and claims from the state leaders of both parties all over the Union. They are widely at variance, even when it comes to figuring on the majority in New England states that are given up by the Democrats. The fight for Illinois that has been waged by both the leading political parties in the campaign that is just closing has been one of the hottest struggles ever known in American politics. At the close of the campaign Hanna and the state leaders declare themselves positive that the state will give McKinley 100,000 plurality; the "National" Democrats figure on 80,000 for McKinley; Chairman Jones says it is doubtful with the chances favoring Bryan, and J. D. Campau puts it in the Bryan colmun as safe.

In Ohio the Republicans claim the state by the largest plurality ever known except that of 1894. The Democrats claim that they have an even chance on Ohio and that the result will be even closer than at the last presidential election, with a probability on their advices of Bryan getting the electoral vote. That Indiana is in doubt is the opinion of those who try to look on the fight without prejudice. Still Chairman Gowdy, of the Republican committee, claims the state by 25,000, with ten congressmen out of thirteen. Chairman Martin, of the Democratic committee, says the Democrats will carry the state by from 25,000 to 40,000. "There is no way I can figure it," said he, "by which our majority will be less than 25,000. We shall certainly carry the state and will elect nine congressmen."

In Michigan the Republican state central committee has made three separate canvasses which they claim to have been very thorough. Their figures on the last canvass give them a 35,000 lead. The Democrats made no systematic canvass, but figured their majorities by estimates made from actual canvasses of certain scattered localities, and claim about the same majority. Chairman Curry, of the Iowa Democratic state committee, has issued a claim that the state will give Bryan 30,000 plurality. Chairman McMillan, of the Republican state committee, estimates that McKinley will have at least 75,000 plurality.

Regarding Wisconsin State Chairman Coe said that he was confident that the Republicans would carry the state by 60,000, and get ten representatives. State Chairman Peck claims the state for Bryan, but gives no figures. He also claims that three of the congressmen to be chosen will be Democratic. Chairman Rosing, of the Minnesota Democratic state committee, says that his party has the state absolutely certain for Bryan by at least 25,000. The Republican leaders, while expressing the most complete confidence in the results as being favorable to them, will give no figures, saying they are willing stand by those they have heretofore given—30,000 for McKinley.

In Missouri the Republicans hope to carry St. Louis by enough to wipe out the Democratic majority outside, while the Democrats claim the state by about 30,000. The Kansas campaign has been a hot one; both parties claim the state, the Republicans by 10,000 and the fusionists by 15,000 to 30,000. Nebraska the Republicans claim, and place 5,000 as the conservative minimum plurality. They think it will be from that to 15,000. The silver forces place Bryan's majority at 3,000. South Dakota is claimed by both sides with equal confidence. Colorado will doubtless give Bryan a very large majority, the Bryan men claim 120,000

North Dakota—Republicans claim the state by 5,000, Democrats by 3,000; Wyoming—Republicans looking for 1,500 plurality, Democrats for 3,500; Montana—Bryan men claim two-thirds of the vote, Republicans concede the state to Bryan; Idaho—Will go for Bryan certainly; Utah — Similar to Idaho; Oregon — Exciting campaign closes with the Republicans claiming 4,500 for McKinley and Populists 2,200 for Bryan; Washington—Both parties claim victory, Republican by 5,000 and Bryan men by 15,000 to 20,000.

Reno, Nev. 2.—Nevada will stand by the silver colors which she was the first to unfurl on the political field. It is generally conceded that the electors for Bryan and Sewall and the silver Democratic candidate for congress, F. G. Newlands, will be elected by an overwhelming majority.

STATES EAST AND SOUTH.

New York McKinley Men Claim $250,000 Majority for Their Man.

In the states east and south the claims are varied. Republicans say they will carry New York by 250,000, even claiming New York city by 50,000; Democrats claim 60,000 majority in the city and say this will carry the state for Bryan as the Republicans are going to be fooled in the farmer vote. Pennsylvania is claimed for McKinley by 200,000 to 300,000, while the Democrats hope to keep the plurality down below 100,000. Maine is expected to give 50,000, the Democrats only hoping to make it less.

Massachusetts is set down for over 150,000 plurality; Democrats give no figures. Vermont is booked for 35,000 for McKinley by the Republicans and the Democrats say nothing. The same can be said of Rhode Island—Democrats hope for nothing. New Jersey is claimed by the Republicans by 40,000 and by the Democrats by 7,000. In Connecticut the Democrats concede McKinley 8,000; Republicans claim 25,000. The Democratic managers concede New Hampshire to McKinley by 10,000; Republicans claim 20,000.

In the south, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Louisiana and Arkansas, are conceded to Bryan on all hands, the only question being one of pluralities. In West Virginia both parties are claiming the state, the Republicans by 12,000, the Democrats giving no figures. In Maryland the same state of affairs exists, except that the Democrats give figures—9,000 to 10,000. The Republicans claim 18,000. Kentucky is also claimed by both parties, the Republican figures being 15,000 to 20,000, and the Democratic 18,000.

Texas is claimed for fighting ground by the Republicans. A conservative view is that the combined anti-Bryan vote sure is 200,000, the Bryan vote 200,000, and the "vest pocket" vote 100,000. The Bryan managers claim a plurality of 150,000 over McKinley. Tennessee is claimed by both parties, the Democrats putting their plurality at 25,000 to 30,000, and the Republicans claiming 15,000. Democrats claim Virginia by 50,000 for Bryan and the Republicans, while claiming the state for McKinley, give no figures.

SAYS HE EXTERMINATED THE BAND.

Figh in Cuba in Which Fifty-two Rebels Were Buchered.

Havana, Nov. 2.—Lieutenant Colonel Fondeviela secured information that the insurgents had a camp in the neighborhood of Cogimar, near Guanabacoa, which is just opposite the city of Havana. He went in pursuit of the insurgents, but they were warned of the movements of the column. They encamped between Penalvar and Cambute and countermarched by Dona Felicia to the mountains of Guanabao. Lieutenant Colonel Fondeviela pursued and overtook the insurgents as they were passing the river Barucayabo.

He took the positions which they held at Bodega Sitio, in the mountains of Guanabao and put to the bayonet the last of them in their retreat. The loss of the insurgents was fifty-two killed, while on the Spanish side the column lost one captain and fourteen privates wounded.

Death of General Torrence.

Chicago, Nov. 2.—General Joseph T. Torrence died at 9 o'clock Saturday evening at his home, 88 Bellevue place. Though the general had been confined to his bed for a fortnight only he had not been well for many months. Since the middle of the summer his physician, Dr. R. D. MacAuthur, had realized his condition was serious. The ailment which caused the death of General Torrence was Bright's disease. The funeral will probably be held at 2 p. m. tomorrow at the house. The Rev. Thomas C. Hall, of the Fourth Presbyterian church, will officiate. Interment will be at Rosehill.

Lake Schooner Wrecked.

Two Harbors, Minn., Nov. 2.—The schooner S. P. Ely was totally wrecked on the breakwater here early Friday morning. Her crew, which took to the rigging, was finally rescued by the tug Ella G. Stone before the arrival of the life-saving crew from Duluth.

French Floods Enormously Destructive.

Paris, Nov. 2.—Telegrams received from the departments bring news of further floods and of an alarming rise in the rivers. Enormous damage to property has been done, but no fatality has yet been reported.

MRS. CLEVELAND'S HORSES SCARE.

President's Wife Keeps Cool and so Does the Coachman.

Washington, Oct. 29.—The horses attached to the president's Victoria, which contained Mrs. Cleveland and a friend, became frightened yesterday afternoon at the large iron derrick in front of the treasury building. The bay horse reared back, while the chestnut started forward and fell. The alertness of the footman, who jumped from the seat and quickly jerked the fallen animal to its feet, kept the other animal from treading on its fallen mate. As soon as the chestnut had regained its footing the team dashed around the corner into F street at a furious gait.

Coachman Beckett, who held the reins, retained his presence of mind and quickly checked the runaways before any serious damage happened. The occupants of the Victoria were the calmest people in the crowd. After letting the horses stand for a few moments Beckett whipped them up and proceeded down F street, the same as if the accident had never happened.

MEDALS FOR TWO UNION HEROES.

One a Chaplain Who Did Good Service Carrying a Musket.

Washington, Oct. 29.—A medal of honor has been awarded to Milton L. Kaney, late chaplain Fifty-fifth Illinois volunteers. At the battle of Atlanta, July 22, 1864, the chaplain voluntarily carried a musket in the ranks of his regiment and rendered heroic service in retaking the federal works which had been captured by the enemy.

A medal of honor has also been presented to Frederick W. Fout, late sergeant Fifteenth battery Indiana light artillery. In an action near Harper's Ferry, Va., Sept. 15, 1862, this officer voluntarily gathered the men of the battery together, remanned the guns which had been ordered abandoned by an officer, opened fire and kept it up until the enemy surrendered.

TWO KILLED AT A CROSSING.

Train Comes Along "Unobserved" and Does Some Deadly Work.

New York, Oct. 28.—Dr. W. W. Palmer and Miss Fanny Palmer, his granddaughter, 16 years of age, of Keansburg, N. J., were killed yesterday and William Hauran, of Atlantic City was probably fatally injured by a train of the Central railroad of New Jersey at Keansburg. Mr. Hauran had gone to Keansburg to visit the Palmers, and all three, with a daughter of Dr. Palmer, were in a carriage crossing the railway track, when a train that had been unobserved by them struck the vehicle, wrecking it.

Dr. and Miss Palmer were both killed instantly. Hauran can scarcely survive his injuries. Dr. Palmer's daughter was not seriously hurt.

Murder by a Boy of 13.

Red Bluff, Cal., Oct. 28. A report has been received from Battle Creek in this county that Santone U. Nurez, a Portuguese, was shot and instantly killed by his step-son, Jos Sosza, a boy about 12 or 13 years old. His mother is also implicated in the crime.

Fire at San Francisco.

San Francisco, Nov. 2.—The three-story brick building, occupied as a chocolate, coffee and spice factory by D. Ghirardelli & Sons, was destroyed by fire Friday. The fire started in the coffee roasting room. Loss, $75.000.

Program of Pennsylvania Convention on ninth page.

The loss of the schooner Waukesha and drowning of six of her crew, including the captain, off Muskegon, Mich., on the night of Nov. 7, was due to the drunkenness of the captain and several of the crew, and is one of the late object lessons on prohibition.

One of the most extraordinary and encouraging movements of our times is the crusade against Freemasonry, started at the Catholic Congress, at Trent, a few weeks ago. It is extraordinary in its methods, the leader of the crusade purposing to set out with a library and museum of Masonic books and symbols, proving that it is a survival of the Phallic worship and Diabolism. An agent is to come to the United States with this historical exhibition.

Many of our churches find themselves surrounded by conditions radically different from those which existed two or three generations ago. Immigration has introduced into our population strange and heterogeneous elements, ideas and customs. The shifting of populations and their congestion in cities is creating new problems and complicating old ones. The Sabbath is being more and more secularized. Popular unbelief denies to religion many of its historic sanctions, and the saloon, by becoming an organized power, has greatly strengthened many of the forces of evil.

The Scientific American says: "It is our observation that beer drinking in this country produces the very lowest kind of inebriety, closely allied to criminal insanity. The most dangerous class of ruffians in our large cities are beer drinkers. Intellectually a stupor amounting to almost paralysis arrests the reason, changing all the higher faculties into a mere animalism, selfish, sluggish, varied only with paroxysms of anger, senseless and brutal." A higher than the Scientific American has said: "But what they know naturally as brute beasts, in those things they corrupt themselves."

REV. J. L. BARLOW.

The above portrait is of one prominently connected with our reform since its first organization. He was born Oct. 27, 1818, and died Oct. 24, 1896. The following is the story of his life briefly told. At the early age of twenty-three he became editor of the Western New Yorker in Perry, Genesee Co., N. Y. Later he started the first paper printed in Deckertown, N. J., called The Sussex County Home Journal. In the early fifties he became associated with one John Dow as publisher of the Mirror of Temperance in Port Jervis, N. Y. He was familiar with many of the actors in the Morgan tragedy, and was till his death the most prominent and reliable witness to those important events. His series of articles published in the Cynosure last summer was most important testimony on the Morgan abduction and murder.

Rev. J. L. Barlow was ordained to the Gospel ministry in 1853, and was installed as pastor of the Baptist church at Seymour, Conn. His pastoral changes since that time have been as follows: At Montville, Mass., September, 1854; Greenfield, N. Y., January, 1856; Stillwater, N. Y., May, 1859; Lansingburgh, N. Y., December, 1860; Broadalbin, N. Y., March, 1863; Dundee, Ill., November, 1868; Bloomingdale, Ill., May, 1870; then back to Stillwater, N. Y., May, 1871. In 1874 he removed his family to Syracuse, N. Y., and entered the lecture field for the National Christian Association. For three years he did effective work for this cause from pulpit and platform, and through the press. In the spring of 1878 he settled as pastor at Ridgetown, Canada; next at Menomonee, Wis., in January, 1879; at Willimantic, Conn., April, 1881; Lima, Ind., August, 1884; Wheaton, Ill, May, 1885; Grundy Center, Ia., May, 1887; Bloomington, Wis., May, 1888; Richmond, Ill., May, 1891. His last pastorate was at Hagedorns Mills, N. Y. His step-daughter, Mrs. Simeon Rowley, of Bemus Heights, N. Y., at whose home he died, gives on our ninth page some additional facts respecting his life.

The Lodge Lamp matter remains in statu quo. The postoffice officials have taken no farther steps to forbid second-class rates to the Lodge Lamp, and our friends are sending in subscriptions, but not in as large numbers as we had hoped. Let any one who can, send in lists and pay for them himself. There is no law against paying for papers, and having them sent to your neighbors.

The greatest revival in Israel's history was in the time of Ezra and Nehemiah. But it did not come until Jeremiah, Daniel, Ezekiel and other good old reformers got in their work of warning the people. And even then it was not till after a period of awful national tribulation, when the nation was carried captive to Babylon, and Jerusalem destroyed. Have we not reason to fear that a great revival will not come to our American churches except through a pathway of fearful judgments?

A great spiritual quickening would dissipate doubt, would kindle enthusiasm, would open our eyes to the providential significance of changed conditions, would make us quick to discern the teachings of the Spirit concerning new social obligations, would subordinate all our activities to spiritual ends, would deliver us from the bondage of materialism, and, more closely uniting us in the bonds of Christian fellowship, would prepare us for that large co operation demanded by the magnitude of the redemptive work which awaits us, and make us and our churches "live more abundantly."

The published returns of the railways of Great Britain for 1895 contain much interesting information. They tell of 21,174 miles of railway open for traffic in the United Kingdom. In the last twenty years, however, about 4 500 miles of new line have been opened for traffic, and construction still goes on at the rate of about two hundred miles a year. Twenty-five billions of dollars is now invested in the British railways. The net receipts represent a return of three and eight-tenths per cent of the total paid-up capital. If it were possible to gather all the railway employes in the United States into one body they would make one of the greatest armies of the world. On June 30, 1895, as reported to the Inter-State Commerce Commission, the total number of railroad employes in this country was 785,034. The largest class in this number are the trackmen, numbering 209,853. Multiply the number of employes by four or five, and we would have something like the figures for the people who are directly supported from the railway interests of the United States.

THE DEVIL'S VISIT.

BY E. BRAKEMAN.

[Suggested by Anderson's "Two Moods."]

Weary and sad, at night's "low noon,"
When most one feels night's weird power,
I sat fit subject of its gloom,
And dreamed away the silent hour.

Low burned the fire in yawning grate,
And on the wall cast shadows dim,
Very alike my mental state,
Where faith and hope lay faint within.

The "mystic" babblers all had gone,
Who had that evening made my home
Unpleasant all the hours along,
Left me in reverie thus alone.

Why longer wage this useless strife?
Error and wrong will never die;
If gainful to them in this life,
To truth must we prefer a lie?

Plead we for justice, truth and right;
Our words to them seem idle tales.
Darkness they love, and hate the light;
Naught we can say for good avails.

Armored their souls with sordid greed,
Religion theirs, a mystic spell,
Half Christian, and half pagan creed,
To cheat, they hope, both heaven and hell.

Why should I feed this herd porcine,
Who never chew a cleanly cud,
Who tread beneath their feet unclean,
Jewels and husks alike in mud?

Who fail with dull distempered eyes
To see in truth a lovely mein,
Who happiest are when most unwise,
Their chains of lodgery, freedom deem.

Better let others sins alone,
And mend my own imperfect ways.
Have I not evils all my own,
To give me warfare all my days?

Have I my own ship sailed so clear
Of rocks, and shoals and wrecking lea,
That I teach others how to steer,
And make their voyage successful be.

On every coast, on every strand,
Wrecked Argosies dismantled lie;
Built the tempests to withstand,
And the wild waves to defy.

Companions of these stranded wrecks
How do I know mine may not be?
I am the veriest fool to vex
My soul how others sail the sea.

How much called truth in ages past,
By millions e'en who loved truth's way,
An Ignis Fatuus proved at last,
That led its trusting dupes astray.

Chased, lived, and for it fought and died,
—Deemed it would stand the eternal test,
—Thought all men wrong themselves beside,
Has vanished now at time's behest.

Of all the millions marching fast,
To where life's fevered dreams shall cease,
My fate like theirs shall be at last,
To slumber in forgetful peace.

The mocking centuries silent tread,
Shall measure off earth's destined years,
Blot out the names of all her dead,
And mine with theirs, my hopes and fears.

I am long past three score and ten,
My narrow-margined life why fill
With woes and wants of other men?
For self I'll live—my own sweet will!

This last my lips pronounced with voice,
I started up in angered fear.
Wretch, I cried, that's cowards choice;
Thought-making demons must be near.

Some hopeless devil—whispering liar,
Is luring me away from right.
I'll trim my lamp, rebuild my fire,
And chase the gloom and chill of night.

Chase these distempers from my soul,
Nor let the charms of selfish ease
My motives or my acts control,
Nor seek myself alone to please.

My youthful blood now cooled by age,
And judgment ripened, war can wage
With double skill, if arms divine
Are wielded by these hands of mine.

Were error dead, our work were done;
The conflict ended, battle won.
But when the war fierce rages, then,
Times call for brave and manly men.

Of motive pure, and steady nerve,
Who in the conflict faithful serve,
Who feel the grandeur of the fight,
And dare to do for God and right.

Of evil I've enough, 'tis true,
That mars the best my hands can do;
But blotted worse my work—not less,
By coward, idle selfishness.

Not the fair height of truth sublime,
At first attempt may mortals climb,
For if the altitude is gained,
Slow, toilsome effort must obtain.

With many a trip, and wounding fall,
And backward slip; yet after all,
Such spirits onward, upward go,
And creed-bound bigots leave below.

We follow where their feet have gone,
Who still new heights have venture on;
Whose courage and convictions are
Equal to all they do or dare.

Attempt to turn such brave men back?
Go thwart the sunrise from its track;
Or stars pluck from the vault of night,
But think not such strong souls to fright.

The man who pleads for truth and right,
Wages for God no needless fight,
Nor fails to leave, when lips are dumb,
Impress on ages yet to come.

That phase of truth I plainest see
Is God's own message—best for me,
One best I can to others give,
Failing in this, 'tis vain to live.

As cloudless sun of center day,
So shines one truth upon my way;
The "Secret Empire" is God's foe,
He bids me help to overthrow.

If faith and hope at times grow weak,
Strength from the Mighty One I'll seek,
Who gave my soul this strong desire
For this work—nobler, holier, higher.

Then hireling priests—those Gospel frauds,
Whose varnished lies the lodge applauds,
Who well-known truth dare not confess,
For fear of some "unpleasantness."

Go, whispering demon of the night;
Go, guileful angel-seeming sprite;
For lo, the day is dawning fast,
And let this visit be your last.

ARGUMENTS OF SECRETISTS.

BY REV. J. R. LATIMER.

It is amazing the arguments secretists advance to sustain their cause. "A drowning man catches at straws." Surely here is evidence of a drowning cause. We have a striking illustration of this in the arguments advanced to trouble that young brother, a student of Straight University, Louisiana.

Here is one: "The Lord Jesus Christ sanctioned secret societies when, in the garden, he left his disciples to watch while he held a secret meeting with the Father." If that is not grasping at straws in argument, it would be difficult to describe it. According to this, secret prayer would be a sanctioning of secret societies; and so of all the believer's personal communings with God. What nonsense, to call it by no severer name. There was absolutely nothing savoring of secretism in that event of Christ's life.

Let the reader examine all the references to it. Matt. 26: 36–45; Mark 14: 32–41; Luke 22: 39–46. Matthew and Mark tell us he was withdrawn from his disciples a little space. Luke is more exact, and tells us it was about a stone's cast. That would not be very far. It could hardly be called even secret prayer. If he spoke aloud, the disciples could have heard, if listening. It was a moonlight night; for the Passover took place at the time of full moon; and the disciples could, in all probability, see him, if they so desired. This was very different from the methods of secretists in meeting behind tyled doors and closely-curtained windows.

Here is another argument of the same kind. They say that "on the mount of transfiguration Christ held a secret meeting with Peter, James and John; and when they came down Christ charged them to tell no man, and thus obligated them to secrecy." There is a world-wide difference between secret society methods and what Christ did on that occasion. Christ did not first put the three disciples under oath with some horrid penalties "ever to conceal and never reveal" what they were about to see and hear, and make their taking of such obligation upon them a condition of enjoying the privileges to be enjoyed on the mount. Neither did he obligate them afterward to perpetual secrecy in regard to all they had seen and heard. This we know from the fact that after his ascension they gave publicity to it. Thus it will be seen that there is nothing in this incident for secretists to build on.

Their claim that a man who joins the Freemasons will never dare to divulge the secrets, even after he is expelled from the lodge, and that all the expositions of it are spurious and gotten up to make money, is very transparent. If these revelations and expositions are all a tissue of lies, why is it they raise such a howl from the craft? It is the truth that hurts. If I throw a stone toward some dogs on the street and immediately I hear a howl from one of the curs, I feel sure one has been hit.

So when this "exposition stone" is hurled at the lodge, and at once there is a howl set up from the craft, we know they are hit. Men don't go into a business that they know will bring upon them much persecution, as the anti-secrecy work does, to make money or even to get a living.

THE NEEDLE AND THE NORTH STAR.

BY REV AMOS JUDSON BAILEY.

"For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also," is the short way in which the Master states the case. The heart is the needle, and the treasures of the heart are the pole-star toward which it turns because it was made to do so.

Men who try to do right by rules to which their hearts do not respond, are like one lost in the woods and "turned around." As soon as they are left to themselves they will go in the wrong direction because the needle—the inclination—the heart points wrong. Trying to guide men by rules which do not apply to the case in hand, is like giving a bewildered man directions to go so far north, then turn west, then north, and so on. He does not know which way north is, or which way west is, and as soon as he leaves you he turns in the wrong direction.

All of this philosophizing has a practical side. Not long ago the writer was in company with a minister who was at the time a candidate for the pastorate of a vacant church. In speaking somewhat freely of his prospects of a call, and his hopes of success should he accept that pastorate, he said among other things, that he was an Oddfellow and a "high-up" Mason. It seemed to be his opinion that such affiliations would help him to "draw" in that town. The pastor who had just left that church was not a member of any secret order. He was not pronounced in opposition to secret societies, but he had no courage to work to get men into the church while they were in the lodge. Knowing these facts, it was interesting to listen to comments of the people on the "candidate," and their comparison of him with the retiring pastor.

One man, who announced himself as a Mason, said, "But that cuts no figure with me." His idea was, that for his pastor he wanted a man who could preach well, and who could persuade people to be Christians, and who could get people, not in the habit of attending church, to come to the services. Reflection: Men may want to use Masonry for selfish purposes themselves, or for social purposes, but they do not want their pastor to use it, because they do not want their church to be only what Masonry can make it. Even a vile man wants his own household pure; and if any man has any heart for the church or its services, he wants them pure services, and he wants a pure church. But if one loves the lodge, or is enthusiastic in politics, or is interested in some business project, he may become interested in a church as he is interested in a lodge, a chamber of commerce or a social or political club, if the church turns aside from church work to give his scheme a "helping hand," not otherwise.

Along this line we well remember the case of a town which had been struck by a "boom." It came about that one of the churches in the town started an enterprise which depended for its success on the "boom." In this way the church enterprise became a part of the "boom," and it was taken up by persons who had no interest in the church as a center of purity, or in its services as a means for the saving of the lost. But these men came into the church, and they "demanded" (of course only by suggesting what would interest them) that the services of the church be such as would harmonize with the "boom" methods of the business men of the town.

They were glad to go with the church as long as the church was going their way. And the church "turned around" by its enthusiasm for the success of its enterprise, followed easily and swiftly the methods suggested by "the best business men of the town." They thought that they were going right, but when the more spiritual members of the church were looking for the gates of heaven and saw only the gaudy arches of a Mardi gras parade, they were disappointed. Then they awoke to the fact that somewhere they had been "turned around." Those who had bewildered them were amazed at their disappointment, and said: "Why, we knew that you were not going toward the gates of heaven, but we thought that you had decided to come this way instead." Not that they used these words, but their conduct said this.

Not long ago a body of ministers, assembled to discuss questions of interest to the churches, decided that they ought to express themselves on the moral features of the political campaign, then at its height. They all protested that they ought not to commit themselves, as a body, in any politically partisan manner. But the resolutions which they adopted, when read by the public, made the same impression on the readers as the strictly partisan resolutions of political clubs. The hearts of these good brethren were so "turned around" that they thought that they were keeping clear of partisan politics. But every politician knew that they had gone bodily, and with all of the force of their "standing" as ministers, into the very front ranks of the political party forces. Their hearts were so set in that direction that they went into the party ranks in their very effort to keep out of them.

Further reflection: Men who trust to their membership in the lodges to help them in their church work, will generally find that men who have no heart in the church will not be drawn that way by a lodge preacher. Men who love the church, though members of the lodge, do not want the lodge brought into the church. They may want to use the lodge themselves for selfish purposes; and they know that the lodge can help nothing but selfishness. For this reason they do not feel that the lodge can be of any help to the church; or that lodge membership can help the preacher of the Gospel of Christ.

It is as foolish, to say nothing more, for a minister to suppose that lodge membership will help him to get men into the church, as to suppose that he can get them in by going into business, or by announcing himself as a circus clown. Men who go to church because the preacher goes to the lodge, may, like the coward in battle, be there, but they are not in it,—and no slang in the expression.

The man whose heart is in the lodge will not find his heart satisfied in the church. Men do not go to church to hear science, or politics, or business. But whatever they may desire as the chief aim of their lives, when they go to church it is because somewhere there is a soul-longing for something pure and good and Christlike. This longing the church can satisfy; and such a longing it ought to try to create. A man with a bewildered heart can never find his way out of the woods. If left alone men follow their hearts, and so it is essential that the "treasure" be in heaven, and that the heart be not bewildered. A pure heart and a right standard are essential to a true life.

THE MYSTERIES OF INIQUITY.

Somehow and some way, in the providence of God, sin exists. It marks the devil's tread; and wherever in all the universe the trail of that hideous monster is found, there abounds that terrible negative of righteousness—sin. We cannot understand its origin. Its study would envelop us in a shroud of mysteries. But nevertheless sin exists; and blessed be God, Jesus comes to eliminate it from our world.

It is human to be selfish. Selfishness intrenches itself securely behind the bar of secrecy, and the prime development of that iniquitous principle of secrecy is the lodge. What is the lodge? It is that congregation of fools who assemble behind tyled doors and screened windows to hide from the world their pernicious imaginations. Satan inspires them to congregate and rehearse the wild romances of heathen superstition.

Above the victim's head as he enters may be inscribed, "None but fools enter here." He is blindfolded before he goes in. This no true, honest man will endure. He next repeats oaths which might make devils tremble. His person is divested of clothing and exposed to the ridicule and jest of his fellow lodge members. His precious God-given time is spent in performing rites to his Worshipful Master and other supreme dignitaries. He repeats oaths too blasphemous to mention. He squanders his money in the support of an evil work of darkness. The apostle says, 'Every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus is come in the flesh is not of God." It is therefore of Satan, because it refuses to acknowledge his Son, Jesus Christ. But he says it is charitable. If after he is dead his wife gets five hundred dollars, which may not be half of what he has paid in, is that charity?

Finally, after having surveyed every aspect of the lodges, after having turned on the light of God's truth, the verdict proclaims them a system of iniquity and a mighty bulwark of Satan Why? It blights the reason, corrupts the heart, generates selfishness and strife, disgraces character and dishonors God. O Virtue, arise in thy might! O Saviour, come in thy strength and remove these poor blinded souls from this barricade of wickedness! Fly for thy life, oh, thou lodge member! Come forth and be saved before it is too late and your doom is sealed. Listen to the divine decree: "And now shall that wicked be revealed whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming. Even him whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power and signs, and lying wonders." 2 Thess 2: 8, 9

New Castle, Pa. GEO. H. MCCLELLAND.

BOBALINDA OWEN'S VIEWS.

Pray listen to the voice of the handmaid of Masonry. I am as sincerely attached to Masonry as Masons are to Religion. I have at least a hundred things to say in favor of the craft divine, and I am in such a hurry to say them that I don't know which to say—for the half will never be told.

1. Masonry is a good thing, because many a Mason has said so at least a thousand times. It is true some have said it is a bad thing, but that is not at all to the purpose. Almost all that have left the divine Institution are so narrow-hearted as to be peculiarly attached to the Christian religion, in preference to Mahometanism or Swedenborgianism. A great part of them are indeed PRIESTS, of all the different denominations. Poh! of Richard Rush. He has the very spirit of his father, Dr. Benjamin Rush of Philadelphia. Dr. Rush (let his friends say what they may) never was a liberal-minded man. He always was in favor of total abstinence from ardent spirits, and he had the audacity to call himself a Christocrat—which signified, Christ to govern. O, poor Richard Rush! Fie upon him! He is a Christocrat, too, I suppose, and so are all the other poor fools who have left us by thousands! Let them go; we can do without them. Poor bigoted fools!

2. Masonry is a good think. Anybody can see it that has half an eye. It takes young men in as soon as they come to the years of consummate foppery and shows them that Mahometanism and the mysteries of Pythagoras or Swedenborg are just as good as the mysteries of Moses or Christ. In the spirit of the language of our glorious Monitor, "It will tame the Priest and induce him to embrace the heaten worshipper of devils and the worshipper of Mahomet with as much cordiality as the worshipper of Christ."

Masonry has a fine influence on young men in learning them to swear. Although the Masonic obligations is not, strictly speaking, an oath, yet it has a singular tendency to produce that kind of firmness of soul which fools call hardness of heart.

Masonry keeps young men from squandering money. It takes from them all the money they have, and, of course, leaves them none to squander.

Masonry is a grand jury. It is sitting in secret to find a bill of indictment against the whole religious world; and it will, in due time, displace Christianity and bring in the doctrine of Zoroaster under the name of Swedenborgianism, and all the world shall be united and worship the Supreme Architect of the Universe, under the emblem of the sun. You may think me imprudent in making this full disclosure, but mark my words, this freedom which I now use will bring the liberal, commonly called skeptics, by thousands to our standard.

Masonry is a good thing, for it is a government within a government, and although Old Hickory condemned this with respect to the Indians, yet, I am confident, the same old hero himself would be in favor of it with respect to Masonry. What have we in the United States that is really powerful except Masonry? Nothing, absolutely nothing. Jesuitism is a tiny baby and Masonry a Sampson.—By a "Heroine of Jericho."

We certainly shall all agree that Masons ought not to be countenanced as preachers of the Gospel. Certainly it cannot be proper for a preacher, whose duty it is to keep back nothing, to unite himself to a society, the grand object of which is to conceal secrets of fearful import. When preachers are Masons the unavoidable consequence is to lead the young and unsuspecting into these secret recesses, where Jesus says: "I have said nothing." Supposing these preachers are not in the habit of attending the Lodges, does that help the matter? No, in no wise. They have merely retired and carried with them their diplomas or certificates of membership. Some ministers of the higher orders of Masonry have retired from the lodges and carried with them diplomas signed by officers of the lodge, who style themselves successors in office to the Holy Trinity. Do we wish to have men preach to us who pretend that the Holy Trinity has gone out of office? If men are Deists, let them have the magnanimity to say so, and not like Voltaire, act the infidel in the garb of the Christian. Let everyone fight under his own colors.

Free Masons are bound, by oaths of allegiance to another government, where they enjoy great honors and emoluments. Had they sworn allegiance to the British government, though the fact is not secret, we should not cloth them with civil power in the United States. As members of the Masonic commonwealth, they have the privilege, not only of being called worshipful, but of wearing crowns and sitting on thrones, and this ought in all conscience to be sufficient.

The success of the deep water scheme for Galveston, Texas, has been recently emphasized by the arrival at that port of the biggest ocean tramp steamer in the world. When this ship put to sea, Oct. 17th, she had in her hold 28 000 bushels of wheat, 18 000 bales of cotton, hundreds of tons of cotton-seed meal and cake, and a miscellaneous lot of ore, walnut logs and other cargo. It is a matter of great interest to Texas, and in fact the whole West and Southwest, that through the port at Galveston they may save hundreds of miles of railroad transportation in reaching the markets of the world.

The Lodge Lamp is suffering a Masonic attack, which is a compliment to the paper, that calls for every friend to rally to its aid and send in as many subscriptions as possible as once.

The postal officials, subservient to Masonic pressure, instituted an inquisition through the Secret Service Department of the Government upon our subscribers, and now threatens to withdraw from the paper the rights of second-class matter, on the ground that some did not pay their own money for their subscriptions. Let every freeman send in his subscription at once.

Masons who have taken only three degrees, and have not studied their system carefully, do not always know it as others who have not actually been Masons. They sometimes confess that they learn what they had not thought of before.

REFORM NEWS.

READY FOR THE PENNSYLVANIA CONVENTION.

THE LAST ANNOUNCEMENT.

OAKS, Pa., Nov. 3, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—This day has been largely spent in convention work. I send you herewith the program as arranged. It may be slightly modified. As you will see at once we have a strong program and with God's blessing are to have a strong convention. I have not put all on the program who would gladly address us. Experience has taught that conventions with crowded programs are not so helpful as those in which all who will may take part. There are a number who have promised five minute talks not on the program.

HOW TO REACH THE CONVENTION.

The Green Tree Brethren church, in which we gather, is but half a mile from the railroad stations on either the Reading or Pennsylvania R. R's. The station to which friends should come on the Pennsylvania R. R. is called Perkiomen; on the Reading, Oaks. These stations are on the Schuylkill Valley divisions of these R. R.s, 25 miles north of Philadelphia and 34 miles south of Reading. Trains leave the Broad St. station, Philadelphia, via Pennsylvania R. R., 10:19 A. M., 2:10 P. M. and 4:18 P. M. The main station, Reading, 6 A. M., 7:56 A. M., 10:15 A M., and 1:45 P. M. There are frequent trains on the Perkiomen branch. Carriages will be at the stations.

THE ENTERTAINMENT.

A committee has been appointed by the church to arrange for the free entertainment of friends coming from a distance. The plan is to provide tables near the church that we may get meals together as much as possible, and distribute us to the farmers for over night. To secure entertainment friends should write me at once, stating that they are planning to come. If a number are coming from your church or town, state the number that hope to come. Dont be bashful about writing. Friends here know there is a big meeting coming and are preparing for it.

MANY GOOD THINGS IN STORE.

I can't here tell you of the many good things we are to enjoy. A splendid program, plenty to eat, a chance to get acquainted and encourage one another, and above all the blessed divine presence, permeating, radiating and quickening us into united service in seeking the destruction of this giant evil in our land. Oh, how we should consecrate, pray and labor in these trying times! Shall we not make a special effort and all "come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty!"

SOME CANNOT COME.

There are some friends in the State who for financial or other reasons cannot meet with us; but all may help. All can pray. Many can write and pay. If you believe in the work being done by the National Christian Association can you do less than spend a little time, paper, ink and a two-cent stamp to cheer and help those of like mind in convention? Of what shall you write? Express sympathy; make suggestions. Tell how many lodges there are in your section, and how much you are contributing annually in seeking their overthrow. Don't say the convention will be a success anyway. I live in the country or a little town, and a letter from me will never be noticed. To be sure the convention will be a success, but you will not be a success if you don't help God's work what you can. The convention will be a greater success if you help make it such. The friends in Pennsylvania have taken hold of the work splendidly. The Cynosure list increases rapidly. What grand results can be achieved if everyone will do his or her part.

Of course we need money; that goes without saying. One lady gives $10 towards the expense of this convention; a brother writes that he will send $5; cannot you spare $1, more or less? All contributions will be turned over to the finance committee, and reported by them to the convention.

EXTEND THE NOTICE.

Programs will be printed and sent to those asking. Tell your pastor of this great gathering. Ask him to announce it from the pulpit and ask the church to appoint delegates. If you are a pastor write that you are coming, and tell of the delegates coming with you.

Remember, this is the last announcement of this convention to appear in the Cynosure.

Don't delay. All write at once. Address, W. B. Stoddard, Oaks, Montgomery, Co. Pa.

BRO. WILLIAMS' BUSY CAMPAIGN

IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

PORTLAND, Ore., Oct. 29, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—On Monday night, Oct. 19th, I spoke in the Free Methodist church in Los Angeles to a small audience. The pastor, Bro. Leonardson, was on hand to cheer your agent on in his good work, as was also Rev. W. W. Logan of the First United Presbyterian and Rev. Mr. Chambers of the Reformed Presbyterian church. These men are all true to God and their covenant vows. Bro. Todd and Bro. Hedges were also present. Bro. Todd said afterward, "When you come back again I will see that you have a central place to speak, and that you are thoroughly advertised."

Before time for speaking here I called at the home of a gentleman residing beside the church. He was a mechanic, and had been crippled while working on a building. He was lamenting to me about having to lose his time while so crippled. I saw he wore some lodge badge, and said: "I presume your lodge takes care of you while afflicted?" He answered: "Not much. In my lodge you have to die to win, and you pay pretty heavy for it at that." It gave me a good opportunity to preach my anti-secrecy principles to him. He agreed with everything, acknowledging that he believes the lodge to be a swindle, and said he would much prefer open insurance, but did not know of any such companies. I referred him to the "Fidelity and Casualty," and hope that I spoiled another man for the lodge.

The next night I spoke at Santa Ana in the Free Methodist church, Rev. Shepherd, pastor. Here we had a larger congregation, but not what it should have been. The crowds were wild on politics, and went to the halls to hear that subject discussed.

Since 1860, there has not been such an exciting campaign. Here I met once more my old friends, Rev. T. H. Orgon and wife, L. Warner and Deardorfs, formerly of Portland. The pastor after I was through speaking said: "I would give five dollars for the young men of Santa Ana to hear your address." I got acquainted here with Rev. Dearing of the M. E. church, who is one of the strongest opposers of the lodge I have met anywhere. He took the Cynosure a year, and we hope to hear from him in the future.

The next night I went back to Clearwater and spoke. The people were deeply convicted but would not start on a better life. The meeting was continued by Elder Tibbetts, and we hope for success.

On Thursday I started for home, arriving here on the 25th, early in the morning. Rev. J. F. Gilhorn preached in the forenoon, at our home church, and I preached at night; the pastor being away at the Kalama Quarterly Meeting. We had good congregations and very good interest. It is good to get home now and then. What will it be to get to our heavenly home where we shall "go out no more forever?"

Nov. 2.—When I arrived at home I found work awaiting me in no small amount. One special item of business is the Lodge Lamp. I want, under the circumstances presented in the Cynosure of this week, Oct. 29th, by the editor, Rev. W. I. Phillips, to raise on the Pacific Coast one thousand subscribers for the Lodge Lamp at ten cents a year. I hereby invite and urge all friends on the coast to assist me. Take subscriptions at ten cents a year. Have each one sign the paper and send all names and cash to me here at Portland, Ore.

In discussing the financial question the past week with a prominent politician, he introduced the lodge question by saying. "You may as well argue against all lodges because some of them have objectionable features." I said to him in reply, "Sir, that's just what I'm doing, and expect to do. I argue against all of them, believing them to be one of the greatest curses in the land." He turned to me at once and said, "I am not sure but you are right about that."

An evangelist here, of one of the most popular churches, said to his presiding elder that he found the lodges a great hindrance to his work at two or three places east of the mountains. The presiding elder immediately answered him, "Yes, we must oppose those institutions. It was quite a sacrifice for me to leave the Grand Army of the Republic, but I had to cut loose from it in order to consistently oppose secret societies, which are encroaching so upon the church."

So much, so good. This shows how the popular churches are beginning to feel in some places on the subject. I often think if we could only enlist all who are at heart opposed to secret societies, we could down them in a very short time, as we could many other prominent evils. The agitation is not in vain, but is accomplishing good, though the work may seem slow.

If a soul thou wouldst redeem,
And lead a lost one back to God,
Wouldst thou a guardian angel seem
To one who long in guilt hath trod?
Go kindly to him, take his hand
With gentlest words within thine own,
And by his side a brother stand,
Till all the demons there dethrone.

Sometimes it takes reproof and rebuke to "lead a lost one back to God." We must use every means to accomplish good. By the charm of a correct example, by our prayers and by our reproof of sin. A correct life among men is one of the greatest factors for good.

In an important engagement during the Mexican war, when our forces were being repulsed, an officer raised himself in his saddle, wheeled about and dashed into the enemy's lines, pausing just long enough to shout, "Men, follow me." His army wheeled on the enemy and gained a signal victory. Each lodgeman should adopt the language of that man, turn away from their evil doings, pausing just long enough to say to his fellow lodge man, "Follow me."

Gen. Phil. Sheridan rode bravely into the ranks of his fleeing troops, and they turned defeat into victory. This was by a good example.

But, in our great struggle for the right, we must not forget prayer. Prayer will arrest the sinner when all other agencies fail. We are all the captive of some Christian prayer if saved now. But we must reprove and rebuke sin. Not sentimentally, but with a heart burning with love and zeal for their salvation. Do not wait till you can fix up a fine story to tell, but go, brother, with love in your heart, and a deep desire to lead the sinner away from sin to Christ, and he can be won. For it is proverbial "there's a way to every heart if we can but find it."

One thing is doubly certain, we can never get men saved by deception. By making them believe they are pretty good when we know they are pretty bad, and if they do not repent they will be lost forever. "What thou doest, do quickly; the King's business requireth haste."

CORRESPONDENCE.

CARNAL ORDINANCES.

CLEAR LAKE, Iowa, Nov. 2, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have received a letter from a friend in which he represents the use of water in baptism, and the use of bread and wine in the Lord's Supper as "carnal ordinances" which ought not to be continued; dwelling emphatically on the baptism of the Spirit, and eating the flesh and drinking the blood of Christ by faith. I readily admit the "one baptism" of the Spirit, which is equivalent to regeneration, Eph. 4:5; but the baptism of the body is a figure of the baptism of the soul, even as the circumcision of the flesh was an image of the circumcision of the heart, Rom. 2:28, 29. "By one Spirit are we all baptized into one body," 1 Cor. 12:13. The Holy Spirit is the administrator, and the spirit or soul of the believer is the subject of the operation. I also cheerfully allow that believers eat the flesh and drink the blood of the Son of Man in the presence of outward ordinances or in the absence of them. John 6:53, 54.

But John says, "I indeed baptize you in water," Matt. 3:11. Does "water" not mean water here? Peter asks, "Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized?" Acts 10:47. Does "water" not mean water there? Three of the evangelists report that Jesus took bread and the cup, and gave them to the disciples, Matt. 26:26–

29; Mark 14:22–25; Luke 22:19, 20. Do "bread and the cup" not mean bread and the cup here? Paul records the fact and adds: "For as often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's till he come," 1 Cor. 11:23–29—not in the paschal feast at Jerusalem, but in the Lord's Supper at Corinth. Does Paul mean that the "bread and the cup" do not mean the bread and the cup there?

As to the continuance of Gospel ordinances, read the commission, "Go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them"— the disciples—"into the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, teaching them"—the disciples—"to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo, I am with you always even to the end of the age, Amen," Matt. 28:19, 20. On this passage I make the following remarks:

1. The commission was not given to the apostles exclusively. It includes pastors and teachers to the end of time.

2. Baptism administered by men proceeds on a profession of faith; baptism administered by the Holy Spirit proceeds on the reality of faith.

3. Baptism administered by men does not save the soul; the baptism of the Holy Spirit does.

4. The baptism of the Spirit is so far from superseding the necessity of water baptism, that it is made the ground and reason for it. "Can any man forbid water that these should not be baptized who have received the Holy Spirit as well as we?" Acts. 10:47.

5. The commission includes the Lord's Supper. It is one of the things which Christ commanded. As the passover commemorates Israel's deliverance from Egyptian bondage, so the Lord's Supper commemorates the redemption of the church from the bondage of sin and Satan, and is often to be repeated. The churches in the apostolic age broke bread every first day of the week, Acts 20:7, and the practice was continued for three hundred years, and has come down to our times in various religious denominations.

6. The "carnal ordinances" of the old dispensation have come to an end, Heb. 9:10, and Christians are forbidden to return to them, Gal. 4:9; but the ordinances of the Gospel will last while the dispensation lasts. My friend laments the divided state of the church, and so do I. But all the members of Christ's "one body," however much they may lose sight of each other, are joined to the head by an invisible and indissoluble bond, and not one of them shall be lost.

NEED FOR REFORM ORGANIZATIONS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 4, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Washington will be represented at the twenty-third annual convention of the National W. C. T. U., which will be held in St. Louis, November 13 to 18 inclusive, and much local interest is felt in the matters to come before the convention, especially in connection with the Armenians.

I saw a letter this week, from the editor of a church paper, which objected strongly to the young people's auxiliary societies which have become so numerous in the churches during the last few years. Instead of giving my own opinion on the subject I will quote a question and answer from a report of a secretary of a Y. branch of the W. C. T. U., read at a recent Model Union held in Foundry M. E. church. The question was: "I would like to ask if it is wise to try to organize the young women into W. C. T. Unions, while so many of them are so absorbed in church work and other young people's societies; will not the church absorb all their energies, and is not the church work enough?" The following is the answer: "We deem it eminently wise to organize for Y. W. C. T. U. work. The young people's societies in the churches do not furnish the education for young women along special lines so greatly needed as does the Y. Distinctively church work is not enough, nor should it absorb all the time and energy of our young people so long as there remains one open saloon or house of shame, nor so long as the cigarette and tobacco habits remain to curse our young men, and vile literature and vicious pictures are sent broadcast through our land to poison the youthful mind. The Y. W. C. T. U. is a needful society." Doubtless members of all the other societies could give answers equally as stong.

In accordance with their annual custom, last Sabbath, the nearest to October 31, the actual date of the nailing of Martin Luther's protest to the door of the church at Wittenberg, was observed in the Lutheran churches of Washington as Reformation Day. Several strikingly good sermons were preached, notably that of Dr. Domer, pastor of St. Paul's, which gave a historical synopsis of some of the difficulties Luther had to meet and to overcome in his efforts to preach and teach the reform which was so badly needed. As Dr. Domer truly said: "It is easy now for us to preach, to teach, to utter our convictions of truth. It was not so when Luther attacked the iniquities of the church and led the way into the freedom we now enjoy."

Rev. Dr. T. C. Easton delivered the first of a series of five sermons on "Scenes from the Life of Joseph," last Sabbath, in which he said: "The mother shapes the boys character. Her face the first sight, her arm the first refuge, her life the first example. But for Rachel and her training the history of Joseph and of the Jewish nation would have been entirely different. The hand that rocks the cradle rocks the world. The time for seed planting of true greatness is in the early years of a boy's life; this is the mother's opportunity." C A S.

CHRISTIANITY VS. ODD-FELLOWSHIP.

LARWILL, Ind., Oct. 22, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—When men first hear the high-sounding words and solemn Scripture quotations of Odd-fellowship they say, it is not as bad as some other secret orders. But it is far more deceptive in drawing, especially young men, into its net. Masonry is more or less shocking when a man is first initiated. The ungodliness of Odd-fellowship and the inconsistency of Christian men joining it is manifest to all who have given it any study. The Venerable Warden provides himself with a long gray beard, long gray wig, a long black robe tied closely about the neck and waist and reaching to his feet, everything being done to give him the appearance of a very old man. Then when his time comes he gives the candidate the following lecture:

Be serious, then, while I address you as a man. Listen to the voice of wisdom speaking from age and experience, and let it sink deep into your heart. These trembling limbs and this wrinkled brow betoken that the weight of years is upon me. I have indeed seen many years, and many solemn changes have passed before me. A wise man has said: "I have been young but now am old, yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken or his seed begging bread." I would impress this upon your mind, and add another maxim, which I pray you also heed and be wise It is this: that in the practice of friendship, love and truth will be found the best safeguard against the ills of life. Forget it not; forget it not.

The age of the one who acts the part of the old man is usually from 21 to 35 years. He may be the most profane man in the surrounding community. He may be a drunkard, saloon-keeper, gambler or a professor of Christianity. Worst of all he may be the minister, who in his last sermon in the village church so eloquently admonished the people to flee the wrath to come. He is now found in the secret chambers as the candidate to receive such Christian admonitions possibly from one of the above named characters acting the part of an old man, who has not the least idea of the goodness and mercy of God by experimental knowledge. Dear reader have you ever heard of anything more inconsistent for a Christian, than to be an actor in such a burlesque? The candidate is now conducted blindfolded to the chair of the Worthy Vice Grand, when the following charge is given:

"Stranger, having entered within these walls you are never to make known the secrets of this order, or make any discovery to any person or persons upon any pretense or for any purpose. Will you comply with these rules?"

Candidate answers, "I will."

How can a man, and especially a minister, tell the truth either to his wife, his parishioner, most intimate friend or any one else, when questioned concerning the secrets of the order, after binding himself as above?

1. He promises never to make known the secrets of the order, which according to the working of the clause means, that he will keep secret the secrets of all the degrees which follow the same as the one into which he is being initiated.

2. That he will not make any discovery to any person or persons, etc. Does not this include the wife, children or any one who perchance may be a member of the family? Should any of them ask questions concerning the secrets of the order, what can he tell them without breaking his obligation, which the majority value so highly? Probably they do tell them everything except the most needful, essential thing, the truth.

JOHN HELFRICH.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

REV. S. G. READING, PASTOR OF THE ERIE AVE BAPTIST CHURCH, WILLIAMSPORT, PENN.—I want to attend the Pennsylvania State Convention if possible. This city is lodge-cursed. Forty or more churches and the ministers are mostly in the lodges, and the rest are as silent as the grave in reference to them. The Swedish Lutheran minister is the only one beside myself that is known to be against the secret lodge. The whole lodge prejudice is arrayed against me and the work I am trying to do. They use the boycott against me in every way possible. I have been here between nine and ten years. I organized the church of which I am pastor in May, 1887. We have now 400 members and began with forty-two. The lodges do all in their power to keep people from attending our church, and the other pastors take advantage of the prejudice and preach to and flatter the lodgites. I firmly believe that the lodges are a great peril to our country and a mighty hindrance to the salvation of men. The Masons laid the corner-stone of a public school building here a few days ago.

REV. ELY E. MALMSTROM, MAPLETON, UTAH CO., UTAH.—If the facts concerning Joseph Smith were studied by all Christians, and carefully pointed out to all persons inclined to listen to the cunning, crafty arguments of the Mormon elders, I think then that very few persons would join the Mormon or Latter Day Saints church, and this would be the only and most effectual way to stop its growth. As great a fraud as Mormonism is, yet there are over 200,000 persons that believe that Joseph Smith was a true prophet. Smith truly made profession of great things; if his claims be true, then we are all condemned if we do not heed him. If he be a false prophet, and his claims only false pretences, then it is just as necessary to investigate his claims, so we can prove him false, and thus warn our fellowman.

Smith makes the great claim that he had been ordained to the Aaronic priesthood by John the Baptist. He says: "And also John the son of Zacharias, which Zacharias he visited and gave promise that he should have a son, and his name should be John, and he should be filled with the spirit of Elias, which John I have sent unto you, my servants, Joseph Smith, Jim and Oliver Cowdery, to ordain you unto this first priesthood which you have received, that you might be called and ordained, even as Aaron."

Please notice first the important point, that Smith in this instance means the same Elias as Luke does. Smith further says: "And also Elijah, unto whom I have committed the keys of the power of turning the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the hearts of the children to the fathers, that the whole earth may not be smitten with a curse." If the above quotations from "Doctrines and Covenants" show that Smith is trying to make out that Elias and Elijah are two distinct persons; nothing is further from the truth, and only proves Smith's ignorance; and he makes out that God and Elijah are just as ignorant as himself, because Elias is the Greek name—the New Testament was written in Greek. Elijah was the Hebrew name—the Old Testament was written in Hebrew.

BRO. LEADBETTER, AUBURNDALE, MASS. — I praised the Lord when I read that open letter from a seceded Mason to Hon. Wm. McKinley, published in the Christian Cynosure of Sept. 17th. Every syllable seemed inspired like the Lord's messages to the old prophets, telling us the Lord reigns to-day "as when Daniel knew the writing was signed." When the Lord chose a hero to write the doom of American slavery, he took Abraham Lincoln, a servant of the people, free from lodge shackles, and brought him in safety to the White House. While Beauregard's cannon opened on Fort Sumter and the black flag of war and desolation was raised, and when the Lord's hero signed the emancipation proclamation he knocked the shackles from four million slaves before the ink was dry on the parchment. Those years of blood were met by men raised up by the Lord for the occasion. Our President was wearied and worn, and a minion of despotism planned to enthrone slavery and crown himself by murdering Lincoln. But that minute his shot was fired, his own death agony commenced. The Lord splintered the bone of his leg across the corner of the platform, and he remained in suffering until the Lord snuffed out his candle with Boston Corbett's bullet in the old barn where he had taken shelter. "The Lord reigneth;" and though wicked men may appear to triumph, yet in the end the right will prevail.

WILLIAM E. DODGE, NEW YORK CITY. — The reformation of the eighteenth century which saved English Christianity from the paralysis of formalism began with special seasons of humiliation and prayer. The great missionary movement of this century is traced to a concert of prayer among the ministers of the United States, in which their British brethren afterward joined. A year ago the ministers of one of the denominations in England observed a quiet day with such happy results that this year it is proposed that the ministers of all free churches of Great Britain unite in the observance of such a day in common. Can we do bt that God has in waiting a great blessing for the churches, and through them for the world, provided we who are set to minister to them are endued with the power of more abundant life? Are not God's "way" and God's "saving health" the deepest needs of our times? Let us then join in the Psalmist's supplication: "God be merciful to us, and bless us; and cause his face to shine upon us; that (in order that) thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations."

———

M. N. BUTLER, ALBANY, MO.—Whitelaw Reid, who was candidate for Vice-president on the Republican ticket, is editor of the Tribune. At an editorial banquet in New York City he gave a public toast that was reported by the associate press and published from Maine to California, and from the northern lakes to the everglades of Florida. He said to those metropolitan editors there assembled:

"There is no such thing in America as an independent press, unless it is out in the country towns. You are all slaves; you know it and I know it. There is not one of you who dares express an honest opinion. If you express it, you know beforehand that it would never appear in print. I am paid for keeping honest opinion out of the paper I am connected with. Others of you are paid similar salaries for doing similar things. If I should allow honest opinion to be printed in one issue of my paper, like Othello, before twenty-four hours my occupation would be gone. The man who would be so foolish as to write honest opinions would be out on the streets hunting for another job. The business of the New York journalist is to distort the truth, to lie outright, to villify, to pervert, to fawn at the feet of Mammon and to sell his country and his race for his daily bread, or for what is about the same thing, his salary. You know this and I know it; and what foolery to be toasting an 'independent press.' We are the tools and vassals of rich men behind the scenes. We are jumping jacks; they pull the string and we dance. Our time, our talents, our lives, our possibilities are all the property of other men. We are intellectual prostitutes."

BRO. GEO. DUDLEY DODGE, HAMPTON FALLS, N. H.—When in the teens of this century my immigrant, maternal grandfather was told by his Baptist brethren in Boston, that as a preacher he had better discard both his frilled shirts and his ale drinking; he did so at once; though ten years later the Baptist preacher of this vicinity had toddy with his Sabbath dinner. But a church of that order organized here in 1828, embodied a prohibitory clause in its creed; and though its first annual report pictured it as "a rock washed by an ocean of rum," yet from that time headway began to be made against the drink evil or devils. An aged citizen is still living who claims to have been the first here to sign the pledge of total abstinence.

The old stage tavern where Webster once made a plea and Whittier ate his last meals, formed the scene of drunken carousals, now stands as a monument to the prohibitory principles of its owner, Miss Sarah Abby Gore, who after having put it in perfect order at large expense, has allowed it to stand idle for a year rather than swerve in the least from prohibitory terms. All honor to her at whose residence, next door, her friend, the poet, breathed his last.

Here Huzzy lived and Whittier died,
The first and last of noble race.
Beneath thy arms, O giant elm,
Outstretched to guard the hallowed place.

Here lived the sire of grand old Dow,
The Washington of sober Maine,
To whom all knights of temperance bow,
And strike for freedom in his name.

THE LODGE AND THE SALOON.

SEVENTH LETTER.

BLANCHARD, Iowa, Nov. 2, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—There is an old proverb which says, "When the guilty are set free the righteous must suffer." This proverb proved true in our case. The fact is that the man who will sell intoxicating drink to his fellow-man, under the dazzling light, which the closing years of this nineteenth century has brought to bear on the subject of intemperance, is capable of committing any crime, to accomplish his ends or to satiate his vengeance, when he can do so without too great danger to himself.

As the lodge system trains men in "deeds of darkness," and binds them together with false bands of honor to stand by each other, it affords the greatest opportunity that the world has ever seen for wrong doing with the hope not only of escaping justice, but also of being held in esteem in the community in which we live. And while there may be many men who have been enticed into the lodge, who would scorn to make use of this opportunity, yet it is a notorious fact that all lodgemen are not so virtuous, and the danger is, that even good men under trying circumstances will be tempted to use this power and opportunity to shield themselves; for Burns speaks the truth when he says:

"I'll no say men are villians a',
The real, harden'd, wicked,
Who hae nae check but human law
Are to a few restricted—
But, och! mankind are unco weak,
An' little to be trusted;
If self the wav'ring balance shake,
It's rarely right adjusted."

All lodgemen can testify that lodges are of no use whatever, but only a bill of expense, unless by their means we can secure something that is not to be obtained in the natural and God-ordained relations of the state, the home and the church. But as all things lawful can be obtained in these relations, and are within the reach of all in this land of liberty, the lodge can add nothing to our possessions except of things unlawful; hence it is vitally and eternally wrong.

No man ever joined the lodge to gain lawful ends, for these can always be better accomplished in the open light of day. As a rule it is selfishness,—purely selfishness—selfishness of the most intense kind that leads men into the lodge; and so long as they are under the control of this passion, they will use the lodge opportunity and power to accomplish every end that this tyrant of selfishness demands.

Any other man than a lodgeman, convicted of the crimes of which our druggist was connected, and fined to the last cent he was able to pay, would never have been able to enter suit against his fellowmen except on the most righteous and clearly evident cause; and no lawyer, but a lodgeman, would ever have pleaded a case for him that was the least doubtful.

But our druggist found ready tools in the lodge lawyers of Clarinda, our county seat. He secured the assistance of the prosecuting attorney, and the services of the great temperance, national reform, lodge lawyer, Senator Clark. Where they got their pay no one knows, unless the lodge footed the bill for the "moral good" of our town; or the brewers, who had lost their Blanchard trade, sunk a little of their profits for (the moral good) spite; or possibly the lawyers worked simply in hope of spoils; or possibly all three worked together forming a trinity of Satanic effort to avenge the accursed cause of intemperance; all that we know is that when we thought the battle was over, and hoped for righteousness, sobriety and peace, we found that suits had been entered at Clarinda in the name of our druggist against Sheriff Luther Johnson and Deputy Sheriff J. H. Walkinshaw, for criminal arrest and civil damages.

Just think of it! A criminal convicted on every count on which he was tried, and confessing to many others, suing the officers of the law for crime and damages! To my mind such a thing is impossible, except through criminal influence with the custodians of the law. Lawyer Clark seemed to be the main influence in pushing these suits. Be it known that this Clark was one of speakers at the soldier's reunion at Blanchard, in Sept. 1895, where he delivered one of the greatest temperance speeches that ever the community listened to, while at the same time and for six months before he had been exercising his splendid gifts and endowments in trying to bleed to death the good people of Blanchard in the interest of intemperance. HOW TO HELP THE ARMENIANS.

CHICAGO, Ill., Nov. 2, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I think the most feasible plan of caring for the Armenians is to find them homes in Christian families, who will receive them and bring them up until they are able to earn their own living. This would involve an expense of about $25 per year for each child. It should be stipulated that the children should attend a Christian school, and wherever the number of orphans in a place will warrant it, some faithful man or woman should be appointed as guardian to visit the children in their homes, and see to it that they are properly brought up.

In some cases, perhaps ten children could be placed in the care of a worthy widow. Some children could be received into our boarding schools if some provision could be made for the expense. Our schools are already so heavily burdened that we could not assume more without help. The cost per year would be about $40 for a boy or girl. This plan has this advantage, that a beginning can be made at once. Whenever the money is provided a boy or girl can be at once cared for, either in a family or in our schools.

After all this has been done, or may be done in these lines, it is certain that there will be at least 20 000 souls in a field who will need help to get through the coming winter. The provision hitherto made, for beds and clothing, is wholly inadequate, and there will be great suffering as winter comes on unless more help can be given for this.

Then, too, many can make no adequate provision of food for the winter. In the Charsandjak region the harvests are scanty, and it is estimated that by the time the people have paid their taxes little will be left for them. In all quarters the government is now pressing hard for taxes which have been suffered to remain in arrears until the time for harvests. Now the officials, who have received no salaries for months, collect the taxes with the greatest rigor, and do not scruple at any treatment of the people to extract money from them. A great part of the harvests will go to satisfy the claims of the government. Moreover, there are many who have no fields, to whom the harvests bring no relief.

This is the case with a large proportion of those who dwell in the cities of Malatia, Arabkir, Pala and Harpoot. Even now the cry for help for food from Arabkir is bitter, and growing increasingly urgent. It is difficult to forecast the future, but I think it will require at least $52,800 to provide food for the starving during the winter; and if the need of beds, clothing and shelter is to be met, very much more will be required.

Contributions for this purpose may be forwarded to the Armenian Relief Committee of Chicago, E. G Keith, president of the Metropolitan National Bank, treasurer. Applications for literature and information may be sent to 139 Madison St., Chicago, my address. D. A. RICHARDSON.

HOW TO BE HEALTHY.

Rules For the Woman Who Wants to Be Well.

Dr. F. Wincle, an eminent German professor, says:

No woman can be well unless she is abundantly nourished. She must have plenty of blood. To keep up a sufficient supply of this she must eat an abundance of nourishing food. She must drink plenty of milk and eat plentifully of eggs and meat. Fresh meat is es pecially essential.

She should exercise freely, and that exercise should be taken under the most healthful conditions possible. She should wear loose clothing at all timesr but, above all, when exercising. All he, exercise should be taken as far as practicable in the open air.

On rising in the morning let her take a plunge bath in cold water. I mean by that to plunge into the water and out again without remaining a minute or even a second under the surface. Many women will imagine that this will give them cold, but it will not if properly done. The whole point is to have reaction take place immediately. To secure this have the room in which the bath is taken heated to at least 85 degrees F. Then, when the fair bather emerges from the water, the warm air will strike the momentarily chilled surface of her body, and reaction will immediately take place. This should be still further promoted by vigorous rubbing with a Turkish towel and remaining for a few moments between warm blankets, etc. It matters not how cold the water, provided the entrance into it and the exit from it be as nearly instantaneous as possible. No cold can be taken where there is immediate reaction.

Having taken her plunge bath, she should next take her exercise. If the weather permits, she should don a loose robe, so that neither her movements nor her circulation shall be restricted, and, stepping into the open air, she should go through a regular set of calisthenic movements the importance of which can scarcely be overestimated. A judicious system of home gymnastics faithfully followed will correct round shoulders and flat chest and stooping gait. Show me a woman who has persistently and perseveringly taken 15 minutes' wise gymnastic exercise each morning and evening in the open air daily for a year, and I will show you a woman with an erect, noble bearing, a firm and graceful walk, a complexion whose bloom no resource of art can simulate, and a calm self possession that enables her to meet your gaze without any evidence of awkwardness, embarrassment or self consciousness.

How Acids Affect the Teeth.

All acid foods are very injurious to the teeth. If a tooth is put in cider, vinegar, lemon juice or tartaric acid, in a few hours the enamel will be completely destroyed so that it can be removed by the finger nail as if it were chalk. Most people have experienced what is commonly called teeth set on edge. The explanation is, the acid of the fruit that has been eaten has so far softened the enamel of the tooth that the least pressure is felt by the exceedingly small nerves which pervade the thin membrane which connects the enamel and the bony part of the teeth.

How to Renew Mirrors and Frames.

Boil some onions, barely covered with water, till quite soft. Pour off the water and wash the frames with it. Then cover them with a newspaper to keep the dust from them until they are quite dry. This makes them bright and clean and is a most inexpensive process. After having cleaned the frames the mirrors will want attention. To remove fly marks put some ball blue on a slightly damp cloth and rub the glass hard. This will efface the stain and brighten the glass. It can afterward be polished with newspaper. The ugly marks which appear on a dilapidated looking glass mean that the silvering at the back has worn off in places. To renew this take half an ounce of tin, 3 ounces of bismuth and half an ounce of lead, melt them together and when slightly cool add three ounces of mercury. With a hare's foot paint the back of the glass with this mixture.

How to ake an Excellent Polish.

For silve polish that may be kept on hand for use mix a few drops of ammonia with common whiting used for the silver and add enough water to make of the consistency of cream. Bottle this and keep it tightly corked. Drop a little of this mixture on the polishing cloth, rub the silver lightly and rinse in warm water, and the silver will be instantly brightened and cleaned without the hard rubbing necessary when polishing with the dry whiting.

For removing paint and putty marks from window glass this same mixture of ammonia and whiting may be used for stubborn cases or simply a little ammonia in warm soapsuds. If whiting is used, let it become nearly dry on the glass before polishing.

How to Make Icing That Will Not Crack.

The white of an egg and a cupful of powdered sugar beaten to a froth with 2 tablespoonfuls of cold water added makes an icing that will cut without cracking. Do not beat the egg until the sugar is added.

How to Make Cream Sherbet.

Take the juice of 4 lemons, an ounce of sugar and 3 quarts of water; beat to a froth the whites of 6 eggs and a pint of cream; sweeten with an ounce of sugar. When stiff, mix with the water and lemon juice and freeze. Oranges or oranges and lemons mixed may be used also.

HOW MINISTERS LOSE INFLUENCE.

A pastor who joined the Odd-fellow lodge that, as we are informed, his influence might be greater, did not have any meeting with his church on Monday night, of the week of prayer, but rode several miles to attend the installation of officers of the lodge in a neighboring town, though the night was severe, the thermometer registering several degrees below zero. He was unable to be present at the meetings for sometime after.

A church member once made the remark that he could get all the religion he wanted in the lodge, and probably he did not want much. How can pastors and church members belong to the Godless lodge? Can their influence for good be any greater? Do the pastors preach Christ any better or church members live any better lives by so doing? We fail to see any evidence of it. When they attend other places in preference to the prayer meeting, do they not plainly say that they consider them more important, and enjoy them better. Such people, indeed, have an influence, but it seems to be on the wrong side. When those who profess to follow Christ turn away from him, how can they invite others to come to him?

THE TRENT ANTI-MASONIC CONGRESS.

A GOOD RESULT OF THE MEETING.

The Chicago Tribune of Nov. 5 reports the following important and novel fruit of the recent Anti-masonic Congress at Trent in Europe. Such a museum exhibited throughout the world would be the most damaging exposure of Freemasonry, throwing more light upon the dark anti-Christian institution than anything heretofore devised:

"The Freemasons of America will be interested to learn that the Museum of Masonic Curiosities, collected for an expose at the Catholic congress at Trent, is to be kept together and travel the world for the enlightenment of those inside and outside Freemasonry. Apart from a copious library of books dealing with Masonry, there are documents which are produced to prove the contention of the congress orators that Freemasonry is an anti-religious sect.

"It will surprise most Freemasons to learn that the simple symbols used in their initial rites not only originated, their opponents aver, in Phallic worship, but commit them to a recognition of diabolism. The neophytes, the Anti-masons say, may be ignorant of the symbolic significance of the signs, but the masters know what it means. For instance, these adepts are said to be well aware that the triangle represents, not the holy Christian trinity, but the Indian trinity, wherein Satan as destroyer holds equal rank with God as creator.

"The museum contains some data to support the statements current in French and Italian papers that there exist some groups of persons with dishonest minds who are devil worshipers. Huysman's La Bas and En Route, Leo Taxil, and happily, a small school of French authors, are to blame for inciting and exciting these lunatics. Certain English papers which trace the origin of the new Satanic cult to Charleston, S. C., have been duped by the French authors, who invented the stories."

SECRET SOCIETY INSURANCE.

THEIR THREATENED FAILURE.

The Daily Inter Ocean of Nov. 7th says: "The following statement, which seems to have been prepared with great care, is from the Pittsburg Leader and is here reproduced, as it is of interest to a great variety of people:

"'From the reports of their meetings here and elsewhere, and the legal proceedings that have been instituted in several places throughout the country, it would seem that there is a great deal of discontent and disturbance among members of some fraternal insurance organizations, which has been growing by degrees and is manifesting itsell more emphatically every day. This is said to be because of a considerable number of them having increased their assessments, while it is alleged others are preparing to have laws enacted which will permit of such increase.

"'It is not the small and comparatively insignificant ephemeral concerns that are reported as most in the trouble, either, but strong and prosperous ones, with large memberships and an immense amount of insurance involved. There are two kinds of assessment insurance organizations. First, the fraternal societies, which combine insurance with other social features; and second, the regular assessment companies, which carry on an insurance business pure and simple, without any regard to fraternal relationship between the members. These do an enormous business, and, some allege, carry more insurance than all the regular companies combined.'"

WARNING AGAINST SECRET FRATERNITY INSURANCE.

The Pittsburgh and Chicago dailies are warning the people against the unscrupulous assessments of fraternal insurance societies. More than enough is published to shatter the people's faith in such organizations. The following is from the Daily Inter Ocean of Nov. 7:

"The Northwestern Masonic Aid Association, one of the largest and best-managed of the Masonic assessment companies in the world, with a membership of 45,000 and insurance in force of $129,000,000, was organized in the first place to insure Masons only, but, inasmuch as its membership went down from 58,290 to 45,703 members, they changed the name of the company and took persons not Masons, with the result of making a slight increase in business, which has since been lost.

"The Royal Arcanum, having a membership of nearly 175,000 members and insurance in force of $500,000,000, has had a committee to make a report on their method, which has been working upon it for five years. This company was organized in Boston in 1877. The committee has just reported three plans, one of which is to raise a reserve fund of at least $25,000,000, and which should be, say, $100,000,000, or even more, or else an alternative plan to raise the rates or scale the policies of persons over 60.

"The Modern Woodmen of America have raised their rates materially. This company has a membership of 158,000 and an insurance of $319,000,000. It was organized in 1884. The Knights of Honor held a meeting in Franklin Hall, Allegheny, Aug. 28 of this year to protest against the high assessments being made by the Supreme Lodge. Four hundred members were present, representing sixteen lodges, and the Supreme Lodge was represented by Grand Dictator Allison, of Allentown, and Attorney Harry C. Christy. The members claimed that their assessments had been raised from $1 per month formerly to $6 per month now. The Knights of Honor were for years the largest assessment society in the world. Although it has fallen off in membership 17,000 members in the last five years and lost $38,000,000 of insurance, it still has 115,212 members and $215,258,500 of insurance in force."

A STORY FOR THE BOYS.

The following narrative from Harper's Magazine of October, 1852, will be interesting and instructive reading for our young people:

About the end of the eighteenth century Downie was sacrist, or janitor, at Marischal College, Aberdeen, Scotland. One of his duties consisted in securing the gate by a certain hour, previous to which all the students had to assemble in the common hall, where a Latin prayer was delivered by the principal. Whether, in discharging this function, Downie was more rigid than his predecessor in office, or whether he became more strict in the performance of it at one time than another, cannot now be ascertained; but there can be no doubt that he closed the gate with austere punctuality, and that those who were not in the common hall within a minute of the prescribed time were shut out, and were afterward reprimanded and fined by the principal and professors.

The students became irritated at this strictness, and took every petty means of annoying the sacrist; he, in his turn, applied the screw at other points of academic routine, and a fierce war soon began to rage between the collegians and the humble functionary. Downie took care that in all his proceedings he kept within the strict letter of the law; but his opponents were not so careful, and the decisions of the rulers were uniformly against them, and in favor of Downie. Reprimands and fines having failed in producing due subordination, rustication, suspension, and even expulsion had to be put in force; and, in the end, law and order prevailed. But a secret and deadly grudge continued to be entertained against Downie, and various schemes of revenge were considered.

Downie, in common with teachers and students, was enjoying the leisure of the short New Year's vacation, when, as he was one evening seated with his family in his official residence at the college gate, a messenger informed him that a gentleman at a neighboring hotel wished to speak with him. Downie obeyed the summons, and was ushered from one room into another, till at length he found himself in a large apartment hung with black and lighted with a solitary candle. After waiting for some time in this strange place, about fifty figures, also dressed in black, and with black masks on their faces, presented themselves, arranged themselves as a court, and Downie, pale with terror, was given to understand that he was about to be put on trial.

A judge took his seat on the bench; a clerk and public prosecutor sat below; a jury was impanelled in front, and witnesses and spectators stood around. Downie, at first, set down the whole affair as a joke; but the proceedings were conducted with such persistent gravity that, in spite of himself, he began to believe in the genuine mission of the awful tribunal. The clerk read an indictment, charging him with conspiring against the liberties of the students; witnesses were examined in due form; the public prosecutor addressed the jury, and the judge summed up the case.

"Gentlemen," said Downie, "the joke has been carried far enough; it is getting late; my wife and family will be getting anxious about me. If I have been too strict with you in time past, I am sorry for it, and I assure you I will take more care in future."

"Gentlemen of the jury," said the judge, without paying the slightest attention to Downie's appeal, "consider your verdict, and if you wish to retire, do so."

The jury retired. During their absence the most profound silence was observed; and, except when renewing the solitary candle that burned beside the judge, there was not the slightest movement.

The jury returned, and recorded a verdict of "GUILTY."

The judge solemnly assumed a huge black cap, and addressed the prisoner: "Richard Downie, the jury have unanimously found you guilty of conspiring against the just liberty and immunities of the students of Marischal College. You have wantonly provoked and insulted those inoffensive lieges for some months, and your punishment will assuredly be condign. You must prepare for death. In fifteen minutes the sentence of the court will bo carried into effect."

The judge placed his watch on the bench. A block, an axe, and a bag of sawdust were brought into the center of the room. A figure more terrible than any that had yet appeared came forward and prepared to act the part of executioner.

It was now past midnight. There was no sound audible save the ominous ticking of the judge's watch. Downie became more alarmed. "For any sake, gentlemen," he said, "let me go home. I promise that you never again shall have cause for complaint."

"Richard Downie," replied the judge, "you are vainly wasting the few moments that are left you on earth. You are in the hands of those who must have your life. No human power can save you. Attempt to utter one cry, and you are seized, and your doom completed before you can utter another. Everyone here present has sworn a solemn oath never to reveal the proceedings of this night; they are known to none but ourselves, and when the object for which we have met is accomplished, we shall disperse unknown to any one. Prepare, then, for death. Other five minutes will be allowed, but no more."

The unfortunate man, in an agony of deadly terror, raved and cried for mercy, but no attention was given to his cries. His fevered, trembling lips then moved as if in silent prayer, for he felt that the brief space between him and eternity was but as a few more tickings of that ominous watch.

"Now!" exclaimed the judge.

Four persons stepped forward and siezed Downie, on whose features a cold, clammy sweat had burst forth. They bared his neck, and made him kneel before the block.

"Strike!" exclaimed the judge.

The executioner struck the axe on the floor; an assistant on the opposite side, at the same moment, lifted a wet towel and struck it across the neck of the prisoner. A loud laugh announced that the joke had at last come to an end.

But Downie responded not to the uproarious merriment. They laughed again, but still he moved not. They lifted him—and Downie was dead.

Fright had killed him as effectually as if a real headsman had severed his head trom his body.

It was a tragedy to all. The medical students tried to open a vein, but all was over; and the conspirators began to consider their own safety. They now swore an oath, in reality, among themselves, and then, carrying their disguises with them, left the body of Downie lying in the room.

One of them told the landlord that their entertainment was not yet quite over, and that they did not wish the individual left in the room to be disturbed. Thus they secured time to make their escape in safety.

Next morning the body was found. Judicial inquiry was instituted, but no satisfactory result could be reached. The corpse exhibited no marks of external or internal violence. The ill-will existing between Downie and the students was known. It was also known that the students had hired the apartment in the hotel for a theatrical representation, and that Downie had been summoned by them; but beyond this nothing was known. No noise had been heard, and no proof of murder could be adduced. Of two hundred students in the college, who could identify the guilty fifty? Besides, the students were scattered over the city, and the magistrates themselves had relatives among them. It was, therefore, not desirable to press the affair too closely. Downie's wife and family were provided for, and his slaughter remained a mystery for about fifteen years, when one of the students on his death-bed confessed the transaction and his participation in it.

REV. J. L. BARLOW.

The following account of the last years of Elder Barlow, is from the pen of his step-daughter, Mrs. Simeon Rowley, of Bemus Heights, N. Y.

"After my father's pastorate at Richmond, Ill., his health failing, he retired from the ministry and settled in Harvey, Ill. He was three times married, and three times called to part with the loved one. His third wife, Miss Sarah Ford, of Stillwater, died less than one year ago. Often, in looking over his life, he would say, 'Verily, mine has been a checkered career. I have honestly sought in it the glory of God; in his hands I leave my record.'

"After his last wife died, feeling his loneliness so much he longed to take up again the life of service to the Master he so loved. His prayer was, Lord let me do a little more work for thee, and when my work is done take me home. In answer to his prayer, God gave him another pastorate at Hagedorns Mills, where loving hearts gathered about him, and encouraged him on in his work. But the time was brief, a short six months, and he felt compelled to send word to his step-daughter that his health was failing, and to come for him as soon as possible. He was brought to her home the 8th of October, though feeble, yet with the prospect that much of life was before him still.

"On the 9th he had two severe paroxysms of pain, which weakened him greatly. During the following week he had several of these attacks, but rallied from them and was about the house as usual, only much weakened in strength. The night of the 17th the final attack came, from which he never recovered, and symptoms rapidly developed which warranted the doctor in pronouncing his trouble cancer of the stomach. He lingered for one week, suffering intense pain until the night of the 24th, when 'God gave his beloved sleep.'

"He leaves to mourn his loss, besides the step-daughter mentioned above, a daughter, Mrs. O. J. West, of Newton, Kansas, and one brother, Rev. F. N. Barlow, of Flanders, Mich. Also, very many precious souls who owe their spiritual birth, under God, to his faithful ministrations. He was the eldest of a family of five brothers, three of whom were ordained ministers, and the youngest, preparing for the same high and holy calling, when the loving, all wise Father called him home. He was laid to rest on the 78th anniversary of his birth, in the cemetery at Stillwater, on the banks of the beautiful Hudson river.

"Servant of God, well done!
Rest from thy loved employ.
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy!

"The pains of death are past,
Labor and sorrow cease,
And life's long warfare closed at last,
Now therefore rest in peace."

NEEDED LEGISLATION.

The local management of one of the largest insurance companies publishes in the Pittsburgh Leader what they believe is needed to guard secret fraternity insurers against the reckless and unjust assessments of such members from whom just now loud complaints are coming. This authority says:

"There is evident need of legislation that will confine assessment companies to a purely assessment business. They should be compelled to make it so plain in their policies that they are doing an assessment business that no one accepting a policy could possibly be deceived by it. This is required in consequence of the fact that many of these companies—in truth, nearly all of them—are issuing policies which are not materially different from those issued by level premium companies, while not required to maintain the reserve compelled of those companies. The agents of some of these companies are full of expedients for imposing upon too credulous people. And this is countenanced by the companies themselves. The aim is to make people believe that they are not assessment organizations, there being a natural timidity about entering into a contract the cost of which cannot be calculated, and which may have no limit.

"In a large number of cases, however, those who deal with assessment companies are taking such chances. If they were guilty of one-tenth of the fraud and misrepresentation in their dealings with them they would have no standing either in law or society. They are told they are not taking an assessment policy, that the payment of a fixed premium is all that will be required, and the policies are worded with such dexterous obscurity as make this appear to be the fact, and at the same time really provide for future assessments. Plenty of people, to their sorrow, have been caught in these traps, for traps they are, ingeniously and deliberately constructed. They catch the victim going or coming, and he must stay caught. It would be mere trifling and a misuse of the proper functions of the English language to speak of these dealings with less directness."

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Rev. Samuel F. Porter is now at Oberlin, O., and may winter there. His address is 187 W. Loraine St.

—Political parties are obliged to understand each other's platforms, and churches need to be conversant with the platform of the lodge.

—Editor M. A. Gault is absent several days this week at West Liberty, Ohio, where he was called to give several lectures on the secret lodge system.

—Bro. O. C. Findley, of Sheridan, Ind., writes in sending his renewal: "I cannot do without the Cynosure, and this is no time to desert the cause of Christ. Sheridan is lodge-ridden, having about twelve lodges. Its spirituality is low indeed. Yours till the Master says quit."

—Rev. J. R. Wylie, of Blanchard, Iowa, writes: "I am coming to the conclusion that the Cynosure is fighting the greatest battle of the age. If it were only the lodgemen we had to fight it would be a small matter. The indifference and cowardice of those outside of the lodge, and their fawning on lodgites, is sad to contemplate."

—"Facts and Photographs" is a booklet of some thirty pages, 5x8 inches. It has fine page portraits of Rev. A. J. Gordon, D. D., Rev. R. A. Torrey, Rev. W. G. Moorhead, Joseph Cook, Rev. B. Carradine, D. D., Rev. M. C. Ranseen, Howard Crosby, Frances E. Willard, John Quincy Adams, William H. Seward, Rev. Charles G. Finney and Pres. C. A. Blanchard. It contains the testimonies of men devout in piety, profound in scholarship and eminent in statecraft; also the testimonies of seceders from the lodge, as well as extracts from standard Masonic writers. Price postpaid only five cents.

AN IMPENDING CRISIS

WE ARE ON THE EVE OF A GREAT ECONOMIC REVOLUTION.

It Appears That the Seeds of Discontent With Unjust Conditions Have Taken Root—The "Silver Question" Is Trivial, but the Movement May Mean Much.

[Special Correspondence.]

I have just received a lengthy letter from an old coworker, who discusses the political situation as he sees it, and in addition to his ideas of the probable results of the election tells me frankly, as an old friend, what he believes the future has in store, especially for the workers. The writer of this letter has been for 25 years a firm and untiring champion of the cause of labor—a student as well as an active leader. He is also a painstaking statistician. The exercise of these qualities have, in my judgment, equipped him with the power to diagnose the economic condition of the people and to prophesy with reasonable certainty as to what the working classes may hope for in the future.

While the letter was not written for publication, I feel impelled to print a portion of it, trusting that my motives in so doing may not be misconstrued. I believe the workingmen of the country should know how the veteran workers and thinkers in the labor movement feel, and by withholding the name of my correspondent I protect him from notoriety, which he has not courted. I quote:

"We are living in a distinctly formative period, and nothing, in my judgment, can stop the impending crisis.

"Independent of the merits or demerits of the silver question, this is certainly one of the greatest campaigns you and I ever witnessed in the United States, and I am now fully convinced that we are standing on the eve of world-wide changes in our economic and industrial life. No matter whether Bryan is elected or not, we are approaching the rapids with a momentum that is startling. If Bryan is elected and the remonetization of silver is accomplished, we will perhaps find that it has not brought us all of the amelioration desired. But the spirit of the age, and particularly that of the silver movement, is not to go backward, to again adopt and wear the old clothes which we have discarded as the panacea. I imagine the word will be "Forward," and that new experiments will be tried.

"You and I have been sowing the seeds of a holy discontent for many years. We have told the workers that this earth and the fullness thereof is theirs. The signs of the times indicate that we have not sown in vain. Everywhere there is a quickening hope and thought for a better time. The line which divides the parasite from the producer is becoming more and more distinct, and as I observe the present disintegration, confusion and political acrimony my soul leaps with joy, because, no matter how dark and troublesome the times may be through which we are destined to pass, it is the precursor of a new birth, which, amid the darkness and storms, will herald in the new and better day.

"Whether you and I shall see it matters not. Our joy and thanksgiving should be in the consciousness of knowing that it is coming. It is because of this that I so ardently support the silver movement. I know there are some in our ranks who cavil about the silver question and say that it does not go far enough. They do not seem to realize that it is the movement and not the question which is cutting such a deep furrow. They forget that when the founders of the American republic, more than 100 years ago, began their colonial war against Great Britain they originally had no idea that the contest would lead to a severance from the mother country. They simply declared that taxation without representation was a tyranny and refused to submit any longer until this injustice was remedied. But, the contest begun, the logic of political events swept onward and ultimately dictated the Declaration of Independence, which severed the tie that bound the colonies to Great Britain and carved out of the western world the republic in which we live.

"Again, when the Republican party in 1860 nominated Abraham Lincoln and declared that the institution of slavery should not go beyond a certain geographical line, William Lloyd Garrison, Wendell Phillips and their colaborers did not take very kindly to a declaration which simply attempted to fence up and limit the iniquities of an institution that should have been boldly assailed as a matter of principle and its overthrow asked for unqualifiedly.

"But we know that the action of the Republican party at that time brought about the same political disintegration that is manfested today. It acted as a line of battle that separated the contestants. And when the civil war was precipitated, no thought on the part of the large mass of our people was entertained that the outcome of the war would be the overthrow of chattel slavery. Indeed, had such a proposition been broached by the officials of our government during the first year or so of the rebellion, thousands of Union soldiers would have abandoned the field and declined to risk their lives for the 'freeing of niggers.' But as the conflict continued the exigencies of the situation—yes, the logic of events—overpowered prejudice, and the emancipation of the negro was dictated as a military necessity. Is history to repeat itself?

"Who can tell but that today in this great country we are again standing on the eve of a political epoch the farreaching importance of which will transcend all of the political events of the past, and that the movement for the remonetization of silver, apparently so conservative and innocent, is but the precursor of a revolution in our economic and social life the magnitude of which is scarcely dreamed of by the most optimistic student of social problems?"

I have refrained during this campaign from writing for the labor press anything that could be construed as "political," and, as the people have been little interested in any other subject, that means that I have not written much during the past three months. I fully appreciate the fact that the evident partiality shown in the letter of my friend for one side in the present political controversy will expose me to the charge of insinuating "politics" into the labor press, but I ask all those who support the cause of the wageworker to wipe the dust of prejudice out of their eyes and look at the matter here presented as it bears upon the laborer without reference to any party or all parties. There is undoubtedly a crisis in our affairs. The future not only of the labor movement, but of the laborer himself, is in the balance, and the man who hesitates now to express his honest convictions, regardless of the side upon which he stands is not and never will be of much use in the struggle for the emancipation of the wage slave. Let us be open with each other, giving to all a fair hearing, and then making a decision—without dangerous delay—present a united front in the conflict which is on between the producers and their despoilers.

In this spirit, trying to serve this purpose to some slight degree, I ask a careful consideration of my friend's letter.

JOS. R. BUCHANAN.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Nov. 15. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—A good education. What it is and how to get it.—Prov. viii, 11; ix, 9, 10.

The word education is usually limited to the training of the mind. But it has a much broader meaning. It refers primarily to the training of a child not only mentally, but physically and spiritually as well. The man consists of a body, mind and a soul. He only has a good education who has all three trained and perfected. A physical education is a good thing. The proper use and care of the body are constantly emphasized in the Bible. The physical may be called the foundation of the mental and spiritual. An imperfect or weakened body very much interferes with the best action of a sound mind. This is an age when the care of the physical man is emphasized. It is a matter for congratulation that it is so. A good education includes the education of the mind. The Bible is not antagonistic to mental education, as many suppose. Joseph was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and Daniel in that of the Babylonians. Solomon was the wisest man of his day, and the wise men of the east were among the first to come and worship the Saviour. The opportunities that we have today for mental education are many. They should be embraced as far as possible. Every Christian young man and woman should strive for the highest education possible. Consecrated wisdom and knowledge make us able to do more for God and humanity.

But, of all, the education of the soul is the most important. True wisdom will not neglect the spiritual side of a man's character. True wisdom not only demands a developed body and a trained mind, but that the right principles of life should govern the body and mind in their actions. God and the future life must be taken into consideration in the education of the man as well as man himself and this life. Man is something more than body and brain. He is a responsible being. His actions are moral as well as physical and mental. No education of the body or mind will make up for the neglect or refusal to educate the soul.

How can the whole man be educated? There is only one rule in the educational world, but one royal road to learning, and that is study and practice. Knowledge is gained by learning, and wisdom by practicing constantly what we learn. Let us seek such an education, such wisdom. "For wisdom is better than rubies, and all things that may be desired are not to be compared to it."

Charity.

Charity is a word so common that to multitudes it has no distinct meaning. They assign it to a corner with the poor, but it is as broad as the disk of the sun. Charity moves alike toward the rich and the poor. That was a charitable act which interrupted Mr. Whitfield as he was lifting his hands to pray, when one cried out, "Prayers are desired for a young man who has suddenly become rich." Charity is manifest in the smile on a neighbor's face. Often there is more real charity shown in a kind look or word or in the diversion of a tried soul from a gust of temper than in the endowment of an orphan asylum. —Presbyterian.

Better Than Position and Wealth.

See here, young people. Not all can gain high position or great wealth or social influence or wide reputation. But all—all may have that which is better than position, and wealth and social influence and reputation—all may possess a pure heart and a clean life. An upright, unselfish life spent amid poverty and obscurity is a larger life than that lived by a king or queen who knows not God and righteousness.—Epworth Herald.

Improve Your Opportunities.

In our journey through this world we cannot afford to neglect any of the helps and resting places which our Father has so mercifully provided for our refreshment, and if we would really grow in grace we must see to it that we seize and improve our opportunities. —Episcopal Recorder.

A Distinction.

The distinction between a good preacher and a bad preacher has not changed much since Archbishop Whately declared that "a good preacher preached because he had something to say and a bad preacher because he had to say something."—Standard.

Jesus Ever Sees Us Safe.

In the Welsh Christian Endeavor convention one of the chairmen was Rev. John Williams of Cardiff, who taught the juniors present the meaning of the word Jesus. "J stands for Jesus; E, Ever; S, Sees; U, Us; S, Safe."

The Resting Time.

The glorious resting time will come after awhile, and oh, how sweet and refreshing God will make that rest for all those who have become real tired through doing hard work for Him!—Religious Telescope.

Christ Alone.

The heavens declare the glory of God, but when they have done that they have to stop. Christ alone can make known His love.—The Moravian.

Still Living and Loving.

The man who can see that Jesus Christ is the Son of God can see that He is still living and loving on this earth. —Ram's Horn.

Styles For Elderly Women.

Women are not elderly as early as they used to be, and some never seem to grow old, being up to the times all their life. From 60 to 70 is the time when women still wish to look well, yet dread dressing too youthfully. The appearance as well as the age should govern the elderly woman's apparel. Dark blue, gray, violet, lavender, deep green, black, clear and reddish purple are all suitable colors. A silvery haired woman looks charming in a house gown of the deep rich red called grenate. Lace ruffles of a creamy shade are becoming to withered hands, and a lace jabot at the throat is becoming. Pointed and ripple basques are worn, also the long jacket waists showing a full or flat vest. Large and small revers and epaulet effects are in order and crush collars of silk or ribbon. Elderly women do not wear belts or round waists, and their sleeves are of a moderate size. Their skirts are of the five yard width, interlined to a depth of ten inches all around, and of six to nine gores, a full figure taking the latter. As many matrons of this age are rather prominent in front it is well to fit the front gore with a few gathers in the belt. Elderly women should wear soft boned corsets or corset waists.—Emma M. Hooper in Ladies' Home Journal.

Woman In Germany.

The adoption in Germany of a general and common code of laws applicable to all parts of the empire has aroused the intense opposition of the women of that country to the new code because of its discriminating and oppressive features toward them. Up to this time each subdivision of the empire has had its own laws. Under the provisions of the new law an unmarried woman is regarded as almost equal to men concerning their earnings and their incomes. As soon as a German becomes a wife and mother she is booked as a minor. She has no right over her fortune. She cannot transact any business without the signature of her husband.

Then the new law defines the power of parents concerning the education of their children, placing it all in the father. It denies divorce on account of ill treatment, drunkenness and other offenses. The bill, which has passed the reichstag, does not become a law until 1900, and many women are agitating the question of its reconsideration and repeal before that time.

The New Embroidery.

It cannot be claimed that the poster or Beardsley style of embroidery is beautiful, but it is bright, showy and as yet a novelty confined to pillow or perhaps a hanging for a gay smoking room. Most any poster that you particularly admire will give you the colors and the forms to use. Cloth figures of broadcloth,—billiard cloth or ladies' cloth are cut from white, black, blue or red and applied to a background that will make a striking contrast. The figures are applied sometimes with a dash of red or of gold and traced artistically and in sweeping lines with rope silk or colored cottons. A magazine cover of deep yellow linen has a Mephistopheles figure of black velvet applied to it. A pillow with a sky blue background that covers the upper half has on the lower half the figure of a girl dressed in deep yellow. Above her bits of green cloth appliqued give a background of leaves. A pillow of bright yellow broadcloth in the same style has the figure of an old man cut from black cloth and white applied to it.—New York Post.

Women Horticulturists.

The first horticultural school for women in Germany was opened at Fridenau, near Berlin, in the autumn of 1894, and it will graduate its first class of seven members this fall. One of the graduates will then assume the position of teacher in a similar school recently established in Riga, in Livonia. On the 1st of October another institution of the kind was opened on the estate of Baroness Barth-Harmating, near Plauen, in Saxony. The courses of study extend over two or three years and include not only the various branches of horticulture, but also fundamental scientific instruction and such knowledge of business methods as is needed for the successful prosecution of commercial gardening. Emphasis is laid upon the fact that the new work thus made possible for women is suitable for those of the cultivated classes, and not for uneducated or semieducated rustics.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Clearing the Path.

Mrs. Josephine K. Henry of Versailles, Ky., says in a recent issue of The Free Thought Magazine: "While woman's struggle for liberty has been environed by more adverse conditions and more bitter foes than any contest for freedom in all history, yet no cause ever had so many unconscious allies. Every institution of learning that admits the sex; every one who employs a woman, thus helping her to independence; every invention that releases her from drudgery—all these are clearing a path to the ballot box for the women of the United States. Women's clubs, whatever their proclaimed objects, and whether women realize the fact or not, are merely political training schools fitting the sex for citizenship. When 12,000,000 American women come into possession of their political heritage, they will be the best prepared voters that ever entered the body politic of any nation."

A Two Horned Demon.

The demon of drink has two horns. One gores the individual and the other the state. To successfully prosecute the temperance warfare there must be an intelligent appreciation of this two-sided fact.—Voice.

A FIEND IN FRANCE.

BRANDY IS SAPPING THE LIFE OF THE NATION.

Men, Women and Children Are Victims of Alcoholism—Laboring Classes the Greatest Sufferers—Intemperance Has Reached an Appalling Magnitude.

A bill for the increased taxation of alcoholic drinks has been before the French parliament for over a year. In one of the debates in the chamber of deputies Dr. Sannelongue said as he summed up a long presentment of government statistics and medical facts concerning the injury to public health worked by the abuse of alcohol:

"In France alcoholism has really existed only for 50 years and in the world only for a century or two. Looking at the spectacle which alcoholism now presents to us everywhere, we have the right to ask what will become of humanity under such conditions."

Dr. Leon Labbe, after a long examination of the subject, said in the senate:

"I do not wish to use words for effect, but I am forced to acknowledge that this question concerns the very future of our nation."

The amount of alcohol taxed for human consumption in France has been tripled in ten years. Within 15 years the number of recognized liquor shops has increased by more than 100,000, bringing the total number close up to 500,000 for fewer than 40,000,000 of men, women and children.

From Saturday evening, when workmen are paid, until Monday evening (not morning) you cannot walk 100 yards in the workingmen's streets without meeting a drunken man. Monday is taken to wind up the debauch, when the week's wages have not been already spent. A case is cited of one workman who had lost the reckoning of time and staggered back to the factory on Monday. When told what day it was, he at once left work on principle. Monday evening is the noisy time. Little parties are to be met coming home from the resorts in the suburbs—father, mother, children and friends—staggering along together to the tune of some sentimental song shouted at the top of their voices. They have all been drinking the same liquor—brandy, at 6 or even 4 cents a glass when there is money enough; otherwise the cheaper potato spirits or poisonous bitters and other injurious drinks are used. These can be sold at almost any price, since they cost the seller only a cent for many glasses. They are cheap because they are made of the refuse "heads and tails" from the distilleries of industrial alcohol.

The hardest drinking is done by the iron workers and coal heavers. In a mill employing 150 men the manager knew only 5 whom he could send safely into the city. Even to these he did not dare intrust any distant commission, as without supervision they would leave their work for drink. In another establishment 15 men were relatively sober out of 200. None of the others could walk 50 yards along the street without stopping to drink at a liquor shop. One of them never went to his work or left it unless accompanied by his wife.

Dr. Tourdot, while at his detective work, saw 150 glasses of bitters sold in ten minutes in a saloon near one of the large factories. He took particular pains to observe the lower class of workmen along the wharfs. For this purpose he served in one of their resorts. At the zinc counter there are men in rags drinking. Around the door are women and children, with hungry faces, waiting for the little money that may escape the clutches of the liquor seller. These dock workers earn from 5 to 7 cents an hour. They scarcely pay more than 5 cents a day for food, and for 2 cents they can lodge at the Sniffling Flea or some similar inn. All the rest of their money goes for strong drink.

The coal heavers at the docks constitute a higher class of workmen. They earn from $2 to $3 a day and feed themselves well. They do not drink, so to speak, in working hours, contenting themselves with five or six cups of coffee during the day. With each cup they take 4 cents' worth of brandy (more than two "ponies"). But when night comes, they drink up all that is left of their pay except what the wife has managed to get from them. Often the wives grow tired of this existence and become worse drunkards than the men. After 35 years of age the muscular strength of the coal heaver is gone, and he becomes a common workman along the wharfs.

The unmarried working women are not commonly seen drunk, but they are nearly all the victims of a slow daily intoxication. This is also the case with the married women who go out to work. They leave home at 6 o'clock in the morning and return at 6 in the evening. The children are put in the public creche. The food of the women is bought already cooked. For their chief meal they will spend 5 cents for something to eat—bread, herrings, sausages, fried things—and 10 cents for coffee and brandy. In all the families coffee is drunk to excess and never without brandy. Young girls in the hospital, when the brandy is refused, prefer not to take the coffee. It is the pride of parents to make their young children "eat as we do" from their first year of life. This means coffee morning and noon, and, after they are 5 years old, coffee with brandy. One of the hospital physicians, Mr. Bernadotte, has made a list at the Tuesday consultations of the habitual coffee drinkers among 50 children from a few weeks to 7 years of age. Two began drinking before they were 1 month old, 4 when 3 months old, 2 when 5, 5 at 8, 1 at 10, 5 at 18, 19 and 20 months, 15 at 1 year and 19 when 3 years old.

The Devil In Solution.

When the Russian government took up the liquor monopoly recently in southern and southwestern Russia, it began by having all the liquor storehouses and the vessels in them blessed and sprinkled with holy water by the clergy in full canonicals. The extreme temperance people call this "the benediction of the devil in solution."—Chicago Record.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON VIII, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, NOV. 22.

Text of the Lesson, Prov. iii, 1-17—Memory Verses, 1-4—Golden Text, Prov. iii, 6—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

1. "My son, forget not My law; but let thine heart keep My commandments." Between the lesson on God's blessing upon Solomon and the going forth of his fame we have this one on the secret of all blessing and true honor. These words are for wisdom's children, those who are children of God by faith in Christ Jesus (John i, 12), for inasmuch as the law cannot give life only those who have life can keep the law (Gal. iii, 21, 22; Rom. x, 4; viii, 3, 4). Because in Christ we have life freely by His grace, therefore we love His law and keep His commandments.

2. "For length of days and long life and peace shall they add to thee." "He is our life and the length of our days" (Deut. xxx, 20). "He is our peace" (Eph. ii, 14). To receive Him is life (I John v, 12), but He came to give us more than life, even life abundantly (John x, 10). Many saved people miss much of heaven upon the earth (Deut. xi, 18-21) because they do not eat the word of God and lay it up in their hearts for constant meditation.

3. "Write them upon the table of thine heart." All the paths of the Lord are mercy and truth unto such as keep His covenant and His testimonies (Ps. xxx, 10). And every believer is expected to be a living witness to this fact, an epistle of Christ, written with the Spirit of the living God in fleshy tables of the heart (II Cor. iii, 3).

4. "So shalt thou find favor and good understanding in the sight of God and man." Not that all men will praise you or love you if you live a holy life, for not all loved our Lord, and the disciple must be content to be as his Master (John xv, 20). But the conscious blessing of the Lord will be yours, and the favor of all such as truly love the Lord. When it is manifest that the Lord is with us, there will be abundant blessing to many, as in the case of Joseph, David and Daniel.

5. "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart, and lean not unto thine own understanding." Since it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps (Jer. x, 23) and the heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked, is it any wonder that the Spirit has written, "Cursed be the man that trusteth in man and maketh flesh his arm. Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is?" (Jer. xvii, 5, 7, 9.) And again, "Commit thy way unto the Lord, trust also in Him, and He shall bring it to pass."

6. "In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy paths." This goes well with Phil. iv, 6, 7, where we are forbidden to be anxious about anything and commanded to be prayerful about everything. Guidance and blessing are assured to all who rely upon Him to direct and manage them and their affairs. See for further comfort Ps. xxxii, 8; II Chron. xvi, 9.

7, 8. "Be not wise in thine own eyes, fear the Lord and depart from evil." Here is the secret of soul health, and the health or sickness of the soul ofttimes wondrously affects the body. The fear of the Lord includes, at least, a fear to grieve Him and a humbling of self to walk with Him (Mic. vi, 8, margin), in complete subjection to Him and to His word.

9, 10. "Honor the Lord with thy substance and with the first fruits of all thine increase." Here is the secret of blessing in temporal things; barns and wine presses full. The same thing is strongly emphasized in Mal. iii, 10. He who in all things acknowledges God and with cheerfulness renders to God a becoming gratitude cannot but enjoy the blessing of God. The nine lepers who went to the priest did as they were commanded, they did their duty, but the grateful tenth received had an abundant blessing which the duty fellows missed. Let all Christians give at least a grateful tenth, and God will make His promises literally true.

11, 12. "My son, despise not the chastening of the Lord." Our Heavenly Father earnestly desires the highest happiness for all His children, but He is often hindered in doing for us what He would like to by our willfulness, therefore to fit us to receive His bounty He has to chasten us, to humble us, to make us see the folly of our ways, that we may yield to Him and His ways and be blessed indeed.

13. "Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding." Christ is the wisdom of God. He also is life, and also understanding (I Cor. i, 24; Prov. viii, 14, 35). Give heed to chapter iv, 5, 7, and take the comfort of Prov. iii, 24; iv, 12; vi, 22. Think of an unfailing friend and guide with us day and night to lead us, talk with us, keep us and guard us from stumbling. Compare Jude xxiv and Eph. iii, 20.

14. "For the merchandise of it is better than the merchandise of silver, and the gain thereof than fine gold." Silver and gold and all the gain of earth are only for the earth and pass away, but wisdom is eternal—it endureth forever. To increase in wisdom is a heavenly and eternal thing, and to make Him who is our wisdom known to others is the highest and wisest of all occupations.
